Mr. President, there are other treaties which we will act upon within the next day or two. I shall not enter upon an examination of them at this time. It has been said by many that at least two of them are merely magnificent gestures. The great powers assembled at the conference professed the greatest interest and devotion to the welfare of China. They professed a desire to maintain her territorial integrity and to recognize her political independence. A treaty will be presented to us which scarcely measures up to these high-sounding protestations and declarations. It in effect declares that China is not a nation and is incapable of governing herself or of providing her own revenues to meet governmental expenditures. A treaty was drawn which imposes upon China tariff duties.

It is tantamount to saying that the powers will not permit China to manage her own fiscal or internal affairs or to enact legislation for her own welfare and development.

Mr. President, in conclusion, let me say that some of the work of the conference can be indorsed by the American people. It promises some benefits, but its record is not without alloy, and the future alone can determine just what good has been wrought. I have been desirous of supporting the treaties prepared at the conference and have earnestly attempted to discover reasons to justify voting for the ratification of all of them. As indicated, I shall vote for the pending treaty, sincerely hoping that it may prove of benefit to the United States and to the world.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, most of the time occupied by Senators on the other side of the aisle in the debate upon this treaty has been an endeavor to show that the result of the Washington conference, after all, was a weak, puny infant, never destined to reach maturity, and really not of any particular value anyway; yet yesterday afternoon the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] occupied about 20 minutes in endeavoring to claim paternity for this puny infant for the Democratic Party, and this afternoon reference has been made to the attempt that has been made from time to time to contrast this treaty and the other treaties growing out of the Washington conference with the Versailles treaty.

Mr. President, it is true that there are some very sharp contrasts between these treaties and the Versailles treaty. One of the contrasts is in the fact that in the Versailles treaty Shantung was taken from China and given to Japan, while the Washington conference rectified that wrong and restored Shantung to China.

Mr. President, it is clear from the speeches which have been made on the other side of the aisle that the Democratic Party stands to-day upon the League of Nations and the treaty of Versailles as they stood two years ago; that if they had the votes to-day they would enter into the Versailles treaty and the League of Nations exactly as presented to the Senate by President Wilson. When they admit that, Mr. President, it is a little curious how they found it so difficult, and so many of them found it impossible, to support the four-power treaty, because they said they were afraid that some time we might be called upon under it to come to the aid of Japan against Russia, whereas if they had the power to-day to ratify the Versailles treaty they would bind the United States, in case this island of Sakhalin, about which they have talked so much, were invaded by the red army of Russia, not to go into a conference but to send American soldiers and American battleships across the Pacific Ocean to drive the Russians out of the island of Sakhalin.

Mr. President, we have heard much about the four-power treaty being an alliance and the troubles we would get into if we ratified it, even if there be no commitment to force, because, it has been repeatedly said upon the other side of the aisle, if we enter into an understanding with four nations it is sure to result in an alliance among nations not within the group. Yet, Mr. President, after all this talk about this four-power treaty being a quadruple alliance, we yesterday found the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], in discussing the question of land disarmament, complaining because the United States has not entered into a triple alliance with Great Britain and France against Germany.

If it was wrong for the United States, France, Japan, and Great Britain to enter into a friendly understanding to consult together with reference to disputes which may arise in the Pacific, if the very existence of that understanding would give rise in the future to an understanding between Germany, China, and Russia, I would like to ask Senators on the other side, if that be true, why they were willing to vote to ratify the Anglo-Franco-United States treaty, which committed the United States to war, which committed the United States to again send its soldiers across the Atlantic Ocean to fight against Germany? That is exactly what they proposed to do, and that is what the Senator from Montana insisted yesterday we ought to have done in this Washington conference; that we ought to have made such an agreement with France, in order to secure a limitation of her army, and that we ought now to enter into a triple agreement, not for consultation, not for conference, but that the United States ought to agree to go to war in Europe, join with Great Britain and join with France in fighting Germany in case there was any unprovoked aggression upon France by Germany in the future.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We did that in 1917.

Mr. LENROOT. We did that in 1917, yes; but we did not do it because Germany invaded France.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Such an agreement as that proposed by France would be a protection against us being obliged to do it again.

Mr. LENROOT. We did not do it because Germany invaded France, and the Senator from Montana was one who helped win the election in 1916 upon the promise that we would not get into the European war. Germany had invaded France then. Was the Senator from Montana, was the Democratic Party, in favor of going to the aid of France in 1914? Were they in favor of going to the aid of France in 1915? Were they in favor of going to the aid of France in 1916? If they were, why did they not say so to the people of America, in which case President Wilson would not have been elected to a second term?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Since that time the party of the Senator from Wisconsin, or many members of it, have taunted the Democratic Party because they did not go in as soon as the Lusitania was sunk, or as soon as Belgium was invaded, and I dare say the Senator from Wisconsin joined in that.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator thinks that is an answer, he is welcome to it.

The Senator from Montana, however, would have the United States enter into an agreement to do at any time in the future what his party thought in 1914, 1915, and 1916 the United States never should do. They complain about the quadruple treaty in the Pacific on the ground that it is an alliance, although there is no commitment to force; but if the Democratic Party had the votes to-day, they would have the United States enter into the Versailles treaty, with its commitment upon the part of the United States to send its soldiers to every part of the globe and fight in every quarrel of the world, although it might not affect us in the least. If they had the votes to-day, they would ratify the treaty making a triple alliance against Germany, a treaty entered into between Great Britain, France, and the United States, to send our boys across the Atlantic to fight, although the issue might not in the least concern the welfare of the United States.

That is the record, Mr. President, the Democratic Party is making in this debate. That is the record which will be read by the American people.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Wisconsin hurts his reputation by being inconsistent. I, for one, do not hold it against him. However, it is hard to understand how one who claims to have such a correct knowledge of international law as does the Senator from Wisconsin could assert that an alliance between four powers to consult together about the best means of waging war against some other nation with which one of these powers may be engaged in a controversy is the same thing as the League of Nations, which sought to bring into a common council all the nations of the earth, those with whom we may have had a controversy, as well as those with whom we entertained friendship, and there adjust any differences which might arise.

I am sure he fools himself; he has the power of intoxicating himself with his own reasoning, but he does not fool anyone but himself when he asserts that there is no difference between an alliance under which four powers bound by a treaty agree to consult as to the best means of resisting aggression and a conference among all the people to settle all international difficulties in a peaceable manner.

I shall not argue with a Senator who has that viewpoint; it is useless; a man who can not see a difference between an agreement among three or four men that they will stand together and resist any other man's assertion of right, and a community of law-abiding citizens, under which all of them agree to assert their rights under a common law which affects each one of them alike. Here are four nations which bind themselves that if a controversy shall arise between one of those nations and some other outside power the four will consult together in order to devise the best means of resisting aggression. The league provided all nations should have a common council, as all citizens of a country shall recognize a common law, and if a difference should arise they would consult together under the law as to the best means of adjusting the differences. That is the difference between the four-power pact and the League of Nations. One is an alliance for war; the other a pact for peace.

I would, if I could, follow the logic of the Senator from Wisconsin, but I feel that if I were to do so I should meet myself coming back. The Senator thinks it is a wonderful thing for four nations to get together to adjust their differences, but a horrible thing for all nations to agree to do so. If it is a good thing for four nations so to agree—and it may be—how much better would it be for all the nations so to agree that they will adjust peaceably all their differences? Law grew up by groups of people asserting a common right. Nobody contends that the old feudal times, when one lord defended his clan against another, were better than our times, when all of us who are citizens of a common country recognize a common sovereignty and obey a common law. Yet the comparison is made here of all the people of the world who say they want to inaugurate a reign of law as against a reign of individual selfishness, and four nations which bind themselves together to respect each other's rights. Here are four nations which have bound themselves together to respect each other's rights, and it is said it augurs well for peace. How can Senators say that if the agreement of four nations to consult together in order to keep the peace is a wise thing, an understanding among all the nations of the earth to consult together is a bad thing? I have no power of following that kind of logic. The Senator from Wisconsin may have that field to himself.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McNary	Smoot
Ball	France	Moses	Spencer
Borah	Frelinghuysen	Myers	Stanfield
Broussard	Gerry	Nelson	Sterling
Bursum	Glass	New	Sutherland
Calder	Gooding	Oddie	Swanson
Cameron	Hale	Overman	Townsend
Capper	Harris	Owen	Trammell
Colt	Hitchcock	Pepper	Wadsworth
Culberson	Johnson	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	King	Poindexter	Warren
Dial	La Follette	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	Lenroot	Rawson	Watson, Ind.
Edge	Lodge	Sheppard	Weller
Elkins	McCormick	Shields	Williams
Ernst	McCumber	Shortridge	Willis
Fernald	McLean	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will proceed to vote on the treaty. The treaty is in Committee of the Whole and the question is on agreeing to chapter 2. Without objection, it is agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. The further reading of those chapters has been dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to chapter 3. Without objection, it is agreed to. If there are no amendments to be proposed to the treaty as in Committee of the Whole, it will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty is in the Senate and open to amendment. If there are no amendments, and without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the resolution of ratification, which the Secretary will report.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive L, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, a treaty between the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, agreeing to a limitation of naval armament, concluded at Washington February 6, 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution of ratification, and the question will be taken by yeas and nays.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. BRANDEGEE's name was called). The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is detained from the Senate. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. If present he would vote as I am about to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I am reliably informed that on this question he would vote as I shall vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BROUSSARD (when Mr. RANSDELL's name was called). My colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] is absent on business of the Senate. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CARAWAY (when Mr. ROBINSON's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] is unavoidably absent on official business. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who is absent. If he were present he would vote as I shall vote, and I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DIAL (when Mr. SMITH's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on official business of the Senate. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I am informed that that Senator, if present, would vote as I intend to vote, and I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who is absent. I understand, however, that he would vote as I expect to vote upon this measure, and therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. My colleague [Mr. DU PONT] is absent on account of illness. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCCORMICK. I have a standing pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. I am informed that if he were present that Senator would vote as I shall vote, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I am informed that if present he would vote as I voted. Therefore I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] are absent on the business of the Senate. If present these Senators would vote "yea."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are absent on official business. If present they would all vote "yea."

The roll call resulted—yeas 74, nays 1.

YEAS—74.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative, the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. STANLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I was temporarily absent from the Chamber when the roll was called on the naval limitation treaty. If present, I would have voted "yea."

NOMINATIONS REPORTED.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as in closed executive session, to report favorably from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys certain nominations and ask that they may go to the calendar; also a similar favorable report from the Committee on Naval Affairs certain appointments, and I ask that they may go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES BY DISABLED EX-SOLDIERS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I present a conference report on House bill 9633. It is a complete report, and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The report was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9633) to extend the provisions of section 2305, Revised Statutes, and of the act of September 29, 1919, to those discharged from the military or naval service of the United States and subsequently awarded compensation or treated for wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

REED SMOOT,
T. J. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
JOHN E. RAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

ADDRESS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT IN BROOKLYN.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in Brooklyn last Sunday, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute, Vice President Coolidge delivered a most comprehensive address on the subject of "A year of reconstruction." I ask unanimous consent that this address be printed in the RECORD in the regular RECORD type.

There being no objection, the Vice President's address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

A YEAR OF RECONSTRUCTION.

At the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, Brooklyn, N. Y., at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, March 26, 1922, Vice President Calvin Coolidge spoke as follows:

The fundamental ideal of mankind is the attainment of liberty. This motive has been predominant through all the centuries. The course which it follows depends on environment. Institutions grow up to fit conditions. Failing that they disappear. The institution which developed national liberty was monarchy. The institution which maintains individual liberty is the Republic.

Parliamentary government is not peculiar to any time or place. The germ of it has scarcely ever failed to appear in the development of any people. Wherever it has been able to grow to maturity into a true form of representative Government its nature has been determined by the predominance of contending forces. There is no such thing as a free man in a subject State. There were parliaments in Spain and France which developed earlier than that of Great Britain. No doubt the largest contributing factor to their decline and final disuse was the menace of foreign conquest. For purposes of national defense a commander in chief surpasses a legislative body. A constant pressure from without upon the countries of the European Continent made it necessary to submerge the freedom of the individual to insure the freedom of the realm. The grant of authority to raise money to support the army in time of war was carried over by the monarch into a claim of the right to support the government by the same taxes in time of peace. At the outbreak of the French Revolution the states general, which in theory alone possessed the taxing power, had not been summoned for 175 years.

Across the English Channel there was more seclusion. England was free from foreign invasion after the days of William the Conqueror. A sturdy people found an almost invincible ally of national defense in their surrounding waters. There the predominant force against the development of freedom came from within. Relieved of pressure from without, individual liberty was able to prevail. In the long contest culminating with the Stuarts, who even sought to preserve the claim of the monarchy by the device of foreign wars, the power of the King has been steadily limited, the power of Parliament steadily enlarged, until it stands to-day practically supreme. The power which it holds over the individual has scarcely any limit save in the temper of the people. The supports of stability were strengthened by an upper house, heriditary in its foundation, but continually refreshed with new memberships drawn from the people. By this means vested interests and popular rights are both protected. But when party control of the House of Commons changes, the whole Government changes with it. The dominant power in the Commons is the dominant power in the whole Empire.

The working out of these principles has been apparent in American history. The early colonists were strongly individual in theory, but public peril contributed largely to making them national in practice. When General Wolfe won victory on the Plains of Abraham, the colonists, relieved of the menace of an alien invasion, were ever after unhampered from without in the natural desire for greater liberty. They soon found that so long as they remained with the British Empire they were subject to the claims of supreme authority on the part of a Parliament then dominated by the influences of a king ambitious to grasp the entire sovereign power. That problem was solved by the American Revolution, which took from the territory of the British Empire but added to the freedom of all British subjects.

Creative action grows into institutions. The experience of the Revolutionary period was gathered up, declared, and adopted in the American Constitution. That instrument of government recognizes that sovereign power resides in the people alone. It was created to guarantee individual liberty. It intrusted the supreme authority of government to neither executive nor legislature. It provided a republic to be administered by representatives of the people. As a further guaranty of freedom its powers are limited and its functions divided and separated. There are three departments: Legislative, executive, and judicial, independent of each other, with power to function only in their own sphere, but each acting as a check on the other. The sovereignty of the people does not, therefore, express itself with that completeness in the legislative body which is the characteristic of the British Parliament, but is divided between the Congress, the President, and the Supreme Court of the United States. To impose any burden on the people these three great powers must act in substantial harmony, but acting alone any one of them can save the people from any diminution of their liberties.

It is thus that under our institutions there are more full and complete guaranties of the rights of the people than under any other Government in the world. That was very nearly the sole consideration moving those who organized the American system. Thought of national peril sinking to the minimum, thought of individual peril rose to the maximum. How closely these have always been connected is shown not only by the course of history but by the curious coincidence that just after Lincoln had come into power, to check the rising tide of domestic claims and counterclaims, Secretary Seward suggested smothering them all in foreign complications and wars. The great service of Lincoln is that he preserved national integrity and advanced individual liberty.

Another safeguard arises from our having a continuing Government. The entire membership of the House of Representatives, but only one-third of the membership of the Senate, is renewed each two years; the Presidency is renewed each four years; and the Supreme Court is renewed irregularly, as its members hold by life tenure. As must always be done, speed is sacrificed for safety. We have adopted the party method of political expression. It is easy to see that the two Houses may be dominated by different parties and that the President and the Congress may be of a different political faith. A government chosen piecemeal means that any one election may be inconclusive.

One of the most remarkable examples of such an election took place in 1918. It is almost axiomatic that a Government successful in the conduct of a war will be successful in securing the indorsement of the people. From the middle of July, when the Americans, advancing through the retreating lines of the war-worn French, for the second time beat back the German invasion at the Marne, there was a steady succession of victorious advances ending in the complete triumph of armistice day.

Six days before this greatest military triumph ever recorded, notwithstanding a personal appeal to the people soliciting their support for his party made by the Commander in Chief himself, the American national election brought the almost unbelievable result of a defeat at the polls of the party under which the war had been conducted, taking from it the control of both Houses of Congress. After the fourth day of the following March the President and the Congress were of different parties.

Under some circumstances this might have made little difference in the work of reconstruction. Under the dominating personalities then in control at either end of Pennsylvania Avenue it was destined to make a great deal of difference. Our own completion of reconstruction at home and our inescapable participation in reconstruction abroad were hindered and delayed. A treaty of peace was negotiated by the President and submitted to the Senate in the summer of 1919, where it was debated for many months and rejected. The Congress enacted some remedial legislation which was approved and some which was vetoed. There was an entire lack of harmony and cooperation between the executive and legislative branches of the Government, aggravated by the severe illness of the President, which made him almost inaccessible. Demobilization of military forces was very largely accomplished and necessary legislation provided for the return of the immense properties of transportation and telephone and telegraph lines to their former private ownership, but with enlarged Government regulation. The Congress started a system of relief for the disabled and of vocational training for former service men. A reduction of expenditures was begun, but when the fundamental requirement for economy was provided by a budget bill it was vetoed. The peace resolution duly enacted was also disapproved by Executive veto. Yet there was a very commendable amount of necessary and important legislation. The private interests of the Nation were all the while recovering themselves through the lapse of time, but when the first regular session of the Sixty-sixth Congress ended on June 5, 1920, the public requirement of reconstruction, necessarily to be accomplished by Government action, reaching up even to the establishment of peace itself, remained for the most part unaccomplished. Clearly the time had come to go to the country for a determination of policy and a party unity of administration.

The National Government functions in response to public sentiment. There was need of that thoroughgoing agitation, of that clarification of the public thought, and expression of the public mind which comes only from a presidential election. It was only until after that event that there could be any adequate determination of policies having sufficient public support to make their adoption practical. All elections are the result of mixed motives.

Through the campaign of 1920 there ran a great variety of issues, but its result made plain, by unquestioned expression, the main desires of the country. It was another declaration of independence. It expressed a distinct reaction against militarism and any form of engagement which placed any qualification or limitation on the privilege of refraining from all armed intervention in contentions between foreign countries which did not involve our own interests. It reiterated a desire for securing all possible guaranties of peace. It was particularly distinct in its demand for abolishing all Government extravagance. It was a clear and unmistakable mandate for economy in the conduct of our foreign relations and in the management of our domestic affairs. That these policies might be adopted the election unified party control of the Presidency and the Congress.

All of this meant a general readjustment. It meant the facing of painful facts. It meant a period of economic stress and strain. The first years of the war sent large amounts of gold to our country in exchange for supplies. This resulted in the natural inflation of prices. The financing of our own war needs through the issue of bonds which, when they found their way into Federal reserve banks as security for rediscounts, greatly increased the issue of currency, caused a further and much greater artificial inflation. The results of this continued long after the armistice in a round of increasing prices and increasing wages. This condition brought forth a general statement from President Wilson in the late summer of 1919 when he made his decision on railroad wages. "Increase in wages," he said, "will, moreover, certainly result in still further increasing the costs of production and, therefore, the cost of living and * * * would utterly crush the general campaign which the Government is waging with energy, vigor, and substantial hope of success to reduce the high cost of living." Economic forces caused this warning to go for the most part unheeded until in the spring of 1920 inability to buy was all at once transformed into inability to sell. Producers found themselves without a market. Inflation had broken down, as it always does. The reaction was severe. There were great losses, all of which are not yet revealed, but the disaster of a panic was averted, and deflation now appears to have completed its course.

When as the result of the election the new administration came into power a year ago, there was a condition of economic disorder. National finances were administered under war-time tax laws. Railroad transportation was in great stress for credit. The emergency fleet, which had cost billions to construct, was disorganized and disintegrated. Proper methods of administering war relief had not been devised. There was an impending avalanche of foreign peoples and foreign merchandise toward our shores. There were great disproportions between the returns for production and the cost of distribution. Agriculture was not thriving. Employment was uncertain. There were methods which caused improper restraints in the building trades. Cost of government was a stupendous burden. There was friction and irritation in the Orient. Our attitude toward Mexico and Russia was undefined. There was need of more friendly relations with the Latin-American Republics. We lacked the respect and confidence of Europe. We were still in a state of war with the Central Powers. It was plain that there must be something more than a treatment of local symptoms. It was a time when it was necessary to seek out and remove the fundamental causes of national disorders.

A special session of the Congress was summoned to meet on the 11th day of April. The ordering of the finances of the Nation lies especially within their province. In accordance with the recommendations of the President work was at once begun on a revenue bill for the purpose of revising, equalizing, and reducing internal taxation, and on a tariff bill for the purpose of revising the customs duties in accordance with the principle of protection and to meet the exigencies of foreign exchange.

Tax bills are not popular measures. They are not enacted for the purpose of securing public favor, but with a sordid desire of securing revenue. There is never any question about the American Government meeting its obligations. There can be no such thing as a perfect national tax bill. It must always be the result of a compromise between the contending forces of different sections and different policies. The problem of the present Congress was to provide for a greater equalization of taxation. That has been done. It was to reduce the amount of taxation. That has been done. It was to secure a better method of administrtaion. That has been done.

Our national finances had been conducted under the stress of war. Under that compelling force the Government had taken, through loans and taxation, close to one-fifth of the wealth of the country. When it is considered how small a proportion of the total wealth could be converted into a cash or credit asset, it will be realized how severe had been the strain and how much need there was of relief. The present problem was to raise substantially four billions of revenue, so distributed as to cause the least possible discouragement to those general business activities which promote industrial development and provide profitable employment.

The main theory of the American Government is that it shall be conducted for the welfare of all the people. It is ever watchful to maintain not only political but economic freedom. It has no favorites. It is based on the belief in equality. It recognizes that class distinctions are artificial and unreal, that under the natural conditions of equal opportunity, generally speaking, economic rewards will be in proportion to service rendered.

This theory has to be remembered in relation to taxation. If there are no privileged classes, there can be no special servitudes. These always go together. We have refused to establish privileged classes because we believed such a system of society to be unfair, unjust, unnatural, and contrary to the public interests. For the same reasons we can not impose special servitudes. It is impossible to impose a disproportionate burden of taxation upon a selected few without doing injury to the general welfare. Such an attempt not only defeats itself in its purpose to raise revenue but causes economic disarrangement, stifles industry, and results in general distress among the very people that it has sought to relieve.

There is little time under the stress of war to consider general economic welfare. When, for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1917, it was necessary to appropriate almost $19,000,000,000, and for the following fiscal year more than twenty-seven billions, the money had to be taken wherever it could be found. A heavy system of excess-profits taxes, and, in addition, surtaxes on incomes rising to a total of 73 per cent, were laid to meet the outlay for military operations. When war conditions no longer existed it was found that the revenue from excess profits had shrunk to about one-sixth, and while taxable incomes had increased nearly twelvefold in number and more than threefold in amount, the number and amount of incomes of over $300,000 had been cut in two.

The excess-profits taxes were, therefore, discontinued and the surtaxes reduced, probably not yet enough to produce the largest amount of revenue or secure the highest degree of general prosperity, but enough materially to advance the public welfare. The charges against the heads of families with moderate incomes have been diminished by almost one-half. Those charges on transportation and sales which became popularly known as "nuisance taxes" have been repealed and the burden of past taxation has been reduced under the new law $728,900,000 for the first year it is in effect, and will be followed by a large reduction in the succeeding year. Further revision of revenue is in prospect and has been recommended by the President, but these changes already made in our system of taxation are fundamental in principle and are in the right direction. They accomplish a distribution of the burden. They constitute a real reform. The ability to reduce taxation and yet easily meet current requirements from current income without resorting to loans is an accomplishment in which, among the great nations of the earth, America stands alone.

One of the first domestic problems to receive attention was the perfection of an adequate organization for the administration of Government relief of war veterans. This had been divided up between the Treasury, the War Risk Insurance Board, Vocational Training Board, and other departments, creating confusion and resulting in applicants being referred from one bureau to another, causing endless delays. The whole work was unified and placed under the supervision of the Veterans' Bureau. To increase facility of contact the country was divided into 14 districts with 140 suboffices.

It is easy to realize what a stupendous task this work is when it is remembered that there has already been paid to disabled veterans and their dependent relatives about a billion and a half dollars and there is going out of the Treasury each day close to a million and a quarter dollars. The Government already has nearly 30,000 hospital beds, and will soon have 35,000. There are about 29,000 men already in hospitals who receive, besides their keeping and care, from $80 to $157 each month. The awards for compensations run over 200,000 each month and the awards for insurance over 140,000, while there are 15,000 compensation claims and 1,200 insurance claims received during the same time. There are about 105,000 men receiving vocational training, most of them under pay and at a maximum cost of $160 each per month. There are already in existence 107 hospitals which provide 182 employees for each 200 patients. There are 5,000 schools used throughout the country for training ex-service men and 7,000 institutions for placement training.

Two hundred thousand claims were awaiting adjustment when the War Risk Department was reorganized. All of these claims which were uncontested were adjudicated long ago. There are about 700 claims received each day which are at once decided. It may take time to establish and determine facts, but there are no longer claims awaiting adjudication and the work of the department is current. This stupendous task is not yet completed. It is being perfected day by day. The department is in contact with all public and private charities, every office of the Red Cross, and every Legion Post. It is impossible to prevent every abuse or to administer every needed relief, but for this purpose there has been provided the best possible organization. No expenditure of money or effort has been withheld. Under a business system, in accordance with scientific principles, the Government is giving expression to that great obligation which the people feel toward veterans suffering from the results of the war.

In order that we might be free from a threatened inundation of war-distressed peoples, which, instead of relieving them, would only result in the discomfort of our own citizens, a temporary restriction was placed on immigration, limiting it to 3 per cent during the year of each nationality already represented here. This has been an effort to prevent complications in a threatened condition of unemployment during a time of readjustment of wages. It has not been free from hardships in individual instances, but it has without doubt protected our country from much undesirable immigration.

There was likewise impending an avalanche of merchandise and agricultural products. An exchange of commodities, imports and exports, are desirable and are to be encouraged upon a sound and stable basis. America was the Nation least in distress for cash. There was a great temptation for those who needed cash to dump merchandise on our market at a sacrifice which affliction always imposes. Such a bankrupt sale could not have restored balance to foreign trade and foreign exchange which would be to our advantage, but would have tended to injure our own producers and our own wage earners, without proportionate benefit to ourselves or anyone else. For the protection of agriculture and to prevent those sacrifice sales which are referred to in trade circles as "dumping" an emergency tariff law was enacted, which will remain in effect pending a permanent revision of the tariff. In so far as it has tended to produce stable conditions it has been beneficial. Without doubt it has been of material assistance to the live-stock interests in the West, and to a less degree to the industries of the East.

Under Government operation of the railroads large sums were expended for improvements and new equipment, which were charged to the roads. On their return to private ownership there were great amounts of unadjusted claims. The roads were in want of credit, both to settle with the Government and provide themselves with means for necessary extensions and improvements. In order to relieve the acute situation in which they were found they were permitted under the provisions of law to fund their debts to the Government through duly secured obligations, which were placed on the market through Government agencies. This has given the necessary relief and provided funds, which has resulted in an increased employment of labor.

The Shipping Board found itself in control of many hundreds of Government-owned ships, into which there had gone $3,500,000,000. Their maintenance and operation cost many millions each month. Their depreciation in value was simply enormous. The problem presented was to get the Government out of the shipping business with as little loss as possible, and to provide an American merchant marine, that American goods might not have to be carried to market in the ships of competitors, and that there might be sufficient ships to provide for an adequate national defense. There has been worked out and presented by the President to the Congress a plan which promises to secure these results. For the first time within generations there is a fair prospect that our country will have a merchant marine, supported from a small proportion of the revenue derived from shipping and holding a place on the seas worthy of the American people.

Two important conferences dealing with domestic questions have been held in Washington. It became apparent late in the summer that a situation was developing which might result in a serious condition of unemployment. The Government did not wait for such a situation to develop, but, through the Department of Commerce and Labor, immediately brought to Washington representatives of the public and of managers and employees of all kinds of industrial activities. Plans were perfected and put into operation for local relief which are estimated to have secured employment for more than a million and a half people which, although it did not provide a complete remedy, afforded very great alleviation.

Another conference was for the promotion and encouragement of agriculture. Notwithstanding very bountiful crops, a season of low prices threatened this great enterprise with a distress so acute as to affect the economic condition of the whole Nation. Early in the session $25,000,000 of public money was provided for use of farm loan banks. Fifty million dollars was secured through private sources for the relief of the live-stock industry. There was further regulation of the packing industry and of dealing in grain futures, both made for the benefit of the producer. The largest measure of relief was that which gave the War Finance Corporation power to extend practically unlimited credit to the farmers, which has already been availed of to an extent of about $200,000,000. As the result of the conference provision is being made for greater freedom of cooperation in marketing and better understanding between the interests of banking, transportation, and agriculture. There has been a desire on the part of the Government to extend every possible relief. The marked success which has been accomplished is reflected in the greater prosperity of all agricultural interests.

An action which is likely to result not only in great benefit to agriculture but to business in general was that of the President visiting one day the office of the Interstate Commerce Commission to advise with them as to what could be done to secure the readjustment of freight rates. There have already been thousands of reductions, and there is under way an investigation which has for its object the substitution of scientific rates for those which were adopted arbitrarily in the haste of the war. If such rates can be discovered and accepted, as now seems probable, it will do much to promote greater business activity.

The restrictive policies employed in the building trades have long been notorious. They have resulted in a lack of housing facilities and in a loss of employment which has been felt in that great variety of trades and occupations which supply building operations. As a result of investigations and conferences an amicable adjustment was made under the direction of the Attorney General and embodied in a decree, entered in the United States district court, which does away with all future limitations on the productive capacity of the individual workman, confirms the privilege of the employer to purchase materials of whoever he may desire, prohibits discrimination by organized employees against employers and trade associations, and the use of such discrimination to force the collection of debts or claims. This has removed restrictions and limitations from a great key industry which can but result in a renewal of building activity and the stimulation of many allied industries. It is a guide for future action, friendly, effective, and mutually beneficial.

There is due the United States from foreign Governments about $11,000,000,000, mostly for money paid by our Government to our citizens for supplies produced here which were sent abroad during the war. Under an act of Congress a commission has been appointed by the President to settle all these claims and to agree upon terms of payment of interest and principal, which is not to exceed a rate of 4½ per cent for a limit of time not in excess of 25 years. The returns from this source, whether applied to current expenses or the reduction of the public debt, will give a great deal of relief to the present burden of taxation.

There has been passed by the House and about to be reported to the Senate a tariff bill. There were difficulties in arranging a revenue bill, but they were insignificant when compared to those which are met in framing a tariff measure. It is a comparatively easy task to remove and reduce duties and draw a bill merely for the purpose of revenue; one which will provide protection and increase revenue is quite another matter. We are living under a pre-war tariff modified by the emergency tariff. Heretofore there have been certain fixed standards, which could be approximately ascertained, of cost of production abroad and cost of production at home. The difference between these two measured in a fairly accurate degree the protective needs of each industry. Foreign exchange has heretofore varied but a trifling amount. No one knows at the present time what represents either domestic or foreign cost of production. No one knows what the rate of exchange will be. This uncertainty has required painstaking investigations to see if a flexible tariff could not be provided which might have a system of administration that could be adjusted to meet changing conditions. Heretofore import duties have been determined in accordance with the foreign value of merchandise. As the rate of exchange and unsettled conditions tend to make that now almost fictitious, an attempt has been made to provide for rates of duty in accordance with American valuations. This means the fair market value of the merchandise in our own markets. This is the principle adopted by most other countries. Both these systems are being worked out, compared, and considered, and that which appears to be best will be presented to the Senate for adoption.

The drafting of a bill of this kind requires a study and comprehension of the facts relative to almost every industry in the United States. It is doubtful if any measure was ever presented to the Congress which was the result of so much painstaking effort and care. There is back of it not only the facts and arguments assembled by the Tariff Commission as the result of intensive investigation permanently engaged in, but the taking of evidence and months of deliberation, representing many hours each day of the committees of the House and Senate, assisted by the expert knowledge of the Treasury Department and the best judgment and information of those engaged in productive enterprise. There has been no delay of action, but there has been continuing determination to present the best tariff bill which industry and intelligence could devise.

The first thought and the chief effort of the present administration has been for a constructive economy. To secure that is to accomplish reconstruction. It has not been considered enough merely to go on under the old system of advising departments to refrain from extravagances and adopt business methods. There has been a complete change in the administration of the financial operations of the Government through one of the first acts of the present Congress in the adoption of a Budget system. This means the coordination of expenditures and the centralization of authority.

The rules of the House and Senate have been changed to bring the consideration and presentation of all appropriations under the direction of a single committee. An experienced banker and trained business man, who has achieved success in the administration of private enterprises and in the conduct of the business operations of the war abroad—General Dawes—has been made Budget commissioner. He has coordinated the different departments so that in a few months there has been a saving of nearly $75,000,000 in the purchase of supplies and economy in general expenditures which will reach about three hundred million during the year. The Congress has provided for a reorganization of the various departments of government for which a plan is being perfected by a joint commission representing the President and the Members of the House and Senate. The number of public employees has been reduced nearly 60,000. The Army has been reduced by 85,000 and there is a proposal for a further reduction of 35,000, which would mean a reduction in all of more than one-half. There have been, and are proposed, large reductions in the naval forces. This important and effective work is beginning to show in the appropriations and expenditures of the Government.

Prior to the war the annual appropriations were a little over a billion dollars. For the last fiscal year they were slightly more than five and one-half billions. For the present fiscal year it is estimated that this will be reduced to somewhat less than four billions, and for the next fiscal year, for which appropriations are now being made, there will be a reduction to about three and one-half billions. The interest and payments required for the public debt are about one billion three hundred and fifty millions. The cost of ministering to the requirements of the Veterans' Bureau is about one-half a billion. The cost of the Army and Navy is over eight hundred millions and another quarter of a billion goes into pensions. If from present expenditures there be deducted those items that arose from the war and the extra amount now being expended on good roads and the Army and Navy, the present cost of running the Government would not exceed the pre-war cost by more than two or three hundred millions. This represents an achievement in economy which is almost incredible.

No doubt the proper measure of legislation is not number but weight, but something of the industry which has characterized the present Congress may be understood when it is remembered that the Senate has passed 496 bills and joint resolutions and that the House has passed 452. It is a work which will bear inspection and comparison. The record is there. It represents a solid and substantial achievement under the direction of men who make great sacrifices in the public service. To be appreciated it needs but to be known.

Twenty-five years ago America gave little thought to its foreign relations. Occasionally it reasserted the Monroe doctrine. But the responsibilities incurred as a result of the war with Spain brought new relationships, and our participation in the World War left us a dominating power among the nations. There are new interests and new obligations. We did not seek them; we can not evade them.

Shortly after the assembling of the Congress a resolution was adopted ending the condition of war. It carefully refrained from interfering with the peace treaty which other nations had made and carefully reserved all the rights which had accrued as the result of participation in the war. A treaty of peace with Colombia was concluded, disposing of a long-standing difference which arose from our relation to the Republic of Panama and the canal. A treaty was offered to Mexico which would have recognized her Government and declared her adherence to those principles of protection of the rights of persons and of property which are the necessary mark of a civilized State. Mexico has so far refused to execute it. A more than friendly interest in the people of Russia has been declared in our willingness to consider commercial relations on the presentation of evidence that there is to be maintained those rights of free labor, respect for contracts, and security of property, without which there can be no commerce, and our good faith demonstrated by great private charities and the appropriation of $20,000,000 for the relief of her starving population. Treaties of peace have also been concluded with Germany and Austria. Our army of occupation is being brought home. The war is done. Peace reigns.

There has been a steady determination not to interfere in those European affairs with which we had no direct concern. When there was an attempt to place responsibilities on our Government for the fixing of reparations, it was firmly declined, but with the assertion that reparations must be met to the limit of ability. There has likewise been a refusal to participate in the Genoa conference out of a feeling that the chief causes of economic disturbance in Europe can only be settled by their own domestic action, and our unwillingness to become involved in any way in their political questions. The sincerity of American sympathy for European distress is revealed and established in loans of almost a billion dollars made since armistice day, in addition to the administration of enormous charities.

One of the great achievements of the past year, one which promises to be one of the achievements of history, was the convening, the deliberations, and the agreements of the Washington Conference on the Limitation of Armament. There have been other gatherings which represented aspirations as high, and determinations as noble, as those which characterized this latest expression of the world's hope. If others have failed of complete success, they have not failed to make their mark upon history, nor have they ceased to be remembered as expressing a high ideal. This conference had the advantage of profiting by their mistakes and being instructed by their results. The conference proceeded on the fundamental theory of substituting for the sanction of force in international relations the sanction of reason. It declared the belief that differences could be adjusted without even resorting to arbitration by the simple device of taking counsel together.

This theory the conference proceeded to put into practice. Realizing that the greatest guaranty of peace is the removal of the causes for war, it settled and removed long-standing controversies in the Orient by mutual understandings. Both Great Britain and Japan have agreed to retire from occupations distasteful to China, and Japan has further agreed to retire from Siberia. An alliance for war between Great Britain and Japan has been ended. An agreement for peace between those two powers, and France and the United States, has begun. Competitive naval armament between five great powers is to cease. The use of poison gas in warfare and of unlawful submarine attacks on merchant ships have been forbidden. Hereafter there is to be equal opportunity among the nations in China and our claims in the island of Yap have been conceded.

These are accomplishments toward peace commensurate with the late accomplishments in war. They are results which mark off this conference as the beginning of a new era. For the first time powers great enough to control world action have voluntarily agreed to a limitation of armaments; voluntarily recognized the existence of a common purpose, a universal brotherhood, an all-pervading spirit of righteousness and of mutual obligations and responsibilities.

It has been a year of progress altogether worthy of a great people. It does not mean that the burdens of existence are to be lifted from mankind. It does not mean that military establishments are to be no longer required. An agreement to maintain a parity between navies is not an agreement to abolish navies. There will be a great saving of expenditure, but it will not be so much in present costs as in future requirements. These great remedial policies which are being adopted are fundamental in principle. They mean that hereafter a larger proportion of human effort can go into productive activity. They diminish the material waste of extravagance in government and the spiritual waste of distrust in diplomacy. Liberty has taken increased guaranties. Reason is more firmly enthroned. Hope and faith are revealed more clearly as the great realities.

As in legislative session,

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FERNALD presented memorials of sundry citizens of Gardiner, Litchfield, Hallowell, Carmel, Bangor, and Stetson, all in the State of Maine, remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 2747, the so-called Federal cooperative reclamation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. MYERS presented resolutions of the Chambers of Commerce of Troy and Kalispell, and the Commercial Club of Columbia Falls, all in the State of Montana, praying for inclusion in Senate bill 2747, the so-called Federal cooperative reclamation bill, of provision for reclamation of logged-off lands, which were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. PEPPER presented a petition of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, favoring the ratification of the four-power treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against the passage of the soldiers' bonus bill, except as applied to disabled soldiers, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 3355) for the creation of an American battle-monuments commission to erect suitable memorials commemorating the services of the American soldier in Europe; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill (S. 3356) to commission Capt. William Rees Rush as a rear admiral on the retired list of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 3357) setting aside a parcel of land as a home for the Sault de Ste. Marie Band of Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and providing for the relief of said band; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. NEWBERRY):

A bill (S. 3358) granting a pension to Carrie Shanahan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 3359) for the relief of Lewis-Wedum Co. and others; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 185) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permits for removal of rock and gravel from military reservations; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SWANSON submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the acquisition of additional forest lands at headwaters of navigable streams, to be expended under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 961), as amended, from $50,000 to $1,000,000, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10730, the agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TREATY ON SUBMARINES AND NOXIOUS GASES.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to call up the treaty dealing with submarines and noxious gases.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, proceeded to consider the treaty between the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan relating to the use of submarines and noxious gases in warfare.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the treaty may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the treaty.

The Assistant Secretary read the treaty, as follows:

EXECUTIVE M—SUBMARINES AND NOXIOUS GASES.

TREATY SUBMITTED BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES, THE BRITISH EMPIRE, FRANCE, ITALY, AND JAPAN, RELATING TO THE USE OF SUBMARINES AND NOXIOUS GASES IN WARFARE.

The United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, hereinafter referred to as the signatory powers, desiring to make more effective the rules adopted by civilized nations for the protection of the lives of neutrals and noncombatants at sea in time of war, and to prevent the use in war of noxious gases and chemicals, have determined to conclude a treaty to this effect, and have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: Charles Evans Hughes, Henry Cabot Lodge, Oscar W. Underwood, Elihu Root, citizens of the United States;

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India: The Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, O. M., M. P., Lord President of His Privy Council; the Right Hon. Baron Lee of Fareham, G. B. E., K. C. B., First Lord of His Admiralty; the Right Hon. Sir Auckland Campbell Geddes, K. C. B., His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America;

And for the Dominion of Canada: The Right Hon. Sir Robert Laird Borden, G. C. M. G., K. C.;

For the Commonwealth of Australia: Senator the Right Hon. George Foster Pearce, Minister for Home and Territories;

For the Dominion of New Zealand: The Hon. Sir John William Salmond, K. C., Judge of the Supreme Court of New Zealand;

For the Union of South Africa: The Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, O. M., M. P.;

For India: The Right Hon. Valingman Sankaranarayana Srinivasa Sastri, Member of the Indian Council of State;

The President of the French Republic: Mr. Albert Sarraut, Deputy, Minister of the Colonies; Mr. Jules J. Jusserand, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America, Grand Cross of the National Order of the Legion of Honor;

His Majesty the King of Italy: The Hon. Carlo Schanzer, Senator of the Kingdom; the Hon. Vittorio Rolandi Ricci, Senator of the Kingdom, His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Washington; the Hon. Luigi Albertini, Senator of the Kingdom;

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan: Baron Tomosaburo Kato, Minister for the Navy, Junii, a member of the First Class of the Imperial Order of the Grand Cordon of the Rising Sun with the Paulownia Flower; Baron Kijuro Shidehara, His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Washington, Joshii, a member of the First Class of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun; Mr. Masanao Hanihara, Vice Minister for Foreign Affairs, Jushii, a member of the Second Class of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun;

Who, having communicated their Full Powers, found in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I.

The signatory powers declare that among the rules adopted by civilized nations for the protection of the lives of neutrals and noncombatants at sea in time of war, the following are to be deemed an established part of international law:

(1) A merchant vessel must be ordered to submit to visit and search to determine its character before it can be seized.

A merchant vessel must not be attacked unless it refuse to submit to visit and search after warning, or to proceed as directed after seizure.

A merchant vessel must not be destroyed unless the crew and passengers have been first placed in safety.

(2) Belligerent submarines are not under any circumstances exempt from the universal rules above stated; and if a submarine can not capture a merchant vessel in conformity with these rules the existing law of nations requires it to desist from attack and from seizure and to permit the merchant vessel to proceed unmolested.

ARTICLE II.

The signatory powers invite all other civilized powers to express their assent to the foregoing statement of established law so that there may be a clear public understanding throughout the world of the standards of conduct by which the public opinion of the world is to pass judgment upon future belligerents.

ARTICLE III.

The signatory powers, desiring to insure the enforcement of the humane rules of existing law declared by them with respect to attacks upon and the seizure and destruction of merchant ships, further declare that any person in the service of any power who shall violate any of those rules, whether or not such person is under orders of a governmental superior, shall be deemed to have violated the laws of war and shall be liable to trial and punishment as if for an act of piracy and may be brought to trial before the civil or military authorities of any power within the jurisdiction of which he may be found.

ARTICLE IV.

The signatory powers recognize the practical impossibility of using submarines as commerce destroyers without violating, as they were violated in the recent war of 1914–1918, the requirements universally accepted by civilized nations for the protection of the lives of neutrals and noncombatants, and to the end that the prohibition of the use of submarines as commerce destroyers shall be universally accepted as a part of the law of nations they now accept that prohibition as henceforth binding as between themselves and they invite all other nations to adhere thereto.

ARTICLE V.

The use in war of asphyxiating, poisonous, or other gases, and all analogous liquids, materials, or devices, having been justly condemned by the general opinion of the civilized world and a prohibition of such use having been declared in treaties to which a majority of the civilized powers are parties,

The signatory powers, to the end that this prohibition shall be universally accepted as a part of international law binding alike the conscience and practice of nations, declare their assent to such prohibition, agree to be bound thereby as between themselves and invite all other civilized nations to adhere thereto.

ARTICLE VI.

The present treaty shall be ratified as soon as possible in accordance with the constitutional methods of the signatory powers and shall take effect on the deposit of all the ratifications, which shall take place at Washington.

The Government of the United States will transmit to all the signatory powers a certified copy of the procès-verbal of the deposit of ratifications.

The present treaty, of which the French and English texts are both authentic, shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States, and duly certified copies thereof will be transmitted by that Government to each of the signatory powers.

ARTICLE VII.

The Government of the United States will further transmit to each of the nonsignatory powers a duly certified copy of the present treaty and invite its adherence thereto.

Any nonsignatory power may adhere to the present treaty by communicating an instrument of adherence to the Government of the United States, which will thereupon transmit to each of the signatory and adhering powers a certified copy of each instrument of adherence.

In faith whereof the above-named plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty.

Done at the city of Washington the 6th day of February, 1922.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, unless some Senator objects, I ask that the reading of the treaty by articles may be dispensed with.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question or two, although I have no desire to delay the consideration of the treaty. Is there any way to determine under this treaty what a merchant vessel is?

Mr. LODGE. Not under this treaty; but that has been determined many times by the Supreme Court. It is a matter which has to be decided in each case.

Mr. BORAH. The reason I ask the question is that I notice that France is proposing a reservation which will leave her free to determine for herself what constitutes a merchant vessel. What effect would it have upon this treaty if she should attach that kind of a reservation to the treaty?

Mr. LODGE. It would come back to us for ratification, for our acceptance.

Mr. BORAH. If France should attach such a reservation, it would not come to the Senate, would it?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. BORAH. If it were simply a reservation?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; reservations have to be accepted by this Government.

Mr. McCORMICK. Not by the Senate, however.

Mr. LODGE. Why not? If the reservation affects the treaty, why does it not have to conform to the ordinary procedure?

Mr. McCORMICK. Does the Senator from Massachusetts hold that the reservation which was adopted by the Senate the other day in connection with the treaty then under consideration will have to be adopted by the parliamentary bodies of the other powers?

Mr. LODGE. It will have to be accepted by them, but I do not know precisely what procedure they will follow.

Mr. McCORMICK. That is welcome news; I was not so advised.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the reservation be merely one of construction of the treaty by a party to the treaty whether it will have to be presented to the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. It will have to be accepted by the other powers by constitutional methods, as the treaty provides.

Mr. LENROOT. But failure to object amounts to acquiescence, does it not?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I wish to state that the question of what is a merchant vessel is a matter that a prize court must determine.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely; in each case.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As to what effect one nation claiming the right to define for itself what constitutes a merchant vessel would have on international law I can not say, but I think international law has very clearly fixed the doctrine that if the principles of international law are complied with, and a treaty restates international law, the vessel must be taken to a court and the question of its title determined. Then the real issue is whether it is a merchant vessel or not. If it was a vessel of war, of course a different principle governs.

Mr. LODGE. That has been the practice in all cases, of which there are many.

Mr. BORAH. My interest in the matter is developed by reason of the reservation which France proposes to put upon her treaty, as indicated yesterday. I do not know whether she will do so or not; but if France is going to determine for herself what constitutes a merchant vessel under this treaty, I should think it would have a very marked effect upon what we should do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should think in the end the prize court would determine the question if the rules of international law prevail.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, if a reservation is put on the treaty, undoubtedly it will have to come back to this Government and come back to the Senate for determination.

Mr. BORAH. No; under the doctrine of reservations it would not have to come back to the Senate, as I understand; but, of course, it would have to come back to the executive department.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I may be mistaken about it, but I do not agree with the Senator about that. The Senate is a part of the Government in making treaties, and a treaty is changed by a reservation. A Government may reserve its rights under a reservation. The other Government may not have to agree to that reservation, but it has to accept it; and there is no power that I know of in the hands of an American Executive to accept a change of a treaty unless the Senate consents.

Mr. BORAH. The Government might accept it by simply failing to reject the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. If it changes the character of the treaty, I think it would have to come back here. If it is an interpretive reservation, I suppose the general practice has been that acquiescence may be indicated by no representation being made by the other Government; but if a representation is made by any other Government, of course it has to come back to that Government, and it seems to me it is clear that the provision in the treaty "in accordance with the constitutional methods of the signatory powers" would require that any change in its character effected by amendment or reservation would have to come before the Senate of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. I sincerely hope that the two Senators are correct, but I do not so understand it, and we did not so understand it during the league discussion.

Mr. LODGE. I think this phraseology, "in accordance with the constitutional methods of the signatory powers," has only been rather recently used. That is my impression.

Mr. BORAH. But, as I understand, the construction placed upon it by the Senator from Alabama is that the character of a merchant vessel must be determined by the prize court, and so forth; but in the meantime it is at the bottom of the sea.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, if the question comes up that it has been unlawfully sunk, it still is a matter for the nations to determine, either in court or before a tribunal; but I thought the Senator was referring to the capture of a vessel and its being taken to a prize court.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, the liabilities, and so forth, are afterwards determined; but I am speaking now of preventing interference with merchant vessels as a practical proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is in the hands of the captain of the submarine.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and with no guide for him to determine except his own ipse dixit or his discretion as to what it is.

Mr. LODGE. There is no guide that I know of that can be established, other than the courts, to determine the character of the vessel.

Mr. BORAH. I rather think that is correct; but I was just trying to get at the practical working of the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is the practical working. I think it has been under the old law, before the days of submarines.

Mr. BORAH. One other question, and then I will not detain the Senate further. Article 4 says:

> The signatory powers recognize the practical impossibility—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before the Senator passes from the matter under consideration, will he permit an interruption from me? There is another question that has been presented in connection with this matter of merchant ships. France is insisting or may insist upon a reservation to the effect that any ship which would otherwise be a merchant ship but which carries guns, even for her own protection, would not be regarded under this treaty as a merchant ship and would be likely to be sunk. It will be recalled that we were obliged to consider that question while we were neutrals in the late European war. A bill or a joint resolution was introduced here authorizing the President to equip our merchant vessels with guns for their own protection against the depredations of submarines. That was not passed, but failed by reason of the lapse of the session; but the President of the United States, acting within what he conceived to be his constitutional authority, proceeded thus to equip our merchant vessels with guns to protect themselves against the assaults of submarines. That same situation may be repeated at any time.

Mr. LODGE. The Secretary of State at that time, Mr. Lansing, sent a note, in which he defined so far as it could be defined what constituted defensive as against offensive armament—that is, what took the ship out of the defensive-armament class—but that is a question of fact. I brought together here on that discussion all the authorities I could find in the way of decisions of the courts. The leading case is that of the Charming Betsy, which was a decision of Marshall. Merchantmen armed for their own protection have been sustained as not losing their character as merchantmen on that account, but it has had to be decided in each case whether the ship retains its character as a merchantman or whether it has been armed for offense. I do not see how it is possible to make any general rule on the subject in any treaty or anything else.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The trouble about it is this, and it addresses itself to me as a practical question, as it does to the Senator from Idaho: Two of these European nations get into a war, and we continue our trade, of course, with the other neutral nations; and one or the other conceives that goods not contraband going to a neutral port will eventually find their way into the country of one of the belligerents, and it resolves upon the same plan of unrestricted submarine warfare. If the ship arms itself so as to protect itself against the depredations of submarines, will it still be a merchant ship?

Mr. LODGE. That is the precise thing that must necessarily be a question of fact—what armament constitutes the ship a merchantman; how much she can carry without losing her character as a merchantman?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Would it not be extremely desirable, in order to avoid unfortunate controversies, if it could be defined in some way?

Mr. LODGE. How can it be defined when every case may vary? No general definition can be made.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If that is the case, then if a ship carried any armament whatever—even that which would be of very light caliber, comparatively speaking—she would run the peril of being classed outside of the class of merchant ships given the protection of this treaty.

Mr. LODGE. There have been all sorts of cases, with all sorts of limitations, which have been admitted by the courts—for instance, the caliber of the guns which would indicate that the ship had lost her character as a merchant vessel, and whether she was carrying bow chasers or only stern chasers. The carrying of a bow chaser—I am speaking of the old-fashioned ships—was an indication that she was not armed simply for defense; the carrying of a stern chaser was an indication that she was armed simply for defense; and there are an infinity of facts which would go to determine the character of the vessel. I do not believe it is humanly possible to draw a general statement that would cover every possible case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then, in that situation of affairs—and I followed with some care the consideration of the subject by the courts, as well as by the executive departments of the Government concerned at the time when it was rife here in the Senate—conceding all these difficulties to which the Senator adverts, suppose, now, that France should attach a reservation to the effect that any ship carrying armament, either defensive or offensive, should fall without the protection of this treaty. What would we do about it? Of course, the ratifications, as I take it, will be exchanged by the President without any further action upon the part of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Yes. The Senator from Idaho, of course, was speaking of a change in the treaty, either by amendment or by reservation, on the part of France.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. I am assuming now that France attaches to her ratification such a reservation as I have suggested—namely, that a ship carrying any armament will fall without the definition of a merchant ship as used in the treaty before us—and then the treaty comes back, and the President of the United States accepts it with that reservation, and the exchanges are made. We would then find ourselves bound as a matter of course by that definition, and no ship carrying any armaments whatever would be entitled to protection by the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, that is a complete disregard of all the decisions on the subject, and I should think that that would hardly be accepted by our Government without some consideration. France alone could not change the international law of the world.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Any definition that might be attached might be subject to question, of course. I merely inquire whether some effort ought not to be made to arrive at an understanding as to how a ship would take herself out of the protection of this treaty.

Mr. LODGE. That would be a very long and difficult process. It never has been achieved yet.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, suppose France should adopt a reservation by which France retains the full right to decide what is a merchant ship. The Senator thinks that that would have to come back to the Senate if that kind of a reservation were put on, does he?

Mr. LODGE. I think so.

Mr. BORAH. If that is true, I am not disturbed about the situation; but if France should retain by reservation the full right to determine for herself what constitutes a merchant ship, and that should be accepted by the President, and we should finally conclude that the Senate did not have to act upon it, we would practically destroy this treaty; would we not?

Mr. LODGE. I think so.

Mr. BORAH. One other thing, and I will close.

Mr. LODGE. If, by France deciding, it is meant that the captain of the submarine is to decide, of course nobody could accept such a proposition as that.

Mr. BORAH. My guess is that France is not going to permit a certain power to arm her merchant ships and then agree not to use submarines.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, there are some limitations on that, as the Senator knows, in the treaty we have just ratified.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator in view of his last statement that if the reservation to which he refers should be attached to the treaty by France when she ratifies it, it would have to come back to the Senate here for our approval? The Senator expressed the view that if that were true he did not know that he should object. Suppose, however, that France, resting upon the theory that she may judge for herself when war breaks out what is a merchant ship, determines at that time that a merchant ship may carry arms and still be a merchant ship. Does not the Senator think that the uncertainty which he has in mind now will be persisted in, even though France does not attach a reservation, if she places that construction upon it?

Mr. BORAH. That is a situation which might of course arise at that time, but I had in mind the question of final ratification of the treaty, and our being bound by it. Of course, it is practically no treaty at all under those circumstances. If all these nations are going to determine, when war breaks out, what constitutes a merchant vessel, this is worse than a blank piece of paper.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator will find that nearly every nation will determine that, or insist upon its right to determine it.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I wish to say that the phrase "merchant vessel" is well defined in international law.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Those who have any cognizance of the literature upon the subject, the representatives of every nation, will know it.

Mr. BORAH. I generally agree with the Senator from Mississippi, but when he says that the phrase "merchant vessel" is well defined, I want to say to him that I have found in my limited investigation a great deal of difference of opinion about what constitutes a merchant vessel. I understood that there was considerable difference of opinion in the conference here as to what constitutes a merchant vessel, and that France was by no means satisfied with England's idea of what constituted a merchant vessel. I may be misinformed; I do not know about that. I got it rather directly, however.

Mr. LODGE. There was not any very great discussion. The delegates took the general legal expression, "merchant vessel," which has been defined, and not always similarly defined, in the cases. In the case of the Charming Betsy Chief Justice Marshall said:

> The degree of arming which should bring a vessel within this description has not been ascertained, and perhaps it would be difficult precisely to mark the limits, the passing of which would bring a captured vessel within the description of the acts of Congress on this subject.

I do not think there is much to be added to that; but I do not want to take the Senator's time.

Mr. BORAH. I am very glad to have the Senator discuss the question.

Mr. LODGE. On the 19th of September, 1914—and this is what I was referring to a moment ago—Mr. Lansing sent to all the representatives of foreign powers the following circular defining the status of an armed merchant vessel:

> (A) A merchant vessel of belligerent nationality may carry an armament and ammunition for the sole purpose of defense without acquiring the character of a ship of war.
> (B) The presence of an armament and ammunition on board a merchant vessel creates the presumption that the armament is for offensive purposes, but the owners or agents may overcome this presumption by evidence showing that the vessel carries armament solely for defense.
> (C) Evidence necessary to establish the fact that the armament is solely for defense and will not be used offensively, whether the armament be mounted or stowed below, must be presented in each case independently at an official investigation. The result of the investigation must show conclusively that the armament is not intended for and will not be used in offensive operations.
> Indications that the armament will not be used offensively are:
> 1. That the caliber of the guns carried does not exceed 6 inches.
> 2. That the guns and small arms carried are few in number.
> 3. That no guns are mounted on the forward part of the vessel.
> 4. That the quantity of ammunition carried is small.
> 5. That the vessel is manned by its usual crew and the officers are the same as those on board before war was declared.
> 6. That the vessel intends to and actually does clear for a port lying in its usual trade route or a port indicating its purpose to continue in the same trade in which it was engaged before war was declared.
> 7. That the vessel takes on board fuel and supplies sufficient only to carry it to its port of destination or the same quantity substantially which it has been accustomed to take for a voyage before war was declared.
> 8. That the cargo of the vessel consists of articles of commerce unsuited for the use of a ship of war in operations against an enemy.
> 9. That the vessel carries passengers who are as a whole unfitted to enter the military or naval service of the belligerent whose flag the vessel flies, or of any of its allies, and particularly if the passenger list includes women and children.
> 10. That the speed of the ship is slow.

Then it goes on about port authorities, as follows:

> (D) Port authorities, on the arrival in a port of the United States of an armed vessel of belligerent nationality claiming to be a merchant vessel, should immediately investigate and report to Washington—

And so forth.

Mr. McCORMICK. May I ask the Senator under what date that was written?

Mr. LODGE. That was written on the 19th of September, 1914. Then finally it stated that—

> The conversion of a merchant vessel into a ship of war is a question of fact which is to be established by direct or circumstantial evidence of intention to use the vessel as a ship of war.

In drafting a general treaty we could only use the phrase which is used in all diplomatic proceedings—that is, "merchant ship"—but when you come to the question whether it is an armed ship, which takes it out of the category of merchant ships and relieves it of the protection which it has as a simple trader, you open up all those questions of fact which can only be decided by investigation. We can not possibly cover them in any general statement.

Mr. BORAH. I presume it is true that you could not write into a treaty all those details, but I do not think that removes the possibility of France saying that she would determine for herself whether or not a vessel was a merchant ship.

Mr. LODGE. What does she mean by saying she will determine it?

Mr. BORAH. I have an idea that she meant the same thing she meant when she said she would not consent to a limitation of submarines, that she does not propose to have the submarine interfered with by an armed merchant vessel.

Mr. LODGE. Then it is a question of the amount of armament.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and she will determine how much armament constitutes a ship an armed vessel.

Mr. LODGE. Who will?

Mr. BORAH. France.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Idaho will excuse me, it does not mean anything definite to say "France." Who will determine it? Will it be the captain of a submarine or a French court?

Mr. BORAH. It might be a French court; nevertheless, France will determine for herself, either through her captain or through her court, what constitutes a merchant vessel.

Mr. LODGE. I can not conceive how any other nation should accept a proposition of that sort.

Mr. BORAH. I am satisfied the Senator will find in a few days they are seriously considering that proposition.

Mr. LODGE. I dare say. I have no information about what the French Government is contemplating, but of course if it is put in in the form the Senator suggests, it practically destroys the inhibition of the use of submarines under existing rules of international law.

Mr. BORAH. That brings me to article 4, which I presume is the reason why France is acting as she does in regard to this matter. Article 4 provides that—

> The signatory powers recognize the practical impossibility of using submarines as commerce destroyers without violating, as they were violated in the recent war of 1914–1918, the requirements universally accepted by civilized nations for the protection of the lives of neutrals and noncombatants, and to the end that the prohibition of the use of submarines as commerce destroyers shall be universally accepted as a part of the law of nations they now accept that prohibition as henceforth binding as between themselves and they invite all other nations to adhere thereto.

If article 4 should be accepted in good faith as it is written, it would practically prohibit the use of submarines as they were used during the war.

Mr. LODGE. For the destruction of commerce. Nothing affects their use for military purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no; but, as a matter of fact, the submarine did very little service in the war except in the destruction of commerce.

Mr. LODGE. That is quite true. Their formidable qualities were entirely in the destruction of merchant vessels.

Mr. BORAH. They are not so useful for war purposes; they are principally useful for destroying commerce.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Mr. BORAH. As the instrument is fit for no other use, it will likely be used for that purpose.

Mr. LODGE. There is no better lawyer than the Senator from Idaho, and he has noticed, undoubtedly, that articles 1 and 2 state the accepted rules of international law. Those were accepted by the signatories. Those are the recognized provisions of international law.

Article 4 is a new proposition entirely, applied only to submarines.

Mr. BORAH. And if accepted and lived up to in good faith, it would really have the effect of limiting the use of submarines.

Mr. LODGE. It would limit their use to purely military purposes.

Mr. BORAH. That is true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts that the reading of the treaty article by article be omitted? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WADSWORTH. At the risk of having it thought that I am out of sympathy with the dictates of humanity, I desire to make a few observations concerning article 5 of this treaty, which has to do with the use in war of asphyxiating, poisonous, or other gases, and all analogous liquids, materials, or devices.

I know full well that there is a very strong and widespread sentiment, not only in this country but in other countries, against what is known as chemical warfare, and I notice that the first paragraph of this article refers to its use as having been "justly condemned" by the general opinion of the civilized world. In my judgment, a large number of people very much misunderstand the actual results of chemical warfare.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Senator goes into that, he did not quite complete the reading of the article. Of course, he is aware of the fact that the use is prohibited by The Hague convention, and it received the assent of all the powers of the world.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It did not receive the assent of all the powers of the world. The American delegates refused to agree.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator refer to both treaties?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The American delegation at The Hague convention, which promulgated the prohibition against the use of poisonous gas, declined to agree.

Mr. LODGE. Declined to agree to the use of poison gas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Declined to agree to the prohibition of it.

Mr. LODGE. To the prohibition of all poison gas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. As I was saying, I think a large number of people misunderstand the actual effect of this method of warfare. Comparatively speaking, when it was first used in this war it was new, it was mysterious, it was horrifying. Likewise, in its immediate effect it was cruel, as are all methods of warfare, as are all weapons. But an examination of the annual report of the Surgeon General of the Army for the year 1920 discloses some rather interesting facts as to the actual effect of this weapon when used upon belligerents, upon troops in action.

During the war the American Expeditionary Forces suffered in battle casualties—that is, killed and wounded—to the number of 258,338 men. Of these 34,249 died on the field of battle; 13,691 died in hospitals as the result of their injuries incurred in battle. There were admitted to the hospitals, exclusive of marines, 224,089 men. Of this number 70,552, or 27.3 per cent of the whole number, were suffering from gas alone. Of the 70,552 gas cases only 1,221 died. Of the 153,537 admitted to the hospitals suffering from bullets, high explosives, and other methods of war except gas, 12,470 died. I think it is a generous estimate to state that 200 men in the entire American Expeditionary Forces were killed on the field of battle by gas alone. The deaths which did occur from gas occurred in much the larger proportion after the expiration of two, three, four, or five days, when the soldier had been brought back to a hospital.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I have not been following the Senator very closely. Is his argument confined to the use of gas between belligerents?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not entirely. I will come to that later.

If we assume that about 200 men were killed upon the field of battle by gas alone, and hence were not included in the 1,221 who died in hospitals as a result of gas, we would then have 1,441 men in the American Expeditionary Forces who died from gas. That is less than 2 per cent of the entire number of men gassed. If we take the 187,586 men who were injured by bullets, high explosives, bombs, bayonets, hand grenades, and so forth, we find that 46,449 died, more than 24 per cent. Therefore the death rate from gas is one-twelfth the death rate from high explosives and bullets. A soldier, therefore, who suffered a gas injury had twelve times the chance for his life that the man had who suffered from bullet or high explosive wound. I think this fact is not generally well known.

The question has come up quite often since this new method of warfare was engaged in—engaged in first by the Germans in violation of their agreement to refrain from its use, an agreement reached in The Hague convention—as to the after effects of gas.

The impression has gone forth that a man who has been gassed is disabled to a greater or less degree for the rest of his life, and especially that a predisposition toward tuberculosis has been set up in his system. Some figures on that are rather interesting. In the Sugeon General's report for the year 1920 we find this paragraph:

> One hundred and seventy-three cases of tuberculosis occurred during the year 1918 among the 70,552 men who had been gassed in action. The number of cases of tuberculosis for each 1,000 men gassed was 2.45. Since the annual rate of occurrence of tuberculosis among enlisted men serving in Europe in 1918 was 3.50 and in 1919 4.30 per 1,000, it would seem to be apparent that tuberculosis did not occur any more frequently among the soldiers who had been gassed than among those who had not been.

Mr. President, without attempting to go into extended remarks, or of course attempting to give my opinion as that of one learned in these matters, I think an examination of the medical authorities and the investigations made by physicians among disabled men in the United States, in France, and in Great Britain will disclose the fact that the theory that gas injuries are conducive to tuberculosis is exploded. In fact, some of the most eminent investigators of the question have stated, after the most exhaustive investigations, that they are unable to ascertain any marked predisposition toward tuberculosis among those who have suffered from gas. I am well aware that these conclusions reached by men who have studied the question are not in accordance with the public sentiment of the time. I think, however, they are worth relating.

Something has been said upon more than one occasion concerning the effect of gas poisoning upon the eyes. If, again, we will take the Surgeon General's report, we will find that 86 men in the American Expeditionary Forces were totally blinded—lost the sight of both eyes—440 were partially blinded in both eyes, and 644 were blinded in one eye. Of the gassed patients it is stated that 4 were blinded in both and 25 in one eye, a total of 29. These 29 were only 3.85 per cent of all those suffering blindness in one or both eyes. In other words, the bullets or high explosives and other methods of warfare than gas were responsible for twenty-five times as many blinded as the gas.

Mr. President, chemical warfare accounted in the British Army during the last 16 months of the war, which was approximately the period of our participation in the war, for 160,000 gas casualties. The death rate of that 160,000 was 2.5 per cent, about one-eleventh of the death rate among those who suffered from bullets and high explosives and shells.

Chemical warfare during our participation in the war accounted for 30 per cent of all the casualties in the American Expeditionary Forces. It accounted for a like percentage of casualties in the British service and, I assume, a like percentage in the French service.

I know I am speaking in contradiction of a very well-defined public sentiment, but, nevertheless, I think I am justified in making this observation. The question has occurred to me, Can any weapon which in a great war accounts for one-third of all the casualties be definitely and finally barred from use in the wars of the future? Will a nation in the future, with its back to the wall, fighting desperately for its life, refrain from using a weapon against the soldiers of its enemies which the last war has shown accounts for 30 per cent of the casualties?

It is easy, Mr. President, to declare prohibitions against the use of weapons in warfare. If I read history aright, the same protest was made against gunpowder many generations ago. It became too effective, however, for any nation to decline to use it if its life were threatened. I fear, should another great war curse the world and nations be driven to desperation in protecting themselves against what they may consider to be unprovoked and piratical attack, that when that day shall come article 5 of the pending treaty will not be worth the paper it is written on. Speaking for myself alone, I am not enthusiastic about entering into declarations concerning which there is a very strong probability of violation in the future.

War is cruelty organized. We can not escape that conclusion. All war is cruel. There is not a weapon used in it that is not cruel. Which is the more cruel, a high-explosive shell which tears off a man's arm and blinds him and condemns him for the rest of his poor life to stagger down the pathway toward the grave, never free from suffering, or a gas wound which mutilates not at all and from which the medical records now show the soldier, in a comparatively short time in an overwhelming majority of cases, entirely recovers? If we are to draw the line of demarcation as between a more cruel weapon and a less cruel weapon, frankly I can not see why it should be drawn in favor of the high-explosive shell and against the gas.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest to the Senator, while I rather sympathize with his argument, that after all the use of poisonous gases is only in its infancy, and if we permit the cultivation and development of the poison-gas science it may be a much more terrific and destructive element in the next war.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Doubtless that is true. The same degree of progress, however, could be noted in high explosives. The high explosive was never used to any considerable degree until this war. Of course, gunpowder was used for a long time before, but not high explosive as now known.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says he is very much of the opinion that article 5 would become a dead letter in some emergencies which he has described. I have no doubt at all but what that would be true; but does not the Senator think that the same rule would apply, for instance, with reference to submarines? Does the Senator think that any nation which was fighting for its life would hesitate to use its submarines against a merchant vessel which was feeding its enemy? I think that a man carrying on the war at the head of the army or at the head of the navy who would give orders that merchant vessels should be respected which were carrying food to the enemy that was pushing him to the wall would be immediately displaced and somebody else put in his place.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think there is this distinction: The submarine as used in the last war was used very largely against noncombatants, against the passengers and crews of merchant vessels, unarmed and helpless. When it is used against a belligerent vessel, a vessel of war, I think it is just as merciful and just as cruel as the high-powered shell from the 14-inch gun, not much more, not much less. What I have been arguing about is the use of chemical warfare between armies and between navies, which use is prohibited by the pending treaty. The use of the submarine against war vessels is not prohibited by the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. No; but the submarine is practically worthless as a war vessel, as the records of the last war show.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would hardly subscribe to that. There were a good many vessels sunk by submarines.

Mr. BORAH. If Mr. Lee, who represented the English Government, is correct in his figures, which I have, it was practically a useless war instrument. It accomplished very little in that respect. Its efficiency in effect was wholly with reference to the destruction of commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was the principal use made of it, of course, by the Imperial German Government, and yet it was made use of by the German Government and by the other belligerents in attacks upon war vessels; but this treaty does not pretend to prevent or prohibit that.

Mr. President, it has seemed to me there has been much misunderstanding about this weapon which is now called new; yet I think centuries ago certain gases were used in the wars of the ancient peoples; Greek fire was used; but, as I understand, article 5 might be construed to prohibit a flaming liquid?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The question is, Can the treaty prevent one of two armies or prevent both armies from using weapons which will tend to destroy their respective enemies? I contend that no treaty can do that. Not only is war cruelty organized, but war is waged for destruction, and if the whole world knows that every chemical industrial plant within the borders of a nation stands ready any day of the year to turn out a weapon such as poison gas, which may be used by its soldiers in the field in the next great war, if there shall be another, the whole world will use that weapon. Not a day goes by in the industries of the United States but what poison gas is made as an incident to industry. Take chlorine. It is made from common salt; it is used all over this country to purify the water supplies of cities. Phosgene is used for exceedingly important industrial purposes.

Poison gas is used for the whitening of print paper, which makes it possible for newspapers to be printed in the form in which they now appear. These elements are used every day in our industrial life. Can any Senator tell me, that being the case and the weapon standing ready to hand in the event of a desperate struggle between armies, no army will use it, especially when it is known that in the last great war the weapon accounted for 30 per cent of all the casualties? Let us look things straight in the face as practical people.

It would be a blessing, Mr. President, could we abolish all these cruelties, such as the high explosives and the airplane bomb. Can there be anything much more cruel in its effects than a 2,000-pound bomb dropped from an airplane, literally tearing men to pieces? Nothing is said in this treaty about the use of airplanes which fly in the dark of the night and drop their loads of destruction upon huddled human beings, be they soldiers or civilians.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. Does not the Senator believe that all these horrors will be things of the past when we shall have ratified the pending treaties? I understood that the purpose of this treaty was to secure the peace of the world. If that is not its purpose, I should like to know what its purpose is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understand the Senator's sarcasm.

Mr. FRANCE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York, who is the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, if these treaties are merely treaties to make new rules for warfare, or if they are treaties to secure the peace of the world?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] pointed to the possible development of this weapon if it is not prohibited. There is no possible way of preventing its development. It is being developed to-day. If we should disband our Army and our Navy completely, it would still be developed in our industries. It is being developed in every industrial country of the world. The industries to which I have referred have been familiar with the effects of gas upon the human organism for many years.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In connection with what the Senator from New York has said, that this development will go on, I desire to remind him that we were told a week ago that it was the purpose of the British Government to prosecute experiments for the purpose of producing more deadly gases, not that it intends to precipitate the use of them but to be in readiness in case another country should do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the other country will be prosecuting similar experiments; so that the work of developing this weapon expressly for the purpose of war will apparently go on.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Inevitably. Mr. President, no nation in its senses will dare to refrain from developing it in research.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What I mean is that it will not be necessary to rely upon such development as may take place in industrial life; the development will apparently go on by the nations themselves for the express purpose of using gases in war in case of an exigency.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Montana has cited the case of Great Britain; I am not familiar with that; but why not be perfectly frank about it? We are doing it.

Mr. BORAH. And on a very large scale.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We are developing chemical warfare.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I referred to a statement made about a week ago to the effect that British experts were over here in this country examining into the developments and experimentations that have been taking place here in the Chemical Warfare Service of our Army with a view to acquainting themselves with such improvements as we have made, and it was in that connection stated to be the purpose of the War Department fully to expose to the British experts everything that had been done here, so that they might have the advantage of any improvements and progress that had been made in that direction by our Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no doubt about that. Not only will development go on in industry inevitably—we could not stop it if we tried to—but every nation will endeavor, in the open or behind closed doors, to continue its research under governmental auspices, for no nation will dare take a chance. Poison gases have proved too effective a weapon to be ignored. I should be much discouraged if the Army of the United States ceased to experiment in the perfection of gas masks on account of this treaty. We do not dare stop endeavoring to perfect a mask which will protect our soldiers in the event that their enemy shall use gas against them, and the only way to perfect a mask is to experiment with the gases and to see what kind of gases will penetrate the masks. So the entire research circle is involved.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire whether the production of poisonous gases and the prosecution of experiments for the purpose of developing this weapon has not been restricted in Germany by the combined action of the Allies?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I think it has been.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Would it not be possible, then, to restrict the development by various nations in exactly the same way? In other words, in addition to the agreement here not to use poison gas, might it not be advisable to have a further provision to the effect that no nation shall conduct researches for the purpose of developing gases as a weapon of warfare, and providing for reports and inspection exactly as in the case of Germany? Would it not be possible in that way to restrict the research to industrial activities?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think not, Mr. President. Two, three, or five nations might enter into an agreement to restrict research work in gases projected for war purposes, but we could not stop private citizens of a country engaging in such research work; that would be utterly impossible. We might just as well enter into an agreement prohibiting a group of nations from conducting research in ballistics and in the tensile strength of steel in order to prevent in the future guns being manufactured which will shoot more than 70 miles, as the Big Bertha, fired by the Germans, did during the recent war. We can not stop these activities.

It may be discouraging for a Senator to make such an admission, but, Mr. President, we have got to look facts in the face; we can not stop research work. When a weapon is invented by a private citizen, whether it be a Colt automatic or a Browning machine gun, if he is a patriotic citizen, he takes it first to his Government, and if the Government can use it, is the Government to say to him, "No; you must stop your efforts toward developing that gun"? The Government will never do it in the world. Nor can we stop the development of the use of gases. It will go on inevitably; it will go on to the end of time, in my humble judgment. We may not live to see the day, but for one I would not be the least surprised if chemical warfare, developed to its highest point of perfection, made war infinitely more merciful than it is to-day. It is quite within the realm of possibility that gases shall be developed which shall put a whole opposing force out of action and yet not injure permanently a man in that force.

I think article 5 is drawn somewhat carelessly. It starts out with this paragraph, although this is not apropos of my argument, Mr. President—

> The use in war of asphyxiating, poisonous, or other gases, and all analogous liquids, materials, or devices, having been justly condemned by the general opinion of the civilized world and a prohibition of such use having been declared in treaties to which a majority of the civilized powers are parties—

The phrase "other gases" is all inclusive. It reads:

> Asphyxiating, poisonous, or other gases.

Mr. LODGE. To be used in war.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but there are gases used in war other than asphyxiating or poisonous gases.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What for?

Mr. WADSWORTH. For balloons, such as helium gas, and hydrogen. A strict construction would seem to prevent the use of any gas in war. Undoubtedly that is not meant.

I glance at the French text, and notice that the phrase is:

> Gaz asphyxiants, toxiques ou similaires.

It would seem in the French text that the word "similaires" ties the matter up, but in the English text the equivalent of "similaires" is not used. That, however, is a point of comparatively small importance.

I make these observations, lonely as I may be while making them, because I honestly believe that the condemnation referred to in article 5 as a "just condemnation" is not a just condemnation; that this form of warfare is not more cruel than other forms: in fact, the figures show that it is less cruel. I know, too, that there is a very grave dread that chemical warfare gases may be used indiscriminately against civilian populations. That is true; but so can every other weapon used prior to the World War and during the World War be used against civilian populations. Cities were shelled by high-explosive shells; Paris was bombarded by the so-called Big Bertha at a distance of 72 miles.

Many more people in the cities of Paris and London, innocent civilians, were brutally killed by high explosives than were kill by gases. In fact, I think none were killed by gases. The German planes that bombarded London at night and Paris at night dropped high explosives upon innocent people. To my mind that is contrary to the laws and usages of war. But I do not recollect that any specific prohibition of the use of high explosives on that account has been agreed upon by any two nations. And so if we are measuring and comparing cruelties and the dangers to civilians while a great war is going on, for the life of me I can not see how the danger is any greater when it is accompanied by the use of chemical warfare gases than it is when chemical warfare gases are not used.

In my humble judgment article 5 of this treaty will neither add to nor detract from the cruelty of war. My dread is that it will be disregarded, and once more a group of great powers will in the end convict themselves of insincerity.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am never very sure about my own memory, but I find that I was not mistaken in saying that the United States signed the treaties prohibiting the use of poison and poisoned weapons.

By the first Hague convention it was prohibited—

> To employ poison or poisoned arms.

And it was signed by Mr. Stanford Newel. I think the Senator probably overlooked it by looking at the adhesions on the first page. We signed; we did not adhere.

The second Hague convention——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? I have not examined that in some time, but my recollection is so clear that the American delegates declined to adhere or to agree on that occasion——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, they signed. They did not adhere, of course. They signed. The powers that adhered were the powers that did not sign, but adhered afterwards.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will take the Senator's word for it, if it is in that book; but it is contrary to the testimony given before our committee.

Mr. LODGE. That is possible.

In the second Hague convention this language is used:

> In addition to the prohibitions provided by special conventions it is especially forbidden—
> To employ poison or poisoned weapons.

That treaty was signed by Joseph H. Choate, Horace Porter, U. M. Rose, David Jayne Hill, C. S. Sperry, and William I. Buchanan on the part of the United States. The ratification there was deposited at The Hague. In the first Hague convention Mr. Stanford Newel, minister at The Hague, signed, and, of course, the name of the United States did not appear in the list of adhesions at the beginning.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With no reservation?

Mr. LODGE. No reservation that I can find at all. We have reservations, but not on that subject.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is quite possible—in fact, it is more than possible; it is probable, now—that I was mistaken; but I invite the Senator's attention to the result. The nations paid no attention to it.

Mr. LODGE. That is quite true, yes; but I think, if the Senator will pardon me, that that is no argument. Undoubtedly the number of deaths in this war arising from poisoned wells was very small. Is that a reason for restoring to general use the poisoning of wells, which has been driven out of use simply by the effect of public opinion?

This clause in this treaty is not expected to prevent the use of poison gases at present. It is expected to do something toward crystallizing the public opinion of the world against it, and trying to make that public opinion more effective. I am aware that the losses of life in this war from poison gases were less than those from high explosives and other weapons; but it hardly seems to me an argument to say that because you kill more men with shells, therefore it is well to add another method of killing them. It seems to me just as well to get rid of methods of killing men, and to limit them as much as possible. The only way in which you can ever reach it is by the effect of public opinion. That is all that this clause is intended to effect. It is hoped that it will have some effect in that way.

It was obvious to the conference that it was impossible to make regulations for the production or the use of these poison gases, because they were made in the production of dyes and in all sorts of chemical productions of different kinds, and could not be dealt with. At least, no way yet has been found for their regulation or control for use in war; but there is the hope that public opinion may be crystallized against them, and I do not think it is an argument against a thing of this sort, any more than it is an argument to say, "What is the use of having statutes against murder? There are lots of murders. They will go on just the same. What is the use of passing statutes?"

In some way we want to build up public opinion, and the attempt was made here. It was made at The Hague. Of course, no attention was paid to it in the war. If the world is cursed with another such war, I dare say they will break out and use poison gases again; but there is always the hope that the opinion of the world may be so crystallized that it will prevent it, as public opinion alone has practically prevented the poisoning of wells or the giving of no quarter to prisoners. That has been done simply by the opinion of the world, and perhaps we shall get an opinion of the world by and by that will gradually be against all these methods; and if we can do something to stop one it is already something gained, and that was all. It is a repetition of what The Hague convention said, and was done with the same purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If no amendment be proposed as in Committee of the Whole, it will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I simply desire the record to show my disagreement with article 5. Apparently I am not to have an opportunity to vote on it.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment in the Senate, without objection the resolution of ratification will be presented to the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution of ratification, as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive M, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, a treaty between the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan relating to the use of submarines and noxious gases in warfare, concluded at Washington February 6, 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I understand that if present he would vote as I shall vote, and therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

I also desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD (when Mr. CULBERSON's name was called). The senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DIAL (when Mr. SMITH's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is absent on official business. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I am informed that if that Senator were present he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who, if present, would vote as I shall do. I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. Has the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BALL. I have a general pair with that Senator, but I understand that if present he would vote as I intend to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. BROUSSARD. My colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], is absent on business of the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL. My colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is temporarily absent from the Senate on official business. He is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], and if present would vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] are absent on business of the Senate. If present, all these Senators would vote "yea."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] are necessarily absent. If present, they would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are absent on official business. If present, they would all vote "yea."

The roll call resulted—yeas, 72, nays 0, as follows:

YEAS—72.

Ashurst	France	McNary	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas are 72, nays none. Two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative, the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the treaty.

TREATY CONCERNING CHINESE PRINCIPLES AND POLICIES.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall not ask the Senate to continue with the consideration of the next treaty, but I ask that it may be taken up, so that it will be before the Senate and be the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the treaty, which will be read by title.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Executive P—A treaty between the United States, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal relating to principles and policies to be followed in matters concerning China, concluded at Washington February 6, 1922.

Mr. LODGE. I shall call the treaty up in the morning, and hope to have it disposed of.

GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS.

Mr. CUMMINS. As in legislative session, I report favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (H. R. 9979) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs," approved March 3, 1901, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the said corporation is authorized to acquire, by devise, bequest, or otherwise, hold, purchase, and convey such real and personal estate as shall or may be required for the purposes of its incorporation not exceeding $500,000, with authority in said corporation, should it be by it deemed necessary so to do, to mortgage or otherwise encumber the real estate which it may hereafter own or acquire and may give therefor such evidences of indebtedness as such corporation may decide upon."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PEACE PORTAL BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

Mr. LODGE. Before moving to go into secret executive session I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, for which I ask present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 263), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States desires to express its cordial sympathy with the erection and dedication of the peace portal between the Dominion of Canada and the United States as a memorial of the peaceful relations so long existing between the two countries, and extends to Samuel Hill and his associates its warm appreciation of their valued services in promoting this new bond of friendship between Canada and the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and unanimously agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business in closed executive session.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess in open executive session until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate, in open executive session, took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, March 30, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 29 (legislative day of March 16), 1922.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Asst. Surg. John F. Mahoney to be passed assistant surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from March 18, 1922.

Asst. Surg. Marion F. Haralson to be passed assistant surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from March 18, 1922.

APPOINTMENT, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

AIR SERVICE.

First Lieut. William Lewis Wheeler, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

CHAPLAINS.

To be chaplains, with rank of captain, from March 23, 1922.

Chaplain Frank Campion Armstrong.
Chaplain Nathaniel Alexander Jones.
Chaplain George Runyan Longbrake.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

Joseph C. Dutra to be postmaster at Chula Vista, Calif., in place of G. A. Wiard. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Fred C. Alexander to be postmaster at Yosemite National Park (late Yosemite), Calif., in place of M. A. Thornton, removed.

Bertha Johnson to be postmaster at Cutler, Calif. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

GEORGIA.

James M. Lawson, jr., to be postmaster at Aragon, Ga. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Thomas W. Cobb to be postmaster at Warthen, Ga. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

James W. Long to be postmaster at Ashburn, Ga., in place of J. F. Jenkins. Incumbent's commission expired August 7, 1921.

IDAHO.

William W. McNair to be postmaster at Middleton, Idaho. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Arthur W. Gayle to be postmaster at Dubois, Idaho, in place of J. E. Paul. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

INDIANA.

John W. Williams to be postmaster at Walton, Ind. Office became presidential January 1, 1920.

William M. Lyon to be postmaster at Hillsboro, Ind., in place of H. J. Harris, resigned.

William E. Robinson to be postmaster at Jeffersonville, Ind., in place of J. E. Burke. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

Ulysses G. Butcher to be postmaster at Oakland City, Ind., in place of Curtis Butler, resigned.

IOWA.

Glen M. Reynolds to be postmaster at Irwin, Iowa, in place of W. S. Branson, deceased.

KENTUCKY.

Lillian G. Hall to be postmaster at Eddyville, Ky., in place of P. C. Mayhugh. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

MAINE.

Ivory J. Bradbury to be postmaster at Hollis Center, Me. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

MASSACHUSETTS.

George B. Waterman to be postmaster at Williamstown, Mass., in place of P. J. Dempsey. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

MISSISSIPPI.

William B. Stone to be postmaster at Fulton, Miss. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Henry P. Patton to be postmaster at Sardis, Miss., in place of J. H. McCraw. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

MISSOURI.

Archie C. Atterberry to be postmaster at Atlanta, Mo., in place of W. N. Bledsoe. Incumbent's commission expired March 8, 1922.

John W. Smith to be postmaster at Browning, Mo., in place of J. R. Williams, resigned.

NEBRASKA.

Chester W. Harris to be postmaster at Ansley, Nebr., in place of L. D. Russell, removed.

Herbert C. Robbins to be postmaster at Wallace, Nebr., in place of H. C. Robbins. Incumbent's commission expired August 6, 1921.

NEW YORK.

George E. Opdyke to be postmaster at Landing, N. Y., in place of G. E. Opdyke. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

John B. Read to be postmaster at Poland, N. Y., in place of Thomas McMahon. Incumbent's commission expired May 15, 1920.

NORTH CAROLINA.

A. Eugene Ward to be postmaster at Lake Junaluska, N. C. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

OHIO.

Frank A. Hawkins to be postmaster at West Farmington, Ohio. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

OKLAHOMA.

William A. Geren to be postmaster at Wetumka, Okla., in place of J. C. Puryear, resigned.

OREGON.

John A. McCall to be postmaster at Klamath Falls, Oreg., in place of W. A. Delzell. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Julia A. Ernst to be postmaster at Beavertown, Pa. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

TENNESSEE.

Hilary R. Vaughn to be postmaster at Hendersonville, Tenn. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

TEXAS.

Frances Ruge to be postmaster at Bandera, Tex. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Claud A. Howard to be postmaster at Bronson, Tex., in place of C. A. Howard. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

VERMONT.

Walter J. Reirden to be postmaster at Richford, Vt., in place of C. M. Boright. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 29 (legislative day of March 16), 1922.

CHIEF JUSTICE OF SUPREME COURT OF HAWAII.

Emil C. Peters to be chief justice, Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF SUPREME COURT OF HAWAII.

Antonio M. Perry to be associate justice, Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 29, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father of infinite truth and wisdom: Look upon us and see that our minds are awake with good desire. We accept this day as having some good meaning. Thou wilt not disappoint us; direct Thy purpose and in all diligence and high expectation may it be accomplished. Be with the family that is just now in the shadows of their sacred dead. Comfort them in faith that the blossom of the pure womanhood has only been transplanted to the gardens of God. Shed Thy light upon us that understanding and knowledge may prevail. We ask for true strength and true greatness to be revealed unto us. Bless our whole country. May our entire citizenship stand together in compelling desire for those principles that enrich and ennoble our Republic, and may the springtime of God come everywhere. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the bill making appropriations for the Army on which the previous question was ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendments. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the items increasing the National Guard. I believe there are three of those items. I have not before me the bill as amended. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I ask for a separate vote on those amendments.

The SPEAKER. On each one of the three?

Mr. SISSON. Well, I do not know the numbers; I have not the amendments before me.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want a vote on all three?

Mr. SISSON. On all three of those amendments. One amendment is——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he understands what the gentleman desires. Is there any other amendment on which a separate vote is demanded?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for a separate vote on the Dempsey $15,000,000 proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

Page 79, line 25, strike out "$800,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,002,800."

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CRAGO) there were—ayes 33, noes 48.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Clearly there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 188, nays 145, answered "present" 1, not voting 96, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the second amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 79, line 25, strike out the proviso which reads as follows: "Provided, That this appropriation shall not be used to provide forage, bedding, etc., for more than 4,000 animals."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 20, after the parenthesis, strike out the figures "$9,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$11,000,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may we have the amendment reported again?

The amendment was again reported.

The SPEAKER. On that the gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 146, noes 62.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 114, line 24, after the word "navigation," strike out the figures "$27,635,260" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$42,815,661."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 172, noes 75.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The yeas and nays have been refused.

Mr. BLANTON. Not on this vote. The gentleman is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. That was on the other amendment. The question is on demanding the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 261.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. LUCIAN WALTON PARRISH, late a Representative from the State of Texas.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now take a recess till 12 o'clock meridian tomorrow.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. J. Res. 282) to authorize the Secretary of War to incur obligations for construction and maintenance of roads, bridges, and trails in Alaska, said obligations to be paid from the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

REPORT OF ALASKAN ENGINEERING COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying document, referred to the Committee on the Territories:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Congress, the report of the Alaskan Engineering Commission, for the period from January 1 to December 31, 1920.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 27, 1922.

AUSTRIAN DEBT FOR PURCHASE OF FLOUR.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 160.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 160, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resoltuion No. 160 authorizing the extension for a period of not to exceed 25 years of the time for the payment of the principal and interest of the debt incurred by Austria for the purchase of flour from the United States Grain Corporation, and for other purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the motion is not in order. The resolution is not a privileged one.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] makes the point of order the resolution is not privileged.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard on the question of the point of order?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the question involved in the point of order is whether this resolution carries with it the privilege conferred under the rules of the House upon bills raising revenue. The Constitution provides that bills for raising revenue must originate in the House, and paragraph 2 of Rule XI provides that bills relating to the revenue and such measures as purport to raise revenue and the bonded debt of the United States shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. Paragraph 56 of Rule XI provides that the Ways and Means Committee have the right to report on bills raising revenue at any time.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] the other day suggested that if this was a resolution to raise revenue, and hence privileged in the House, it would follow that the prerogative of the House to originate bills raising revenue had been violated, because the resolution had passed the Senate first, and that we should request of the Senate, if this resolution should be held privileged as raising revenue, to return it to us. The question involved here, Mr. Speaker, is whether the construction of the words "raising revenue" are necessarily the same from the constitutional point of view as from the point of view of interpreting the rules of the House.

The point I desire to make, Mr. President, is this, that the Speaker may construe this resolution to be in order as a privileged matter without also holding at the same time that the constitutional prerogative of the House to originate bills raising revenue has been violated. I call the attention of the Speaker to the almost uniform course of decisions of Speakers of the House in passing upon the construction of the words "raising revenue" as applied to the rules of the House.

Section 3076, of Fourth Hinds', refers to a case where Mr. Payne, of New York, as a privileged motion, moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba, and the point of order was made that that was not a bill raising revenue. But the Speaker, Mr. Henderson, said:

The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to Rule XI, clause 59, which provides that the Committee on Ways and Means may report at any time on bills raising revenue; and it has been repeatedly held that that included bills affecting the revenue. So that under the decisions under that rule the Chair is clearly of the opinion that the gentleman has a right to call up the bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that the House took the position when the treaty was passed providing for reciprocal relations with Cuba that it was a matter that the House had to act upon, and that the Senate could not, because it affected the raising of the revenue?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I was not a Member of the House at the time, and I do not recall.

Mr. MANN. I do not know in what form it came before the House. The House took the position at that time that it was a matter so much affecting the revenue that it must be passed by the House. I think we passed a law to that effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the Cuban reciprocity act, which was voted upon in special session called by President Roosevelt on November 9, 1903.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not this particular one. This was when Mr. Henderson was Speaker. That was the term before I came to Congress. I do not recall it.

Mr. MANN. I spoke of the essential question as to the matter of fact of raising revenue.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The decision of the Chair was based on the fact that this was a bill that affected revenue, and did not raise revenue necessarily.

Now, in section 4624 of Fourth Hinds', "The words 'raising revenue' in the rule giving privilege to the Committee on Ways and Means are broadly construed to cover bills relating to the revenue." Section 4625 reads:

Under later decisions the words "raising revenue" in the rule giving privilege to the Ways and Means Committee is broadly construed to cover bills relating to the revenue.

That was the case of a joint resolution in reference to a free zone on the frontier of Mexico, and a point of order was raised that it was not a privileged resolution because it did not raise revenue. But the Chair held that it was not necessary that a bill should directly raise revenue, but it was privileged if it affected, even in a remote degree, the revenue, as this resolution now before us does. It does not raise revenue, but it affects, at least remotely, the revenue.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield.

Mr. GARNER. The resolution, as I understand it, has for its purpose something affecting the United States Grain Corporation. Now, while the United States Grain Corporation was a corporation owned by the Government, yet technically it is a private corporation. This resolution only concerns the proceeds of loans made to Austria by the Grain Corporation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Such profits as it may make will eventually be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. GARNER. The Speaker would be in error if he should rule that it would affect the Treasury. It only affects the credits due to the Grain Corporation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Assuming that the effect of this legislation would be to provide that the receipt of this sum will just balance the books of the corporation, does that affect the revenue of the Government in any way?

Mr. LONGWORTH. As a matter of fact, this obligation of Austria is a direct obligation to the United States.

But, Mr. Speaker, the point I am desiring to bring out is this: That the rulings of the Chair have always been to broadly construe, in relation to the House, the phrase "raising revenue." On the contrary, the courts in interpreting the phrase "raising revenue" have always construed it very strictly wherever the question was involved of the right of the Senate to originate a bill that was objected to on the ground of raising revenue, and Justice Story laid down the rule, which has been followed uniformly by the Supreme Court, that revenue bills are those that levy taxes in the strict sense of the word and are not bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue. In other words, it does not follow by any means that the ruling of the Chair sustaining the privilege of this motion to go into Committee of the Whole House means that this bill is one raising revenue in the sense that the House is being deprived of its privilege to originate revenue bills.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman from Ohio go to the extent in his position of contending that if we passed a law authorizing the Emergency Fleet Corporation to sell its ships, to be paid for in a certain time, the modification of that law extending that time would be a bill affecting revenue and be privileged under the rules of the House?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not think it would be necessary to answer that question in this precise connection. Of course, there is a very fine line that comes in all these questions affecting revenue. Many bills do affect the revenue indirectly which are not, properly speaking, revenue bills.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the form of the indebtedness of the Austrian Government to the United States?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is in the form of an obligation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it in the form of a demand note? They all are, as I understand it; $10,000,000,000 of them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No. It is a bond, in a sense, which is quoted fully in the report.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there any time fixed for the payment?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; the 1st of January, 1925; and the object of this resolution is to extend the period for 25 years for the payment both of the principal and the interest, and that provision, in my judgment, does affect remotely the revenue.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. My understanding is that these obligations were demand notes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No. The gentleman is thinking of the loans to the Allies.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is what I thought.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This is not a war loan at all. It is purely for charitable purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. MANN. We have in bills on irrigation projects and on a good many sales of public lands the provision that certain amounts of money shall be paid to the Government by those who purchase the land. We frequently extend the time of payment. Would the gentleman from Ohio claim that a bill to extend the time of payment of any of those sums should go to the Committee on Ways and Means and have a privileged status in the House as a bill affecting the revenue of the Government, though doubtless we will get more revenue that way than we will this way?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No. I would not claim that the Committee on Ways and Means had jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. What is the distinction between a payment due to the Government that is not privileged and an extension extending the time for the payment of a loan due a private corporation owned by the Government and making that privileged?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think this proposition stands on about the same basis as the original Liberty loan acts, which loaned money to various governments and provided for the payment. This provides for the payment by way of extension. It extends the period of the payment. The Grain Corporation bill was reported as a privileged bill by the Committee on Ways and Means. It was taken up, as a matter of fact, under suspension of the rules, and passed almost unanimously, but it was reported as a privileged bill, as I recall.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Ways and Means has reported in my day bills establishing a collection district and relative to an employee in a customhouse as privileged, but none of them ever got by as privileged.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The only reason that the one affecting customs districts did not get by as being privileged was because there was a clause in it which referred to the merchant marine.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. They used to call up those bills as privileged until some bright gentleman—I think I was the first one, though not very bright—made the point of order that those bills were not privileged.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman was bright enough to make the point.

Mr. MANN. And the Speaker sustained the point of order that it was not a privileged bill, because it was not a bill raising revenue or a bill affecting the revenue, although it affected the customs service.

Mr. GARNER. Does not the gentleman know that every bill that comes from the Ways and Means Committee is privileged, according to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and now followed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]?

Mr. MANN. No; but doubtless they would be glad if such bills were privileged.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I concede, Mr. Speaker, that there is a twilight zone in a great many of these bills affecting the revenue, but the point I desire to bring out clearly as to the contention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], that any bill in order to be privileged because it raises revenue must originate necessarily in the House of Representatives, is that the distinction is quite obvious between the constitutional construction of the phrase "raising revenue" and the construction of the Presiding Officer of this House, where the only thing involved is the procedure of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is aware, of course, that the obligation of the Government of Austria was received from that Government under the signature of the vice president and treasurer of the United States Grain Corporation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And apparently it is an independent transaction between the Government of Austria and the United States Grain Corporation, although the obligation is to pay to the United States Government in gold coin.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. But it is a private transaction.

Mr. LONGWORTH. While the United States Grain Corporation acted then, as it does in all these transactions, as the agent of the United States Government, all the funds of the Grain Corporation eventually must find their way into the Treasury of the United States.

I do not desire to detain the House any longer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. I wish to discuss the matter very briefly, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MONDELL. Just a moment, if the Chair will allow me. I am favorable to the resolution which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has attempted to call up. I think there is very little opposition to it in the House. There was, however, a very important question raised when the matter was first presented by the committee, as to whether or no this measure was privileged. If it was privileged because it raised or directly affected the revenue, then it should not have originated in the Senate. I think there are few who will contend that it does directly affect the revenue, and therefore it does not fall within the provision of the Constitution that revenue bills must originate in the House, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] raises the question as to whether or no there is a difference between the class of revenue measures that must originate in the House under the Constitution and the class of measures which may be considered privileged when reported from the Committee on Ways and Means. While there may be something in that argument, may I suggest that if there be a class of bills which do not fall within the constitutional provision that they must originate in the House, but which may nevertheless be considered as privileged when reported by the Committee on Ways and Means—whether that be true or not—this bill can not by any process of reasoning be brought within any such rule of construction, because it is not only not a bill raising revenue but it is not a bill directly affecting the revenue. It is a bill extending for a certain period of time the payment of certain obligations given by Austria to the Grain Corporation; and as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and other gentlemen have very clearly pointed out, if a measure of this sort may claim a privilege, then there is a very wide variety of bills that, when reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, might be declared to have a privileged status. It seems to me it is very clear, Mr. Speaker, first, that this is not a bill raising revenue or directly affecting it, and that therefore it might properly originate in the Senate; and, second, not being a bill raising revenue or directly affecting revenue, it has no privileged status here, although reported from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I say just one word on an interesting point suggested by this discussion? So far as the bills that are described in the Constitution as revenue bills are concerned, any question as to the character of those bills has been set at rest by decisions of the Supreme Court. There is quite a line of decisions by the Supreme Court and the other Federal courts to the effect that revenue bills within the meaning of the Constitution are in the strict sense revenue bills, bills that are designed simply for the purpose of raising revenue. That seems to be clear under the decisions; but on the other point I agree perfectly with the view presented by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], that if you are going to hold that a bill of this sort is within the meaning of the rule, then perhaps 75 or 85 per cent of the measures that are brought before the House might be placed in that category and would be considered as privileged.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Where do we get our claim to originate general appropriation bills?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Only by custom. There is nothing in the Constitution about that.

Mr. MANN. Why, from the very beginning of the organization of Congress this House has maintained that a general appropriation bill was a bill affecting revenue, raising revenue under the Constitution.

Mr. LONGWORTH. For a great many years the Ways and Means Committee had jurisdiction over appropriations as well as over measures raising revenue.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; and that is the only place where we get the claim which we have maintained ever since the Government was started, and have kept it in spite of a very ambitious body located elsewhere, which would like to have the privilege.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They have not learned about it yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I agree with the gentleman entirely, and I quoted a decision by Judge Storey that from a constitutional point of view the phrase "raising revenue" was always construed very strictly, but my point was that from the point of view of the rules of the House it had been construed very liberally, and I think the gentleman will concede that a bill which might be classed as a bill affecting the revenue under the procedure of the House would not necessarily be a bill which sought to be a bill raising revenue under the Constitution.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The Constitution is construed and its authorities cited in the case of Miller against Roberts (202 U. S. 429). While I agree with the gentleman from Ohio as to the point he has just made, I think he must agree with me that if the rule is given any such construction as he contends for, then any bill that remotely affects the question of revenue is privileged.

The SPEAKER. When this bill came over from the Senate the question was raised whether it was obnoxious to the provision of the Constitution that all bills for raising revenue must originate in the House, and, secondly, whether if that were not true that it was within our rule which gives the Ways and Means Committee power to report from the floor bills for raising revenue—both phrases being the same in the Constitution and the rules.

The Chair has had time to investigate the question with some care, and it seems to the Chair quite clear that this is not a bill for raising revenue as defined in the Constitution. The best definition the Chair has seen is in the Thirteenth of Blatchford, where the court says:

Certain legislative measures are unmistakably bills for raising revenue. These impose taxes upon the people, either directly or indirectly, or lay duties, imports, or excises for the use of the Government, and to give to the persons from whom the money is exacted no equivalent in return, unless in the enjoyment in common with the rest of the citizens of the benefit of good government.

It seems to the Chair that that is a good definition of the phrase "for raising revenue," and that it does not include this bill. At the same time the Chair does not feel that it is necessary in this case to define exactly what the phrase does mean. The Chair was struck by the prudence of the court in another case, where in the One hundred and sixty-seventh United States it said:

What bills belong to the class of bills for raising revenue is a question of such magnitude and importance that it is the part of wisdom not to attempt by any general statement to cover every possible phase of the subject.

In accordance with that the Chair will not attempt to rule what bills could and what may not come under this phrase, "bills for raising revenue." While it seems very clear that a bill which postpones the payment by the Government of Austria of an obligation incurred to the Grain Corporation is not a "bill for raising revenue," the Chair recognizes force in the argument made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] that there is a difference by construction in the meaning of the same phrase when it occurs in the Constitution and in our rules. That has arisen somewhat out of necessity or convenience because every tariff bill, for instance, contains necessarily administrative features which are connected with raising revenue and yet which strictly are not "bills for raising revenue." Because of that and similar cases there have grown up by rulings of Speakers, acquiesced in by the House, precedents which hold some bills privileged, though not strictly and exclusively raising revenue, but relating to or affecting the revenue. But the Chair does not think these precedents can sustain the point made by the gentleman from Michigan that this bill is privileged. It seems to the Chair that it is not a bill for raising revenue under the rule any more than under the Constitution, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. GARNER. Why does not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to give the bill a privileged status, and then we will take it up under the rules of the House.

Mr. FORDNEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be given a privileged status.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution be given a privileged status.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have no idea of objecting to this request, but I want to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of another matter after this is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by placing therein a report of the Shipping Board touching discriminations and various forms of Government aid to shipping. This is a very illuminating report; it is not very long, and I think it is well worthy of being printed in the RECORD, because it will afford a splendid opportunity for study of this great question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I see the gentleman holds a document in his hand. Is that the one that he desires to have printed?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is the one.

Mr. MANN. I think I have one in my office which is three times as thick as that which the gentleman now holds.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I have no doubt the gentleman has, and that has been sent to all of the Members of Congress. I wish this particular one could be placed in the RECORD so that Members may see it also.

Mr. MANN. Is it the same thing?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. No; it is different.

Mr. MANN. Was not the former one printed and sent around to Members of Congress?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. This was made in November.

Mr. MANN. Has not that been printed?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Not that I ever heard of. It was sent with a letter of transmittal from the chairman of the Shipping Board to the members of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, but I do not think it was sent to the general membership of the House.

Mr. MANN. I received one some time ago, which I think was printed by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and which was sent to Members.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I do not think this is the one. I want to get it in the RECORD, so that all of the Members can see it.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will defer his request until we can find out whether it has been printed or not.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Is not this the first publication sent to the members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. This was sent in November.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I have a printed copy of it.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It must have been printed as a document, but it has not gone into the RECORD in any way.

Mr. MANN. But there is no need to print all of these things in fine print in the RECORD. No man with sense will read it in the RECORD. This has been printed in proper shape as a document.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. This is very illuminating, and Members of Congress should have an opportunity to read it.

Mr. MANN. It is so illuminating, I will state to the gentleman, that when I received it with a letter from a gentleman urgently in favor of ship subsidy, coming from the Shipping Board, I read it, and found that it was an argument against ship subsidy. I read it. It is in print. What is the use of printing it in the RECORD? It is available to everyone.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. But it is not in print accessible to Members of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am just an ordinary Member of Congress, and I have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, is it the gentleman's purpose to have this voluminous document which we received the other day also printed in the RECORD?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. No.

Mr. WALSH. It has already been printed once, and has been received and probably read by a great many Members and forgotten by this time. I do not think we ought to establish the precedent of printing it in the RECORD.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does the gentleman know that this has been printed.

Mr. WALSH. I received a copy of it early in the year. I am quite sure.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I shall withdraw my request at present until I can further investigate the question.

AUSTRIAN DEBT FOR PURCHASE OF FLOUR.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. J. Res. 160, authorizing the extension, for a period of not to exceed 25 years, of the time for the payment of the principal and interest of the debt incurred by Austria for the purchase of flour from the United States Grain Corporation, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield pending that?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the gentleman any thought in his mind about the time which he wishes to use?

Mr. FORDNEY. No. I would like to arrange time that is agreeable. I do not think it is necessary to take up very much time. It is a matter that ought not to take up much time. I suggest 30 minutes on a side, if that would be agreeable.

Mr. GARNER. I have had some requests for time on this side of the House for general discussion of other matters.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have had no requests.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] asked for some time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the gentleman that we will take up an appropriation bill very soon, and then will have some general debate upon that.

Mr. GARNER. I have a request only from the gentleman from Kentucky. I do not know that I shall occupy more than 5 or 10 minutes. I imagine 30 minutes on a side probably would be sufficient. A gentleman in front of me just now asked for 5 minutes. The gentleman knows how these requests come.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we can be rather liberal under the five-minute rule if gentlemen need more time. I think an hour ought to be enough.

Mr. GARNER. Very well; that would be agreeable.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 30 minutes on a side, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion, the gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be limited to one hour, half to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will that give sufficient time for the gentleman from Michigan to yield to a few interrogatories in connection with the bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. I think so.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, will that grant sufficient time to make a statement about this loan, which is not apparently in the report?

Mr. GARNER. No; that will not give sufficient time, and if we had six hours it would not give sufficient time, because they have not the information. There was no hearing on this bill; there is no information so far as the committee is concerned touching the legislation at all.

Mr. MANN. I suspected that was the truth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the joint resolution by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 160, authorizing the extension, for a period of not to exceed 25 years, of the time for the payment of the principal and interest of the debt incurred by Austria for the purchase of flour from the United States Grain Corporation, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. J. Res. 160, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Senate joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the economic structure of Austria is approaching collapse and great numbers of the people of Austria are, in consequence, in imminent danger of starvation and threatened by diseases growing out of extreme privation and starvation; and

Whereas this Government wishes to cooperate in relieving Austria from the immediate burden created by her outstanding debts: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to extend, for a period not to exceed 25 years, the time of payment of the principal and interest of the debt incurred by Austria for the purchase of flour from the United States Grain Corporation, and to release Austrian assets pledged for the payment of such loan, in whole or in part, as may in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury be necessary for the accomplishment of the purposes of this resolution: Provided, however, That substantially all the other creditor nations, to wit, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Great Britain, Greece, Holland, Italy, Norway, Rumania, Sweden, Switzerland, and Yugoslavia, shall take action with regard to their respective claims against Austria similar to that herein set forth. The Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to decide when this proviso has been substantially complied with.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, on the 15th day of March, 1920, the House passed practically unanimously a bill which authorized the Grain Corporation to dispose of 5,000,000 bushels of flour for cash or on credit at such price and on such terms and conditions that might be necessary to carry out the purposes of the act which was to provide relief for the starving population of a number of countries in Europe. That bill was the result of a great deal of pressure brought on Congress both by the administration and by many well-meaning citizens outside to relieve the frightful cases of destitution and starvation prevailing principally in Poland, Armenia, and Austria. The original proposition involved a loan of about $150,000,000. The Congress was loath at that time to grant such a loan, particularly after the war was over, based on charity, pure and simple. And by the process of evolution we arrived at an extension of credit under circumstances which took no money whatever out of the United States Treasury directly. It was found that the Grain Corporation had on hand as a net profit from its various transactions about $50,000,000 worth of flour. It was flour of not such a high grade as could be well disposed of in this country, but it was amply good for the starving people abroad. Following the passage of that bill about $24,000,000 worth of flour was sold to Austria on credit. We received from Austria an obligation similar to that which had been given to other countries who came to Austria's aid under the same circumstances, notably Great Britain, France, and Italy. The essential features of that obligation are these:

The Government of Austria for value received promises to pay to the Government of the United States of America, or assigns, on the 1st day of January, 1925, the principal sum of $24,066,798.56, on which interest will be paid half yearly at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from date of this obligation to the date of payment. Both the principal and the interest of this obligation will be paid in gold coin of the United States of America of the standard weight and fineness existing at the date of this obligation at the Treasury of the United States of America in the city of Washington, D. C., or at the option of one holder, at the subtreasury of the United States of America in the city of New York.

The principal and interest of this obligation will be paid without deduction for and will be exempt from any and all tax and/or charge, present and future, imposed by authority of the Government of Austria or its possessions or by any political or taxing authority within Austria.

This obligation is one of a series of obligations of similar tenor but in different amounts and payable in different currencies, all maturing on the 1st day of January, 1921, designated as "relief series B of 1920."

The Government agrees that no payment will be made upon or in respect of any of the obligations of said series issued by the Government of Austria before, at, or after maturity, whether for principal or for interest, unless a similar payment shall simultaneously be made upon all obligations of the said series issued by the Government of Austria in proportion to the respective obligations of said series.

Pursuant to the powers conferred upon it, the Reparation Commission has authorized the Austrian Government, under the control of the Austrian section of the Reparation Commission, to issue the present series of bonds, which shall be a first charge upon all the assets and revenues of Austria, and shall have a priority over costs of reparation under the treaty of Saint-Germain, or under any treaty or agreement supplementary thereto, or under arrangements concluded between Austria and the allied and associated powers during the armistice signed on November 3, 1918, without prejudice to the obligations of Austria to pay the expenses of the armies of occupation, of the Reparation Commission, and of restitution, and ,to make deliveries and payments in kind under the treaty of Saint-Germain (except under article 181, and paragraph 19 of annex 2 of part 8), and under any protocols or agreements in force to the extent to which such deliveries may be required by the Reparation Commission or in accordance with the provision of the said treaty, protocols, or agreements by an interested power.

In other words, this bond constitutes a mortgage on all of Austria's assets, and the fact is that to-day the total income of the Government of Austria is not sufficient to pay the interest on this debt.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield, if it will not interrupt him?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Very briefly.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman, as this bond does not mature until January, 1925, why need it be extended at this time?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Simply because of the fact that Austria's assets and her funds are tied up absolutely by these mortgages. Now, at the time we passed this bill the situation in Austria was described by the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. GLASS, based upon definite information he had received from persons who had been in Austria, and was as follows:

AUSTRIA.

In Austria the acute misery and suffering are probably greater than in Poland. Two-tenths only of the present Austrian State are self-supporting in food, and the remaining eight-tenths, even before the war, produced food to supply themselves for six months of the year at most, and were dependent for the remaining six months upon importations. Consequently the situation to-day, especially in Vienna, has become exceedingly grave, due to a shortage of coal and food. There is every indication that unless some relief is afforded immediately the population can not withstand the strain of conditions that are already well-nigh intolerable. Coal and food rations for domestic consumption have been reduced below a safety minimum, and it is only a question of days before existing stocks will be exhausted, when even the present reduced rations will become impossible unless new supplies are obtained. Already the forests in the neighborhood of Vienna are being cut down for the fuel, as are also many of the wooden dwellings. Famine riots have broken out in some Austrian towns during the past months, and, although the population of Vienna has shown admirable patience, this city and large parts of Austria are faced with the danger of a complete breakdown, which, according to the chancellor, Doctor Renner, must unavoidably occur by the end of January unless outside assistance is obtained.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the contention of the gentleman from Ohio that the collection of this debt by the United States should be postponed in order to give Austria a chance to contribute to reparation payments of France and Great Britain?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; not at all. The object of this is to release Austria's revenues and assets from the mortgage which all those other nations hold upon it, and our release is based only on the condition that every other Government does the same thing in advance.

Mr. WALSH. What are they going to do with these funds when released—where are they going?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I assume that these funds will be used for the carrying on of the Government.

Mr. GARNER. Where does the gentleman get authority to make that statement?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have no authority. I said I supposed. I do not know.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is really for the purpose of enabling the Austrian Government to function, so that it may have its revenues, which are very insignificant and very small, indeed, to enable it to continue and go on with a view of relieving these suffering people to a certain extent.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state where he gets that information?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I get it from the Senate report and the investigation and hearings had on the subject.

Mr. WALSH. I did not know but what the gentleman was reading from a bulletin of the League of Nations.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. The bond due our people, I understand, is something about $24,000,000 and some odd dollars?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the amount due Great Britain is equivalent to $16,000,000?

Mr. LONGWORTH. So I am informed.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman explain that part of the report where it says that Great Britain has loaned $16,000,000 and £5,560,460 and 8,863,960 lira? What do those figures mean?

Mr. LONGWORTH. These figures were taken from the Senate report.

Mr. MANN. The committee acted without any information, of course.

Mr. LONGWORTH. All the information was that these other Governments had loaned large amounts to Austria and were willing to release the assets if we did. I do not care whether it is sixteen or twenty or forty millions.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be just as well to have information on the subject? The figures in the report here are not intelligible or intelligent.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. GARNER. Of course they are not. Those figures were copied by the committee. There was no hearing before the committee. They are copied from another report, and there is not a man on the committee that knows more about it than does the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The figures $16,000,000 in one case and $16,000,000 in another and 154,000,000 lira——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope the gentleman from Texas is speaking for himself as to the matter of lack of information.

Mr. GARNER. I could not speak for the gentleman from Iowa, because, as I said before, he knows very little about anything.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] can explain these figures, I think perhaps I will vote for them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not regard it as a matter of very much importance as to the exact amount that the other Governments have loaned to Austria. All I need to know is that Austria is in a desperate state; that we have loaned Austria, or rather we have sold to her on credit $24,000,000 worth of flour; that she is unable to pay that debt or the interest on it; and when I voted for the grain corporation bill I cared nothing about what security we got. I regarded it, and I regard it now, as an act of noble charity. I do not regard it in the same class as the debts owed to us by our allies, which were made for war purposes, and which they have agreed to pay us, and which I believe they will pay us. This was made long after the war was over.

Mr. LONDON. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I suggest that the figures appearing on the first page of the report, of dollars, pounds, and lira, represent three separate loans, and the loan was in specific currency on each occasion. On one occasion it was written dollars, and on another it was written pounds, and on another it was written lira.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from New York say that the Government of Great Britain is loaning money in lira or dollars?

Mr. LONDON. The only explanation that I have is the one I have given.

Mr. MANN. That is no explanation. [Laughter.] I have been trying ever since this thing started to get some intelligent statement. The gentleman from Ohio may know, but he will not tell.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I repeat that these figures are taken from the Senate report. They are a matter of absolutely no importance whatever. All we want to know is that other countries have come to the relief of Austria; that they are willing to release their loan, provided we do. I do not care whether it is $16,000,000 or 16,000,000 lira, or what it is.

Mr. LAYTON. As a matter of fact there is but one thing in this whole proposition, and that is that we know we have loaned so much money and will never get it back; it does not make any difference about hearings or anything else.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We know this: That the House passed, practically unanimously, a bill which authorized the sale of this flour to Austria, and it knew what the condition of Austria was then—that it was desperate. We know to-day there is practically no improvement.

Mr. LAYTON. That it is worse.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If anything, it is worse. And we know we can not get any interest on this; and even if we could, even if Austria was physically able to pay, this whole thing was a gift of charity. It was not based on war. We did what other nations did, came to the relief of starving people. Now, all this resolution undertakes to do is to postpone for 25 years the collection of that debt. And all of these technicalities that have been raised as to the value of this security, and whether it is properly expressed in francs, or lira, or in pounds, I do not think has anything to do with it. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Here is the question I want the gentleman to answer. I do not care anything about the figures that the gentleman raises the question about. What I want to know is this: If this obligation does not mature until January 1, 1925, and we do not press Austria for settlement of interest prior to that time, how would Austria be any less embarrassed than she is now if we delay it for 25 years?

Mr. LONGWORTH. If somebody had a mortgage on all of the gentleman's assets and income, and it was more than he could pay, he would be very much relieved by some such action as this. We are doing this out of charity.

Mr. WALSH. Why not cancel the debt?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9633) to extend the provisions of section 2305, Revised Statutes, and of the act of September 29, 1919, to those discharged from the military or naval service of the United States and subsequently awarded compensation or treated for wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty.

AUSTRIAN DEBT FOR PURCHASE OF FLOUR.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as a general thing when the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee get in trouble and get to a high hill which they have difficulty in climbing they call on the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], and he pulls over it all the camouflage information that he can gather on the outside and from his own intellect. When the committee ascertained that there was absolutely no information touching this matter naturally the gentleman from Michigan thought the gentleman from Ohio could perform better than anybody else, and he put him up to take the brunt of the fight.

Now, let us see what this bill really is. Some days ago Congress created a commission to do this identical work, and I want somebody to tell me why that commission does not function, if need be, in the matter of this Austrian indebtedness.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am perfectly willing to answer it now.

Mr. GARNER. I will permit you to do so in a few moments. Nobody denies that this commission has the power to function. This commission, when appointed, can function and can function quickly, because all they have to do is to sit around the table with the duly authorized Austrian agent and settle the whole matter as proposed in this resolution.

But, gentlemen, that is not the reason for this resolution. In my opinion, this resolution is brought here for one purpose, and that purpose is that the refunding commission may say in the future that Congress has taken the lead in putting off the payment of the principal and interest of our foreign indebtedness for 25 years, and they are therefore authorized by precedent of Congress in extending the debt and interest on the loan for 25 years.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman consider that the security is in the same class as those people to whom we loaned money?

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Ohio says the security is not in the same class as the other loans. Gentlemen, suppose you were representing Italy; suppose you were representing Greece, and you are negotiating with this Refunding Commission for the purpose of extending your debt; would you not call their attention to the action of Congress, in which they remitted not only the debt and interest for 25 years but released to Austria the security which it had given to secure the loan?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. In a moment.

I say that the purpose of this bill, in my opinion, is to give this commission a shield behind which it can stand when anyone undertakes to criticize it for the methods pursued in settling these debts due from foreign governments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. In one second. I do not know, and neither do you know, and no man here knows but that when this security is released and this debt is extended for 25 years Austria will give that same security to some private individual or some other country. We release our security. What for? In order that Austria may give it to somebody else? There is not a particle of information before this House on that subject. There was none before the Senate, nothing to indicate that when this security was released some private individual, maybe some American banker, if you please, may not step in and say, "Now, for part of what you owe me or of what I will advance to you in addition, give me this security."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment. I will yield first to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I wonder, when the Italian loan is up before the American commission for settlement and the Italian representative reads of the passage of this resolution to the American commissioners, whether the gentleman thinks the Italian commissioner would read the gentleman's speech to the American commissioners at the same time. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I think this resolution should not pass before this situation is called to the House's attention. When it was discussed in the committee room it was suggested that this was merely a matter of $24,000,000, a mere bagatelle in proportion to the sums of money that we have been considering and talking about for the last four years.

Mr. MANN. In comparison with those sums of money, it is a mere bagatelle.

Mr. GARNER. That is a small consideration. Why, there was no hearing. They merely remarked that the Senate had passed it unanimously. I took the trouble to look at the Senate record, having curiosity to know what was said over there. There is only a short passage in the Senate record devoted to it. The Senate called it up, and it was stated that the Austrians could not pay, and it went through.

Mr. LONGWORTH. There was quite an extended debate in the Senate, covering four or five pages.

Mr. GARNER. But there was no information given.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, we passed the Russian relief bill without information. Is not this one of those emotional bills?

Mr. GARNER. Well, I will say to my friend from Tennessee that such is the only argument we have had offered on this floor, that it is charity, and the additional fact that a charming lady by the name of Todd has interviewed everybody concerning it. I do not know whether that is "emotional" or not, but that is the situation as we find it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman will concede that he and I are immune. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. KING. I understand that there is security in the shape of bonds that are a first charge on the assets of the Austrian nation. Have we some of those bonds in the possession of the Treasury here?

Mr. GARNER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I have not that information, and no one else has it. I repeat, that when a committee that comes into this House without information touching a measure that is brought before it, a measure involving $24,000,000, if it has not information that measure ought to be recommitted until they can bring in some information to this House which will at least afford some degree of satisfaction. They have certainly not done it in this case, and whenever you begin to send bills back to committees, when they come before you without information, you rebuke them to that extent, so that in future they may try to bring in some information upon which you can vote intelligently.

Mr. KING. Was there any information before the committee as to what was to be done after these bonds were taken out of the Treasury and sent back to Europe?

Mr. GARNER. I have tried to tell the gentleman from Illinois and every other gentleman that there was absolutely no information. I hope that makes it plain. The only information that exists on God's green earth is what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] in his mind thinks he knows. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman think they will reach the hands of international bankers?

Mr. GARNER. I do not want to impute bad motives to a government, but I say this can be done. You can release this security, and that same security can be given to the National City Bank of New York to secure whatever debts it had then against the Austrian Government or whatever extensions it might make after to-day.

Now, as to what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] said in reference to reparations, I do not know anything about that matter. I think the commission that we created to look into this matter can get information. They would be the proper parties to settle the matter with Austria. That is why I suggested to the committee that we ought to refer it to the commission and let the commission settle it. But they said, "This commission is not yet functioning, and this is a very important matter." Gentlemen, do you know how long it will take the various countries to pass these bills? Read the resolution and see under what conditions the release of the security is to be made. All that those Governments have got to do is to pass an act releasing its security after ours is effective. Some of those legislative assemblies are not now in session and will not be in session for a year.

Mr. YOUNG. Some of those Governments can act without an act of their legislative body.

Mr. GARNER. Gentlemen undertake to give us information that they do not know themselves. I doubt if the gentleman knows.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas is well informed.

Mr. GARNER. I admit that I am not informed.

Mr. MANN. Can he give us information as to what is meant by "substantially the other nations of the world"?

Mr. GARNER. I will say that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], every time you ask him about a matter of information, smiles and tells you he knows all about it. I want him to get up and divulge what is in his mind in regard to this situation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman wants me to answer?

Mr. GARNER. Yes. That is what I ask the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In the bill, to wit, the particular nations that are stated as parties in the bill.

Mr. MANN. What are "substantially all" of thirteen?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman does not know what nations are meant by the words following "to wit," then I can not tell him.

Mr. MANN. What are "substantially all" of 13 nations?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, I can not tell the gentleman what the Senate meant by that language.

Mr. MANN. No; I guess not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But I can tell you what nations are referred to.

Mr. MANN. The nations are set out in the resolution.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course.

Mr. MANN. But what does "substantially all" of them mean?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It means the major part.

Mr. MANN. Does it mean seven, then?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It means the particular nations mentioned there.

Mr. MANN. Does it mean all of them? No. That would not be "substantially all." What does it mean? Does it mean seven, a majority, or a minority? Does it mean twelve, eleven, seven, or six? Who knows? Even the gentleman from Iowa fails to tell us. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Even the gentleman from Illinois can not get away from the fact that the nations are specifically mentioned there, and the joint resolution tells him just exactly what they are.

Mr. MANN. Nobody knows which nations will be required under this to remit.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But it specifies particularly the nations.

Mr. MANN. It does not. It specifies "substantially all" of 13 nations. What does "substantially all" of them mean?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It specifies that these nations have got to remit.

Mr. MANN. It does not say anything of the kind.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. GARNER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I understood the gentleman from Iowa to state that one purpose of this legislation was to permit the Austrian Government to function. I should like to ask the gentleman if he knows of any legislation pending before the Ways and Means Committee designed to permit the Government of Russia to function or the new government of Ireland to function?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, well, that is one of those expressions that fall from the lips of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] when he thinks he has information, and has none, and has got to say something. [Laughter.] Now, gentlemen, "substantially all" of these nations must act before Austria can function.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. "The gentleman from Iowa" just said they did not have to.

Mr. GARNER. "Substantially all" of these nations must remit this security before Austria can function. Now, how long is it going to be before these nations will remit this security? They say this must be done at once, and therefore this commission will not have time to act, that Congress must act quickly. It will take from six months to a year for these other nations to act. Who will say that this commission will not be in shape to function within 30 or 60 days? Why not leave this proposition to our commission that we created for that purpose? You will get your action just as quickly as you will by passing this joint resolution, and the relief will reach Austria just as quickly as it will by Congress setting a precedent by passing this joint resolution necessitating the approval of all the other nations and extending this time of payment 25 years. That part of it I am opposed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman has always been against making any loan of this sort.

Mr. GARNER. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I am against making loans of this kind, and I am especially not in conformity with the views of the gentleman from Ohio when he wants to remit all the debts due us by foreign countries.

Mr. LONGWORTH. "The gentleman from Ohio" does not want to do that, and never said he wanted to.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman now says he does not; but I heard him here in a speech in the House say substantially that if it made any difference with the theory of the protective tariff he was willing to let them all go.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; the gentleman from Ohio never made any such remark, or anything approaching it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARNER. I yield to myself one minute more.

Now, gentlemen, nothing can be lost, I repeat, by recommitting this resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means; and if you gentlemen do not want to set a precedent that will come back to plague some of you when you discuss foreign loans in the future, you had better refer this back to the committee, and at least require them to give you some information before you vote on an important matter like this.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. Has the gentleman any knowledge as to the character and value of these securities which it is proposed to release by this joint resolution?

Mr. GARNER. I will tell my friend what I have said already four or five times—that there is no information. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROACH. Would it not have been an easy matter for the committee to have obtained that information?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, yes; it would have been an easy matter to get information on this subject; but the trouble is you have Republican members of your committee who do not seem to want any information. They think that they can make you swallow anything they bring in here.

Mr. ROACH. Has Austria asked for the passage of this joint resolution?

Mr. GARNER. I do not know that she has.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I hope I can furnish some information to the House, but I despair of getting any information into the mind of the gentleman from Texas.

First, I will answer the inquiry which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] directed to the gentleman from Texas as to the nature of these assets. They constitute practically all the property of the Government of Austria, including its revenues; but, just the same, they are really of no value, because they can not be sold to realize anything out of them and because the claims of these other countries are equally a lien upon them.

Mr. CARTER. What are they?

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. What was the object in taking the securities if they were of no value?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Because we took whatever we could get. I think myself we might as well have not taken any.

Mr. ROACH. What are the securities?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is upon what was formerly the crown property——

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will read the report he will not ask that question; that is all in the report. That is what the report is for.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Illinois asked if some of the bonds would not be given up. Certainly not. If the gentleman will read the resolution, he will see that it provides that no bonds shall be given up. In fact, we hold no bonds.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman refers to me as the "gentleman from Illinois," I want to say that I have read the report and the resolution. I want to know where the bonds are going and to whom they are going before we consent to this.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are going to nobody. The resolution does not provide for anything leaving the United States Treasury. If it was not for the misleading statements made by the gentleman from Texas, nobody would have thought of such a thing. All we hold is the obligation set out on page 2 of the report.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What right have you to release the bonds of Austria and then keep them in the United States Treasury?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We do not release the bonds. There are no bonds. We simply extend the time for payment. If the gentleman would read the report and the resolution he would not make such statements or ask such questions.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What are you going to release?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We are going to release nothing but the lien given by the obligation; we only extend the time for payment, and that is contingent on other nations releasing. We do that for the purpose of enabling the Austrian Government to function.

Gentlemen say this is an emotional bill. Perhaps it is. It certainly does appeal to me where men, women, and children are dying of starvation and the Government of Austria has no means of relieving them. That Government has nothing whatever but the assets that are pledged to this Government. These assets are its revenues and ordinary Government property. It has not enough to continue, as stated in the report, until the next harvest, and it has got to borrow from some other source to get funds enough to keep the Government as an entity to furnish supplies to starving people.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. What is the evidence that we hold as assets of the Austrian Government that we are going to release—what is the document, and what do we do to release it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The document is in the hands of the United States Government and is set out on page 2 of the report.

Mr. CARTER. What is the document if it is not a bond?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is not a bond; it is a pledge by the Austrian Government as security and evidence of indebtedness.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the Government of Austria support the children who are starving?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. So far as it can. Austria, as stated by Mr. Hoover, has become the poorhouse of Europe, struggling along without the power to take care of its people, without the power unless we release the assets to carry on organized government.

Mr. WALSH. I thought the poorhouse was in the Volga district in Russia. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It may excite the laughter of some Members of the House that people over there are dying of starvation, but I think we ought to have some compassion for them and relieve them.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. What I would like to find out is, what are the assets that are to be released?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All the Government property and its revenues, as I understand it, pledged for security. The obligation set out on page 2 creates the lien. It is taken jointly by our Government and the other nations mentioned in the resolution. There is no way that we can get anything out of this security, if it can be called such.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN].

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I intend in my time to read a communication I have received from the Women's Legislative Committee. It is as follows:

WOMEN'S LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
March 29, 1922.

Hon. JOHN I. NOLAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. NOLAN: The American Friends' (Quakers) Service Committee, the Women's International League, and the American Committee for Austrian Relief have requested me to express to you their deep appreciation of your support of S. J. Res. 160, introduced in the Senate by Senator LODGE and in the House by Representative LONGWORTH.

The Women's Legislative Committee was fortunate enough to be able to put before each Member of the Senate their reasons for the necessity of the immediate passage of this bill. Owing to the lack of time and to a much larger membership, we are not able to do this in the House. May I therefore ask you to present the following statement, which I believe represents not only the point of view of the four or five thousand women represented in these organizations but of the majority of American women.

The women of America are unable to rest or to enjoy the peace of their own homes while the children of other nations starve. It is impossible for us to gather at our own well-filled tables with our children about us without turning sick at heart at the thought of the famine-stricken mothers and children of Europe. The knowledge of their suffering is ever present with us. The majority of women being occupied in their homes and not being present in your legislatures or your councils often find it difficult to make their opinions felt and their wishes known. It is therefore possible that the deep feeling of interest of women in legislation which looks toward the conservation and betterment of life has not been adequately expressed. We therefore take this opportunity to assure the Members of this body that we have prized beyond our ability to express every generous and disinterested act looking toward the welfare of mankind which has passed this House.

So great is the interdependence of life in this century that if we think only of our own welfare, the starvation and despair of Europe must eventually overwhelm America. The command to "love one another" is therefore not merely a sentiment but an economic necessity. We believe that it is not only in the interest of humanity but of true statesmanship and prudence that this bill, which will enable Austria to have a chance for life, should be immediately passed.

During these recent years the Governments of the various countries have required of women that they agree to, and participate in, a destruction of life unparalleled in history. This war would end all war if what it has cost women could be put into words. Women therefore feel that they have a right to demand of those who represent them in the Senate and the House that the same power be put into the saving of life in time of peace as has been concentrated upon the destruction of life in time of war.

For the past five years the resources of our entire world have been concentrated upon the destruction of human life. With the coming of peace women believe that the saving of life should be the most important concern of the community, and that all other affairs of State should be secondary to the one duty of a Christian nation, which is feed and save the starving people of our world. This is the only bonus which women ask or can accept from their Governments, and they ask this in the name of their universal motherhood and of their irreclaimable dead.

Sincerely yours,

HELEN M. TODD,
Chairman Women's Legislative Committee.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield nine minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know much about this bill or resolution, and I do not think anyone else does. However, I heard a couple of clear and lucid statements, one from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and the other from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]. Mr. LONGWORTH stated the bill would extend the time for payment, but that it was not an important matter, as Austria would never be able to discharge the debt. I thought if Austria could never pay the debt, why take up the time of this House in extending the time five years before the debt is due for the payment of a debt that will never be paid? [Laughter.] I consider the gentleman from Ohio one of the ablest Members of the House, but he evidently got his wires crossed on this question. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], in speaking on this Austrian bond question, made the statement that the bonds are worthless and then immediately stated that the Austrian Government can not function without these bonds. [Laughter.] Now, it occurred to me, How could a government function with worthless bonds? These two statements, to my mind—I may be obtuse—were both as clear as Stygian darkness. [Laughter.] Mr. GREEN denies he made the statement, but I heard him make it. Mr. GREEN, in my opinion, is a gentleman, and I do not believe he realizes what he did say. If he knew he did make the statement, I do not believe he would deny it. He was evidently suffering from a momentary confusion of ideas, probably superinduced by the illuminating information contained in the committee's report on the bill. [Applause.]

There are a great many people in this country who desire to make a Santa Clause out of the United States so as to give the world the privilege of plucking from our national Christmas tree any kind of money or food gifts that it desires. All this agony is for the people of foreign countries, but the matter of relief seems to be of secondary or rather of no consideration for home people with the party of great foreign charity and high moral ideas. I have been taught that charity begins at home, and it seems strange to me why the Republican Party fails to do anything to relieve the suffering people in America, but expends its charity exclusively on foreigners. We have from four to six millions of people out of work in this country, and about 700,000 soldiers of the last war out of work tramping the streets of the cities and the byways of the country seeking employment which they fail to find under this administration of normalcy and universal prosperity, and yet we have loaned money and extended charity to various foreign countries, and recently we gave to Russia $24,000,000. Not so very long ago I introduced a bill in this House for the relief of suffering families of coal miners in various regions of the coal-mining industry. That bill was sent by the Speaker to the Committee on Mines and Mining. That committee permitted me to make a statement as to the merits of the bill, which I did. I requested the committee to grant a hearing on the bill in order that witnesses might be produced to testify as to the suffering condition of coal miners' families in some of the coal fields. That request was denied by the committee for the reason, as the committee ruled, it did not have jurisdiction in the matter, because the bill contained an appropriation and should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I then requested that the appropriation be eliminated and that the committee authorize the appropriation which could then be made by the Committee on Appropriations. This request was refused. I then introduced another bill of the same import and prevailed on the Speaker to assign it to the Committee on Appropriations. I then requested in writing the chairman of that committee, Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, to grant a hearing on the bill. I did not receive a reply to my request. I thought possibly Mr. MADDEN did not receive my first letter, and I wrote him a second letter, making the same request, and forwarded it by registered mail and asked for a return receipt, which I received.

I did not receive any reply to either letter from that militant champion of the laboring man, especially about election time, and the bill for the relief of families of miners pending before his committee sleeps the sleep that knows no waking. The Committee on Mines and Mining refused to consider the bill because it contained an appropriation, and on that account would be subject to parliamentary objection, and yet the bill appropriating $24,000,000 to Russia was reported to the House from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and was subject to the same parliamentary objection, but none was made; and yet the Committee on Mines and Mining would not consider the bill for the relief of the miners because it might be subject to parliamentary objection, which was a tacit admission that such objection would be made. The shibboleth of the Republican Party is millions for Russia and other foreign countries but not a cent for suffering humanity at home, and the veiled threat of parliamentary objection, if necessary, is made to defeat the bill.

As an offset to this bill the Republicans have introduced a resolution for an investigation as to the condition of the coal situation throughout the country. The resolution does not carry any appropriation whatever to relieve the wants of starving coal miners and their families, who can not live on Republican investigations nor exist on Republican promises.

Why does not the Republican Party do something for the poor of our own country? That party never adopts a political platform that does not proclaim in rambling rhapsody its adoration and love for the laboring people of the country, and just before every election that party makes ringing and platitudinous professions about what it will do for the laboring people, but after the election it forgets about all its profuse promises and expends its charities in foreign countries. With from 4,000,000 to 6,000,000 people out of work in the United States, why does not the Republican Party at least attempt to enact some legislation to relieve the situation? With a coal strike impending, the entire alleged statesmanship of the Republican Party from the President down is unable to do anything to prevent a coal strike, although that party imputes to itself a corner on all the intellect and morality of the universe.

Nero fiddled while Rome burned, and the Republican President, the greatest living statesman, spends his time having pictures of Laddie Boy taken and plays golf in Florida while financial disaster is threatening the whole country, and boasts of being the proud possessor of 50 pairs of trousers while suffering coal miners in his own State are half naked and half starved and mine operators have been deprived of business. You are helpless. Yet you will go out in the campaign this fall and will try to deceive the laboring people and mine operators by telling them what you have done for them, whereas you have done nothing. You talk about prosperity. Is there any prosperity in the country with 6,000,000 men out of work, with agricultural products below the cost of production, and while exports have fallen off two-thirds, with factories closed and business practically at a standstill? The President and Mr. Hays are always seeing prosperity, but what they actually see are only Antigonish ghosts, without substance. They see visions by day and dream dreams by night, but their hallucinations will not deceive disinterested, rational people.

So great is the suffering of destitute miners in parts of the country, not because of strikes but because of nonemployment under this administration of normalcy, that charitable women of Washington City have for some time been requesting public donations of food and old clothing and other necessaries to relieve the miners' needs, and many Congressmen have donated garden seed to enable the men in the coal regions to raise gardens on which to exist while the Republican administration looks on complacently and unconcernedly and will not move a finger to assist the miners, nor will it exert itself to avert an impending coal strike, which it could easily do by getting the operators and miners together to arbitrate their differences. A Republican congressional committee, whose chairman is a Chicago millionaire, refuses to grant a hearing on a bill which has no reference to a strike but is designed to give relief to people who are in dire distress and furnish food for hungry, crying children, and at the same time a Republican Congress wrestles in a professed spirit of agony over the hungry in Europe and passes bills carrying appropriations of millions of dollars for their relief. This Congress refuses to consider a bill appropriating a comparatively small sum for relief of humanity in our own land. The police drive the poor off park benches when they seek rest on them for weary, bedless bodies.

In my district there is seldom any trouble between miners and operators, and those differences are usually settled by conference and conciliation in accordance with the policy formulated by Woodrow Wilson. In the county in which I reside, which is one of the largest coal-producing counties in the State of Kentucky, 90 per cent, I suppose, of the white miners are of pure American ancestry, and nearly all the mine operators are natives of the State and are gentlemen of clear business vision, and consequently strikes in that field are rare.

I do not believe there would be any strike were it not for the activities of the Guggenheim interests in West Virginia and other interests of the same type, and despite such activities I do not believe there would be any strike if the operators could get contracts so as to give the miners a reasonable amount of employment, but operators can not keep mines running and can not give miners employment unless they can sell coal. In my district, one of the best in the way of employment for miners in the country, the miners are employed not much more than half of the time, if that much, while in many other parts of the country employment is much less, and my information is that in the Hocking Valley, in the President's own State of Ohio, the miners have not been employed over 50 days in a year, and many of them are ragged and half starved.

Miners can not live on thin air and visionary Republican promises, and operators can not give them employment without contracts for the sale of coal, which they can not obtain under this Republican administration of normalcy which has closed down a great many factories all over the United States and has broken the backbone of prosperity except in the business of speculating in watered stocks and bonds in Wall Street. This administration has practically destroyed our export trade, which has fallen off two-thirds within the last year. If factories in this country are to be kept running, we must sell a large part of our manufactured products to foreign countries, and these factories use coal, and when they close down the demand for coal is very much reduced. If information contained in the public press be correct, this administration intends, instead of seeking a pacific settlement of the coal question, to have coal imported from Europe as ship ballast in the event of a strike, and thereby furnish labor in foreign countries with employment which, of course, will tend to reduce the wages of labor in this country and deprive our domestic operators of business. This Republican administration has replaced American labor in the Panama Canal Zone with British negroes in order to reduce the wages of American labor to carry out the policy of Secretary of War Weeks to reduce the wages of American labor to a parity with European labor. Coal is selling in this country on an average, it has been testified, of $10.41 a ton, while the coal miner in the bituminous fields does not receive a dollar a ton for mining on a pick basis. During the war the operators made big money, but now they are making but little, if any. One part of the public declares the operators are getting all the profits, and another part avers that the miners are getting the profit. In my opinion the men who handle coal after it has left the hands of the operators are the profiteers who receive most of the profits, and in many instances the railroads compel the operators to furnish them coal at cost on the penalty of withholding cars from them. In my opinion neither the miners nor operators are to blame for the retail price of coal being $10.41 a ton, but I believe that situation has been brought about by the railroads and retail dealers and the coal monopolies of West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

On March 13, 1920, at a conference in New York City coal operators signed an agreement with the miners to hold an interstate joint conference with the miners prior to April 1, 1922. Those operators now refuse to abide by their signed agreement and refuse to go into conference with the miners. This refusal, in my opinion, was brought about by the operators of the Republican feudal barony of West Virginia for the purpose of taking business away from operators in other fields and reducing wages below a living standard.

I do not believe operators in the western Kentucky fields would be partners to this transaction if they were not necessarily forced to it through self-defense. West Virginia is without a republican form of government, and about the only law executed in that State is the will of the Guggenheim and similar interests which has adjusted wages downward until the wages of most miners in that State are less than $300 a year, and the business of operators in other fields nearly ruined and the public liberally fleeced in coal prices.

Strikes are always financially hurtful to employer and employee and should never occur if they can possibly be avoided, and they generally can if both sides to strike controversies would meet in a proper spirit of conciliation, as was demonstrated during the administration of Woodrow Wilson. The laborer is worthy of his hire and should have not only a living wage but should receive sufficient remuneration to educate his children and lay by something for old age and also misfortune which may overtake anyone. Not only should the laborer receive proper compensation but the employer should receive a fair profit on his investment, and if this spirit prevails in adjustment of differences between employers and employees strikes would soon be a thing of the past.

Austria owes the United States $25,000,000, and the pending resolution is to extend the time of payment 25 years and release the security Austria has furnished for the payment of the debt, which means that it will never be paid. The assets of Austria will be used to discharge its European indebtedness while the taxpayers of this country will have to foot the bill. It is time for Congress to do something for the destitute of our own land and not expend all its charities on people who were recently trying to destroy our own Government. [Applause.]

There is no question in my mind but what there is a well-defined effort in this country to release the debts owed to us by European countries growing out of the war, amounting to over $11,000,000,000, so that the holders of foreign bonds may be paid their interest on those bonds. Foreign bonds are mostly held by sunshine patriots who did not go into the army during the war, but remained in safety at home and profiteered on the necessities of the public.

Republican leaders in Congress declare there is and has been all during the life of this administration perfect harmony between the President and the House in regard to legislative measures and cite their mere ipse dixit as evidence of how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in peace. I presume they can point with pride to the harmony existing between the President and House on the surtax, the excess-profits tax, the sales tax, the bonus bill, and many other measures as convincing proof of the truth of their declaration. The harmony between the President and the House on legislative matters is about like that existing between two tom cats flung across a clothes line with their tails tied together.

The working man wants employment that he may buy bread, and instead this administration of normalcy and prosperity gives him a stone and begins a useless and belated investigation of nonemployment in order to cover indifference and inaction in regard to an impending coal strike. The farmer has appealed for relief from agricultural depression and has been given a depression breeding emergency tariff tax, which has restricted the sale and lowered the prices of agricultural products below the cost of production, and to a great extent has deprived him of foreign markets. It has depressed business conditions, closed down many factories and mines, and deprived coal operators of markets for coal. This administration has coddled the soldier and professes to be his best and only friend, but when the soldier asks for a bonus it gives him a pawn ticket and a gold brick. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I do not want the House to think that the entire membership on the Democratic side of the aisle is opposed to this resolution. I for one am distinctly in favor of it. Austria is asking us to extend payment of her debt to the Grain Corporation for 25 years so that she may use her resources to allow her to buy the necessaries of life and feed her people—her starving women and children. If some one on behalf of Austria came into this House to-day with a resolution asking you to give her $24,000,000, stating that her people were starving and crying for food, I do not believe there would be any considerable number of Members present who would refuse to give her that sum. She is not asking that. She is asking you to grant her time—to waive for a time our lien—so that she may buy food for her people, and that food is to come largely, almost entirely, from this country. I speak on this question largely because I was in Austria immediately after the war. I found conditions there such that the hearts of this House would go out to those people, not only to the extent of extension of time but to the extent of giving them funds, if necessary.

When we realize that Austria has been deprived of all her rich possessions and left with insufficient territory to produce food for her people; that the coal and iron mines upon which she thrived in years gone by are all practically contained in Czechoslovakia, now a separate and distinct nation, with scarcely the ties of friendship; that she is no longer connected with the countries of the world in commerce and trade, because that portion of her territory with the seaport of Trieste is likewise in another country, it can scarcely be wondered at her financial condition and distress of her Government and people.

What the future of Austria will be no one can predict, but that it is a dismal outlook is the consensus of opinion. Her people are hard working, industrious, and thrifty. They endeavor to look upon the bright side of life, and are happy and cheerful whenever there is the slightest hope or expectation of success. I hope America may be a bright spot in the life and history of this distressed nation.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have only four minutes. I do not see how we can refuse to pass this resolution. It is not on a parity with the loans we made to the nations to carry on the war. It was a separate and distinct loan, not made for cash, but made for 194,000 tons of flour that we sold them, or that the Grain Corporation sold them. We put no actual money into it, except in the shape of food, and they are asking us to extend time of payment. That is a small matter when we realize that Austria has not and can not pay the interest, much less the principal, of the indebtedness. Such is war, gentlemen.

Czechoslovakia herself, a country which was under the domination and control of the Austrian Empire for centuries, has granted the extension, and if that country, after being subject to such domination and control for all those years, can grant that request, why should not the United States, who feels so friendly and so considerate, not alone for Austria, but has done so much for all the world, act favorably and without delay. The way to bring peace and the way for us to gain friends and to keep peace throughout the world is in the manner we have been doing it, by helping those who need help, and by showing them that while the United States can fight, yet after the fighting is over she is ready to extend a helping hand to those who need it—to feed the hungry and assist the poor. I trust the resolution will be agreed to.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have never known a bill to come from the Committee on Ways and Means affecting the revenues of the country since the Republican Party has been in control of the House when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has not moved to recommit it either by a motion or by request, and I suppose I never will so long as he is in the minority. Much merriment and criticism has been made about figures appearing in the report. The question is asked, What do lira and francs mean? What difference does it make to us? The Finance Committee of the Senate put those figures in the report to the Senate, and we have put them into this report for what they are worth. I suppose it has to do with the depreciated value of those currencies reduced to American dollars. What difference does it make to you or to the people of the country? The point is, that is the claim of the Government of the United States against the Government of Austria, which is for $24,055,708.92. Gentlemen will remember that nearly two years ago a request came to us to appropriate money to purchase supplies to send to Europe to feed the starving in Austria, in Poland, and in Armenia.

After much consideration it was simmered down to 5,000,000 barrels of flour that was then in the possession and the ownership of the Grain Corporation, a Government organization using Government money, spending Government money, and whatever proceeds that came from it belonged to the Government, and, therefore, it is absolutely Government property, money or otherwise. Appeals came to us showing that in Austria they were starving to such an extent that 96 per cent of the women and children sent to the hospitals in Austria died.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I decline to yield just now, please. It was pointed out by communications sent here from American representatives over there that people were starving to death on the streets of Vienna.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me say to the gentleman whether that is true or not it is certainly true those people were starving over there, and if this money, $24,000,000, saved a single life, will you say the money was not well spent? Is there any man in this House inhuman enough if he saw a person before him starving to death, black, white, or brown, to say that money would not be well spent, at least in the eyes of God, if we gave every cent we had to the saving of human life from starving to death?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Briefly, I have very little time, and I would rather not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Did the gentleman make that same argument when he appeared before the Committee on Rules two years ago with reference to the bill presented?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not remember just now my argument—I decline to yield any further—let me answer the gentleman. Whatever argument I made there in favor of the loan I was criticized for it by some gentlemen of this House, but when information came to me that people were starving to death in Poland, in Austria, and in Armenia by the thousands some gentleman said to me in this House, "Why do not you give this money instead of the people's money"? I say the money I have would amount to a mere bagatelle in saving human life that was in great danger of starving to death then, but I said to this gentleman, "You are a wealthy man. Name the amount you give, and by the gods I will double it." [Applause.] This Congress, this House, appropriated 5,000,000 barrels of flour. Great Britain said if the United States Government would furnish the flour, Great Britain, France, and Italy will furnish the remaining supplies to feed the people, and Great Britain will furnish the ships to carry that flour over there and save these starving people. Generously the Congress of the United States appropriated, through the Grain Corporation, 5,000,000 barrels of flour, a kind of flour that our people did not want; it was whole wheat flour, I believe, prepared during the war, wholesome, that would sustain life, and it was sent over there. Those people appreciated it, and it did save human life beyond any question.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. What difference does it make to us whether these other items mentioned are in or not? The securities our Government holds for these obligations are such securities as the Government of Austria are able to give. It includes the forests, Government property of Austria, which our Government and the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Italy, and I believe Belgium, hold a mortgage upon to-day, if you please. These people need loans now to function the Government properly, on which to give securities for loans they so badly need now, and information comes to us that Great Britain, France, and those other nations that joined in contributing to these supplies at that time are willing to release those securities in order to enable Austria to borrow money which is so badly needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The joint resolution will be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the economic structure of Austria is approaching collapse and great numbers of the people of Austria are in consequence in imminent danger of starvation and threatened by diseases growing out of extreme privation and starvation; and

Whereas this Government wishes to cooperate in relieving Austria from the immediate burden created by her outstanding debts: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to extend for a period not to exceed 25 years the time of payment of the principal and interest of the debt incurred by Austria for the purchase of flour from the United States Grain Corporation, and to release Austrian assets pledged for the payment of such loan, in whole or in part, as may in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury be necessary for the accomplishment of the purposes of this resolution: Provided, however, That substantially all the other creditor nations, to wit, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Great Britain, Greece, Holland, Italy, Norway, Rumania, Sweden, Switzerland, and Yugoslavia shall take action with regard to their respective claims against Austria similar to that herein set forth. The Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to decide when this proviso has been substantially complied with.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think at a time when we are dealing with this matter that it is just as well to keep history straight. During the closing days of the Wilson administration a request came from the executive department to make loans to buy food for Austria. A bill was introduced. It went to the Committee on Ways and Means. The Committee on Ways and Means was Republican. They side-stepped it. They reported some kind of a bill and unloaded it on the capacious shoulders of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], chairman of the Committee on Rules. Then they came before the Committee on Rules and asked for a rule to make in order a bill of some sort. The gentleman from Kansas at that time was playing the political game, so finally they sent for Barnes, I believe, a member of the Grain Corporation. He said, "I have the power to send this flour now, what we have, but I want the indorsement of the Congress," and that left a way out for the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Kansas, who were then eternally and everlastingly cussing the President who was then in office. The gentleman from Michigan has a soft, personal heart, but the gentleman from Michigan did not then deal candidly with the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from Michigan said, "We have got to play politics with this thing. Here is an Executive up here whom we are cussing"——

Mr. FORDNEY. Where did the gentleman ever hear me make such a statement as that, either in those words or in those terms or conveying such a sentiment or any such expression in reference to the President?

Mr. ASWELL. Did he say it on the floor?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I am not avoiding any responsibility for what I say. I will ask the gentleman if he did not say it?

Mr. FORDNEY. Not to my knowledge did I ever use such language about the President or with reference to this loan that now is the time to play politics. I do not believe I ever said that in my life on this floor or in committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, if I have done the gentleman an injustice——

Mr. LONGWORTH. As a matter of fact, it was not brought in under a rule but under suspension of the rules, and not a single Republican voted against it, but a substantial number of the Democrats did.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Barnes was told to go on and loan on his own responsibility; send this flour on his own responsibility. There was no bill that ratified his act, even. He had the power. He asked indorsement from the Republican Congress, but did not get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, inasmuch as I see gentlemen arising who seem to desire to interrupt me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. My impression is that we passed it——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Here is what occurred in regard to it. There was a request for a law. The Committee on Ways and Means then passed the buck to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. They had a long hearing in the Committee on Rules, and Mr. Barnes said that he had the authority to do this anyway, and they told him to go ahead and do it and take the responsibility.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is in error as to a part of it, not in what he stated but in remembering all that occurred. We passed the resolution in the House under suspension of the rules, which was approved by the President on March 30, 1920, authorizing the United States Grain Corporation to sell or dispose of flour then in its possession, and so forth, not to exceed 5,000,000 barrels, for cash or on credit, to feed the population of Europe. Under that resolution these obligations were taken.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does it say "to feed the population of Europe"?

Mr. MANN. It says—

as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to relieve populations in the countries of Europe or countries contiguous thereto suffering for the want of food.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I hold in my hand the bill that passed the House, H. R. 12954, a bill providing for the relief of populations in Europe and countries contiguous thereto suffering for the want of food. This bill begins as follows:

That for the participation of the Government of the United States in the furnishing of foodstuffs to populations in Europe and countries contiguous thereto.

That was passed in March, 1920, under suspension of the rules, and substantially all of this side supported it and a substantial part of your side helped to pass it.

Mr. MANN. And it was under that that the obligations arose.

Mr. DENISON. That was the act under which this obligation was made. The bill passed the House on March 15, 1920, with 285 voting for it and 12 against it. I noticed the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] voted for it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course——

Mr. LONGWORTH. And the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] was against it.

Mr. GARNER. The "gentleman from Texas" has been consistent. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the thing to which I wish to direct attention is the manifest purpose of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to play politics with suffering. I doubt if he knows whether there is a starving child in Austria now. Has the gentleman any information about that?

Mr. FORDNEY. I did not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know whether there is a starving child in Austria now?

Mr. FORDNEY. Only by hearsay. I do not know anything about it. I never was there.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So he did not care to investigate this?

Mr. FORDNEY. I did then. We investigated it as best we could. We held hearings. We received letters from overseas, especially from the relief societies, where they pointed out that they saw people starving to death, and I have in my possession a statement made by——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I fully agree with the gentleman that just left the floor that we should keep the record straight. An examination of the record and the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee will disclose that on March 15, 1920, Secretary Glass appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and asked for an appropriation of $150,000,000 for starving people in Austria; that the Ways and Means Committee, or at least the Republican members or the majority thereof, took it up with the Rules Committee under some form of resolution. My recollection is, and I think it will bear investigation, they referred out a bill for $50,000,000 in cash. In discussing the matter with the chairman of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] said if this money is to buy food with, why not send the food, and Mr. FORDNEY agreed with that proposition. And that was the resolution brought out over the protest of the then Secretary of the Treasury, who wanted an appropriation of $150,000,000 in cash. The United States Grain Corporation had flour for which there was no market in this country. It was flour that had been manufactured pursuant to regulations in war time and that was not satisfactory to the consuming public of America in peace time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Gladly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is entirely correct. The Committee on Ways and Means favorably reported, in the first place, House bill 12193, the bill that the gentleman refers to, which appropriated $50,000 in cash. Some difficulty was found in the Committee on Rules as to the advisability of appropriating cash. Then it was stated that the Grain Commission had 5,000,000 barrels of flour on its hands. Then House bill 12954 was introduced, providing for the sale of the flour on credit; and it is the Austrian credit which is the subject matter of this resolution.

Mr. TINCHER. Yes. I will say that it was discussed from the charitable standpoint. There was not anyone who seriously contemplated the possibility of getting any tangible assets in exchange for this flour when the bill was discussed here.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I yield.

Mr. GARNER. Is that any reason why we should by affirmative action tell our debt-funding commission and tell the Governments of Europe that Congress has declared that the policy of remitting the payment of interest and principal for 25 years is a good policy?

Mr. TINCHER. No; and I think that if this resolution provided for that there would not be three men supporting it.

Mr. GARNER. It provides for that very thing.

Mr. TINCHER. Let me tell you the difference between this side of the House and that side. Your Secretary of the Treasury wanted to give them $150,000,000 in cash. We gave them $25,000,000 worth of flour. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] has his policies. What are they? We are confronting a crisis in the form of a coal strike, and you have on your side but one man with the nerve sufficient to attempt to care for that crisis with a specific remedy. What is it? It is to appropriate out of the Federal Treasury money to feed the strikers. He criticizes the committee presided over by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] for not doing more than returning to him a registry receipt in reply to a letter on that subject which the gentleman from Kentucky had sent him. I suppose if the party of the gentleman from Kentucky were in power, his party would favor the granting out of the Treasury money to reimburse the owners of the coal mines, and enable the people who use the coal to pay their taxes, and let them have their strike. I say it is regrettable that under the laws of this country and under the rules and regulations of the Post Office Department it was possible for BOB THOMAS to even get a return receipt for the letter that he sent to MARTIN MADDEN. [Laughter.] That is a good sample of the difference in the statesmanship and leadership on the different sides of this House. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. COCKRAN. I have but one regret at the course which this debate has taken. I am afraid that the rather lively historical discussion to which we have been listening may becloud to some extent the very obvious intention to do right which governs both sides of the Chamber.

I do not know—and I do not care, much—what happened in the past about the creation of this debt, but I am very much concerned about what is happening now and what is likely to happen in the future. As I take it, the question actually before this body is not whether any securities that could by any chance be marketable are to be released so that this country as creditor may dispose of them in other directions to reduce or satisfy this debt, but whether the time to pay that debt shall be extended. The only certificate or evidence of this debt in existence is the written obligation, a copy of which is appended to the report of the committee, and that is simply a formal acknowledgment by the Austrian Government that it owes us a sum amounting to $25,000,000, for payment of which it pledges its revenues. This pledge in no way differentiates the debt from ordinary obligations of a government. For payment of any debt that any government contracts its revenues are always impliedly pledged.

Now, this resolution is a proposal that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the right to extend the time of the Austrian Government for payment of the principal and interest of the particular debt, not to exceed 25 years.

Mr. KING. With no security.

Mr. COCKRAN. There is no security for the debt except this paper. If there is any other security, I have not been able to locate it.

Mr. KING. The paper is secured by the assets.

Mr. COCKRAN. What assets?

Mr. KING. The revenues of the Government.

Mr. COCKRAN. There is nothing in the possession of this Government or any of its officers to be released except this paper. Am I right about that, Mr. Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means? There is no asset of Austria in the possession of this Government that we can release. The only evidence of this debt is this paper.

Mr. FORDNEY. There is Government property in Austria.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am speaking of property here—property available to this Government.

What then is the question before us? Austria admittedly is unable to pay this debt. She will not pay either principal or interest because she can not pay it. If you refuse to pass this resolution, so far as the debt is concerned, you will be in exactly the same condition as if you passed it. You will not obtain payment anyway, because it can not be obtained. What then is the object of this measure, it may be asked? Simply this: If it is passed, you will refrain from formally proclaiming Austria bankrupt. If you do not pass it, she must be adjudged bankrupt, so far as a nation can be adjudged bankrupt. There is only one way by which a nation can be adjudged bankrupt, and that is when she fails to meet a public obligation, satisfaction of which has been demanded by the holder of it. While that demand is withheld there is no failure to meet the obligation and therefore no act of bankruptcy.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If there are no assets to be released, what did the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] mean when he stated just at the conclusion of his remarks that the assets that would be released by this legislation could be hypothecated for other purposes, and that that would aid Austria?

Mr. COCKRAN. I can not undertake to explain the meaning of the gentleman from Michigan. But I can understand this report of the Committee on Ways and Means, and it is the statements it embodies that I am discussing.

Mr. FORDNEY. When I spoke of releasing property I had already stated that it was Government property in Austria on which the Austrian Government as well as ours held a mortgage.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. That is what you proposed to release?

Mr. COCKRAN. The main trouble we are experiencing in this discussion, it seems to me, is the unconquerable disposition of some gentlemen to consider in the spirit of attorneyship measures which should be considered in the spirit of statesmanship. [Laughter.] Gentlemen talk about the obligation of a government as if it were a debt due by one individual to another to secure which a watch was put up with a pawnbroker or shares of stock deposited with a banker. What were described mistakenly by the gentleman from Michigan as assets are not anything that you can put your hands on. Not merely are they nonattainable, they are nonexistent. These so-called assets are future revenues allocated or assigned by the Austrian Government to the payment of a specific debt. But this obviously means the revenues over and above the necessary expenses of the Austrian Government itself. Now, it is exceedingly doubtful if the whole revenue of that Government will suffice to pay its current expenses. It is absolutely certain they will not be sufficient to support the Government and at the same time pay either the principal of the debt or any part of the interest on it. Everybody concedes that. The Austrian Government must be left the means of supporting itself or it can not function. If it ceases to function, it can not collect any revenues whatever. And in that event no part of our debt, either principal or interest, can ever be paid. Here, Mr. Chairman, is a condition that nobody could have anticipated. It is a consequence of war. You are dealing with a country that can not pay its obligations—obligations solemnly contracted, I concede. What is the remedy?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, as I was interrupted, I ask a little additional time to complete what I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I understand the gentleman makes it very clear that the United States could not foreclose if it wanted to.

Mr. COCKRAN. No; certainly not. The very term "foreclosure" is wholly inapplicable to the situation that faces us. When you foreclose, it means you foreclose on something you can get your hands on. I should like to know what there is pledged here that any Government could put its hands on, or just how we could proceed to enforce payment of the debt if we tried?

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ASWELL. What effect will this legislation have as a matter of precedent?

Mr. COCKRAN. If gentlemen would only get the viewpoint of attorneyship out of their heads and realize that they are dealing with a matter that must be approached in the light of statesmanship it would greatly simplify our task. The essence of statesmanship is dealing with events of the future, and therefore without precedent. Attorneyship is the application of rules established from experiences of the past to matters in dispute between individuals. I do not know how we should deal with these debts due by other nations until the question of dealing with them actually arises. They may then be in a position where we can exercise pressure on them, or they may not. We are dealing with conditions without parallel in all human experience. We can not proceed according to fixed rules and invoke a court to enforce what we might call our rights.

We must deal with each situation as we find it. Here is a debt that can not be paid. Suppose we refuse to pass this measure extending the time of payment. Suppose we go as far as we can and demand immediate payment of the debt—the whole debt and all the interest. Payment will not be made. It can not be made. What will be the effect of such procedure? Austria will be formally proclaimed bankrupt. Her currency has already sunk to a point where it is hardly of any value. Reject this proposal—proclaim her formally bankrupt, and at the same time announce that no forbearance will be shown her—what possible chance to restore her credit can then remain? Put this crowning burden upon her and Austria can never recover from the depths which she will have reached; and then this debt of ours is gone beyond any hope of ever collecting it. Even if you were dealing with an individual debtor unable to meet his obligations, but who has some assets which, though not now fluid, yet by a process we call "nursing" might be made valuable in the future—to afford him time in which to realize on them is the obvious policy to pursue. That is the only thing we can do here. We can do Austria infinite damage by refusing to pass this resolution which has become necessary by reason of the situation that has arisen. We can do ourselves no good, but much harm, by refusing to pass it. Its rejection will reduce, if not wholly destroy, all chance of ever obtaining payment of the debt. That being the exact condition, I think I can appeal to patriotism as well as to humanity and to the common sense of the House to pass this resolution.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. I agree with the gentleman as far as the humanitarian aspect of this is concerned, but I should like to have this question answered: Do you believe this body has any constitutional right to vote money out of the Public Treasury for foreign purposes in time of peace?

Mr. CARTER. Charity purposes.

Mr. LAYTON. Well, whether for charity or otherwise, has this body any constitutional right to do that, or to vote money out of the Federal Treasury even for such purposes as the suffering coal miners within this country?

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. LAYTON. I should like to have an answer to my question.

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes; there is no limit to the power of Congress to appropriate money.

Mr. LAYTON. Then the gentleman is not in agreement with the late President Grover Cleveland, who vetoed a proposition looking to the purchase of wheat for certain stricken sections.

Mr. COCKRAN. I was in disagreement with Grover Cleveland more than once in the course of my career. [Laughter.] That, however, is a matter of historical or personal interest, but in no way affecting the question before this body.

Mr. LAYTON. The Constitution has become a purely historical matter. That is what I deplore.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ASWELL. Why not have the commission handle this matter? Why have Congress do it?

Mr. COCKRAN. Whether the matter be left with the Secretary of the Treasury or with a commission of which he is a member is a distinction without much difference. In the first place the commission is not yet in existence.

Mr. ASWELL. Why not wait until it is?

Mr. COCKRAN. The committee introduced this resolution, I assume, because the situation with which it deals is urgent.

Mr. ASWELL. If there is no chance of collecting our debt, how is it urgent?

Mr. COCKRAN. If you refuse to pass this bill you proclaim the insolvency of Austria, and that may prove fatal to her. It is true that you will only be proclaiming formally an insolvency which exists actually, but formal proclamation of it may, nevertheless, be fatal to Austria's ever recovering its credit.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The gentleman has made an admirable presentation of this case. Is it not true that America invites the neighbors of Austria to join with her in this?

Mr. COCKRAN. We make it a condition.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman from Virginia, Judge MOORE, has called my attention to the fact that the phraseology of the resolution is defective in this respect: It says "provided, however," that other nations agree to extend the same forbearance as this country. He thinks it ought to be written "on condition, however," and I would be perfectly willing to offer that amendment on his behalf.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The debt is not due until 1925, is it?

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not know what time the main obligation is due. I have not looked into that, but the interest is due. It can not be paid. And that being the case, the occasion for passage of this resolution is urgent—of the utmost urgency. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] in his comparison between attorneyship and statesmanship would have us believe that he was including himself and recommending himself very highly in the latter class, when all he has done has been to indulge in a lot of idle prophecy. The report upon this measure, as has been pointed out in debate, leaves it very doubtful what the purpose is in extending the time for the payment of this debt. Although this country is one of our late enemies and suffered severely as the result of the war, in passing this charitable legislation for her benefit I would like to know if the purpose is to permit Austria to again pawn her resources and put them up as security in order that she may pay other nations the demands made by the reparations commission for other nations to whom she owes millions of dollars?

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I have read the report, and I find that these securities contain a provision that the reparations commission shall stand aside and we have the preference. Now, if we pass this bill it restores the lien of the reparations commission and will enable them to come in and get these very revenues.

Mr. WALSH. I think very likely that is the purpose. Nobody here knows, the question has never been asked, the information has never been forthcoming, but I think in view of the conditions industrially that prevail in this country to-day—yes, and agriculturally, despite the fact of some legislation, prices of agricultural articles are slowly rising and increasing—I think it is time that we paid a little attention to conditions here at home [applause] and stop being sympathetic about people who were seeking to destroy our Government only a few years ago. Let us pay a little attention to conditions here and to the restoration of peace and prosperity within our own borders. [Applause.] Of course, you can get well-meaning ladies of charitable societies to write pathetic letters about conditions abroad, but we are not responsible for those conditions. We are responsible to a large degree for conditions existing within our own borders, and the people are going to hold us responsible. They will hold us responsible if we embark on legislation which will put further burdens on the people when they are carrying this tremendous load of taxation, made necessary in no small degree because we have been so generous in doling out money. Why, all any foreign nation has to do is to write to some of our officials that people need milk and bread or food or money, and it finds instant response in the Congress or the committee. We go to work and appropriate by the millions, and I object to the United States of America being considered the almoner of the world. [Applause.] It is time we put a stop to it.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is not valid in this case. We are not called upon to make a new appropriation. We are not called upon to expend anything. Nor are you called upon to give away anything. Austria is powerless and bankrupt. By the terms of peace made after the World War, she has been crippled and mutilated. A great deal of the mining territory of Austria has been taken away. The grain-producing section of Austria has been largely separated from her. She has been deprived of important railroad centers. She is a mere wreck. For that matter, no European country has been in a position to strictly insist on the terms of peace made with Austria. Even France has been more liberal toward Austria than she has toward Germany, one of the reasons for it being that France fears the movement on the part of Austria to ally herself with Germany. By showing friendship to the destitute people of Austria, France seeks to delay the day when Austria and Germany will unite, or to prevent it altogether. You are not losing anything by the passage of this bill.

Mr. KING. You are losing securities.

Mr. LONDON. Well, let us see what security you lose. Under the obligations now possessed by the United States the bonds are a first charge on the assets and revenues of Austria. The present revenues are insufficient to carry on the ordinary expenses of the Austrian Government. So far as the assets are concerned, I assume that some forests, some of the salt mines, and, if I remember right, the railroads are national property in Austria and are subject to a first charge. It would be an act of international vandalism for the United States to take possession of the State and national enterprises of Austria. Let me make this suggestion. The $25,000,000 was given for bread to men and women and children who were starving. The debt should be wiped out right now by act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the present revenues of Austria were not sufficient to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government.

Mr. LONDON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. If that is so, how will the release of these assets permit the Austrian Government to function and borrow money as stated in the report by the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman want to explain the action of the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, no; that is too big a job. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONDON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COCKRAN. The obvious purpose of that is to enable the Austrian Government to use these revenues for its own expenses so that it may function, and if they be insufficient for that purpose to borrow some more. At the present time the Austrian Government has no power to use its revenues for any other purpose than to try to meet this debt, but even using them solely in that direction will not meet this debt. This measure leaves the money to be derived from revenues free for any purpose that will maintain the Austrian Government in operation.

Mr. MANN. If the revenues are not sufficient to pay the running expenses of the Government, how will they give any credit to anybody to borrow money?

Mr. COCKRAN. She is probably able to meet her running expenses to-day, but she certainly will not be if denied the use of these revenues.

Mr. LONDON. Oh, no; she is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. I understand the situation to be this: Almost all European governments are treating Austria with some degree of consideration. They realize that Austria has been completely disrupted by the war. They are extending favors to the Austrian Government which they do not extend to the other defeated powers. It is quite likely that if this lien is removed private capital, private financiers, may loan their money to the Austrian Government, and it is quite likely that we are legislating in favor of private interests; but we can not help that. That is not my purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. KING. Are any of these suffering people going to get any of this money, in the opinion of the gentleman?

Mr. LONDON. In my opinion one of two things may happen: One that the United States by saying to the other governments, "We are ready to extend the date of payment for 25 years, and we want you to do likewise; we do not want you to crush Austria; we want to give Austria a chance to develop during the next 25 years," will give Austria a new lease of life. Another thing that might happen is that this will enable private capital to loan money to Austria and take possession of her assets.

Mr. KING. It will also enable Austria to pay certain creditors of hers from whom she borrowed money during the war.

Mr. LONDON. If the gentleman will examine the proceedings of the other countries toward Austria he will find that Austria has been treated as a favorite child, because her utter helplessness makes it impossible to exploit her. Her misery is her strongest protection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the gentleman state whether these securities are of such a character that they would be accepted by any banking institution as security for a loan to Austria?

Mr. LONDON. Private financiers have been loaning money to China and other dependent countries with railroad concessions or mines as security for the loan. Austria possesses forests, salt mines, railroads, the telegraph and telephone, power work, and so forth. These assets can certainly be a valuable form of security so far as private capital is concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are these assets included in the securities that are a basis for this lien?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

The debt arising out of a loan made for the purchase of bread for a starving people should be canceled. Whether private capital or the people of Austria as a whole will benefit by the cancellation of the debt will depend upon the question whether the Austrian people have sufficient political consciousness to control the nation's assets in the interest of the entire people.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this resolution and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate upon this resolution and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that I can say what I want to say in five minutes, but I shall do the best I can. I regret very much that there has been no hearing on this resolution, apparently in either House of Congress, no facts stated in connection with it which cover the subject. The report in the case contains some unintelligible and misleading figures which gentlemen excuse themselves for by stating that they copied them from a Senate report. It is natural that they might be that, I suppose, but that is not a very good reason for copying them. However, we are confronted with the proposition that we have to vote on this question without sufficient information, and I am going to vote for it.

Here is the situation: Two years ago this country joined with 12 other countries in furnishing to the depleted and dismembered country of Austria supplies to keep her people from starving. We gave flour. I do not know what the other people gave, but they gave something. Austria gave a mortgage, practically speaking, as a lien upon her assets and her income to all of the 13 countries for the amounts which they had advanced in money or property. This mortgage was authorized by the Reparations Commission, so that our lien came ahead of the payment to the Reparations Commission. They agreed to pay us 6 per cent interest semiannually. The time for that first interest payment has long since passed. We would not be declaring Austria bankrupt by failing to do this. Austria is bankrupt so far as paying our debt is concerned. She has not paid us. But that is not all. We know that she is not now going to pay us. We know that she can not possibly pay us either the interest or the principal as provided in the bond. I do not know just how it will affect the payment of the reparations by Austria. Probably Austria will not pay much in the way of reparations, but if we extend our time, we postpone our lien. Knowing that Austria owes us money, knowing that she is not going to pay us at the time the money is due, according to the bond, will we have the grace to join with 12, or a substantial part, if anybody knows what that means, of 12 other nations, in remitting the payment for 25 years, probably forever, and let them have a little more courage to try to put themselves on their own feet? Will we give them our blessing or will we hold over them a threat which will not do us any good but which will do them great harm? I think we can afford to say to them, "Do the best you can, you have our good wishes at least." [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that I thoroughly understand the situation. This is how I look upon it: As a result of our sale to Austria of $34,000,000 worth of flour, we hold from Austria a first lien on her revenues. If we release that lien, we place the Reparation Commission of the allied nations as a first lien holder on the revenues of Austria. The question now arises, What will the Reparation Commission do with any revenues that may be collected from Austria? Will that commission distribute those revenues among the allied nations, creditors of Austria, under the treaty which authorized the collection for distribution, or will the Reparation Commission authorize the use by Austria of the funds which we release and which they may collect?

I have listened to this debate. I have received very little information either from the debate or from the report of the committee. I have reached my own conclusion after serious thought. I am as sympathetic as anybody, but we have many people in America where our sympathy might properly be extended. I do not believe we will help Austria by releasing the obligation of Austria to the United States. We may not help ourselves by continuing to hold the obligation, but I prefer to take the chances of holding the obligation than to release it with the uncertainty of what will become of Austria through the Reparation Commission, for I do not believe the American people will justify action on our part that will release the Austrian obligation to America and then place Austria in the hands of the Reparation Commission and enable that commission to collect the obligations of Austria under the treaty terms, not one dollar of which is to come to America.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman perhaps has overlooked one thing, and that is the mortgage, so called, we hold is in reality a second mortgage, and that is subject to the claims the Reparation Commission might have for the payment of expenses of the commission and the payment of occupying troops, and the Reparation Commission has never undertaken to enforce that claim that is ahead of ours.

Mr. MADDEN. There ought not to be any occupying troops in Austria by any nation in the world if she is prostrate, and there ought not to be any obligation anywhere that will compel Austria to pay for the maintenance of troops of the Allies, and if that is the result of our releasing the obligation that we hold, that she is to be compelled to pay for the maintenance of allied troops there, I am for one against the release. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote to recommit this bill. If the Austrian obligation was one that was due immediately, I might be willing to vote for it, but it is clear this obligation does not mature until the 1st of January, 1925. The mere fact that the Austrian Government has failed to meet some interest payments does not mean the repudiation of the debt any more than the fact that Great Britain has not met its interest payments upon its indebtedness and France and Italy have not met their interest payment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will permit, we do not undertake to feed any of those countries. Here we are sending flour to feed a country, and we have tied a string to it, and——

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman will permit, I will get to that feature of the matter in just a moment, I hope. Now, what is the situation? The Austrian Government signed the treaty of St. Germain, and under that treaty it was placed under the Austrian section of the Reparation Commission, and therefore when this flour was sold to the Austrian Government and these other food supplies were furnished by the different nations, the representatives of these nations went to the Reparation Commission, and as a prior condition to the sale they demanded that the commission allow a first lien to secure the payment for these food supplies. Now, if we take this action as proposed in the bill to-day, what is the result? We immediately release our lien and restore the priority of reparation claims. Now, let us see from the contract agreement itself what the obligation is:

> Pursuant to the powers conferred upon it the Reparation Commission has authorized the Austrian Government, under the control of the Austrian Reparation Commission, to issue the present series of bonds, which shall be a first charge upon all the assets and revenues of Austria, and shall have a priority over costs of reparation under the treaty of St. Germain.

Now, immediately when this bill becomes a law we lose our priority of lien and the lien of the Reparation Commission becomes effective on these very same assets which we propose here to release.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. In just a moment. I am opposed to doing that. If we are going to have a commission to settle up these obligations of indebtedness with the European countries, why not turn over this obligation to the commission to suggest a settlement that will be satisfactory to the United States? The present arrangement is a fair one. The present lien provides that when the Austrian Government takes in its revenues that it shall not be allowed to prefer one creditor over the other. Great Britain loaned $16,000,000 at the same time we loaned $24,000,000. France loaned $16,000,000; Italy also, I believe, loaned the same amount; and it was provided in the obligation that whenever payment was made, either of interest or principal, that a ratable portion be paid to each of the other nations, thereby preventing preference of creditors. That is fair. The United States Government has no complaint to make against that arrangement. But I am not willing to vote for this bill, and without any definite information as to what will be the effect of postponing the indebtedness for 25 years and restoring the preference lien of the Reparation Commission.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Does not the proviso guard against that? Does not the proviso stipulate that any creditor nation, which includes the United States, interested in reparation should take similar action with regard to their respective claims?

Mr. BLACK. No; if the gentleman will permit, that language refers to a similar claim for food supplies. At the time we made these loans to the Austrian Government other European nations also participated in the loans for food supplies, and this language does not refer to the reparation indebtedness, but only for the same kind of indebtedness as is referred to in this bill.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the proposition before the committee is a very simple one. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] warns the House that if this measure is passed it will give a precedent to the Allied Debt Commission to deal with the question of the allied debt to the United States and that the commission will extend all debts 25 years. No proposition could be more absurd, because the act which created the commission gives this authority:

> That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of any such bonds or obligations due to the United States of America beyond June 15, 1947.

That is 25 years approximately.

The provision of the pending resolution is:

> That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to extend, for a period not to exceed 25 years, the time of payment of the principal and interest of the debt incurred by Austria for the purchase of flour from the United States Grain Corporation.

This law does not extend the debt for 25 years.

So far as the provision of time for that loan is concerned the two measures are substantially identical. The only difference between this measure and the authority granted in the funding bill is that by the express terms of this bill the Secretary of the Treasury acts alone. Under the provisions of the other bill the commission would have absolute authority to do everything that is authorized by this measure. And the gentlemen who are objecting to this measure on the ground that we are authorizing something to be done that ought not to have been done are wasting their breath, because we have already given such authority to a commission.

Mr. DENISON. This resolution authorizes the remission of the interest for 25 years, whereas we would not expect the commission to do that.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What we might expect the commission to do, I do not know, but this measure in terms gives the Secretary of the Treasury substantially the same power as is contained in the other measure. The only thing this does is that it expressly authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to release the lien on these assets, but the general power contained in the measure which created the commission authorized the extension of the time of payment of those debts, upon such terms and security as they should determine.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I can not yield in five minutes. The gentlemen say the Secretary of the Treasury is going to proceed to do something that he ought not to do; that he is going to give up a lien he ought not to give. Do not forget this is merely authority for the Secretary of the Treasury to act. This resolution does not extend the time of payment or release the lien. It merely authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to deal with the proposition, and in dealing with the proposition and dealing with the Allies, and having in mind the policy of the commission, the Secretary of the Treasury is going to deal with this whole proposition in a sensible and sane way. It may be very essential that the power to deal with this situation should be left with the Secretary of the Treasury so that it can be done now. It is largely an administration matter, and we should grant the authority within reason that the administration needs. Some gentlemen advance the proposition that three of the five members of the commission have been named, and hence they could act. We know, as a matter of law, that the commission is not created until the five members are named and confirmed. The three could not act now. This measure simply grants to the Secretary of the Treasury, who will be one of the commissioners, the power and authority to act now and deal with this proposition in the way substantially as authorized by the general act dealing with these debts.

Mr. LONDON. Is not the work of the commission limited to the debts of allied nations? It has nothing to do with this debt whatever.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman is in error about that, for the law creating the commission included debts owing to the United States Grain Corporation, and this is one of those debts.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, most of the arguments that have been made in opposition to this bill are based upon the utterly false theory that it involves a new obligation when, as a matter of fact, the precise contrary is the case. What is this transaction? It is simply this: We authorized, some two years ago, the Grain Corporation to sell to the Government of Austria any portion of 5,000,000 barrels of flour. It appropriated no money from the Treasury whatever. It created no charge whatever on the Government. It simply sold to the Government of Austria, to feed their starving people, $24,000,000 worth of flour that could not be disposed of in this country. Now, what are we undertaking to do to-day? We are undertaking to extend the time of the credit that Austria established at that time. And what was that? Merely an obligation to pay us $24,000,000 on the 1st of January, 1925, with interest semi-annually. We received no interest, and we probably never will. When the 1st of January, 1925, rolls around, what are we going to do about it? It is true that the assets of Austria and her revenues are pledged by this obligation, but when the 1st of January comes around, what are we going to do about it? If Austria refuses to pay any of the principal, are we going to go into Austria and take physical control of the Austrian railroads and the Austrian forests and the Austrian treasury? The thing is too absurd to talk about for a moment. It is true that we have a lien on those assets, but it is a lien upon which none of us, this country or any of the other countries that cooperated with us, would ever think of foreclosing. And all we are doing is to extend for 25 years the payment of interest we can not get and the payment of a principal that we will never levy upon.

Now, gentlemen, this transaction takes place upon the authority of a bill which passed this House under suspension of the rules, with 285 votes, as I recall, for it, and only 12 against it. We are simply extending the period at which that loan is due and remitting the interest upon it. It was an act then of generosity. That is all that we need consider now in this connection. The Senate has passed this bill unanimously. Do we want to be outdone in generosity by the Senate of the United States. Shall we be outdone in generosity by the other nations who have assisted Austria in her hour of need? The measure through which this transaction was created was based upon a sentiment of Christian charity, and that ought to be the spirit to animate us to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, let me inquire of the Chairman how much time is remaining and who has the time?

The CHAIRMAN. There are 11 minutes remaining, 1 minute of which the gentleman from Ohio has and 10 minutes to be disposed of on recognition by the Chair.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if there is no objection, I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from West Virginia divide that time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said about the extension of the credit that created the obligations to this Government from the Government of Austria. Poland was connected with it in the original application for a loan to purchase food. The original application was one for $150,000,000. That was the question that came first before the Committee on Rules. That committee did not see fit to make in order a bill to come on the floor of the House with its authority for that amount. It was finally reduced to $50,000,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Was not that due to the fact that it was stated by Mr. Barnes that they had authority to deal with this flour without any legislation necessary?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am about to give the record. Then for the purpose of forcing the Committee on Rules to do what they did not think was necessary to be done, one of the greatest arrays of talent appeared before that committee that had ever appeared before any committee of this House, including ministers of the gospel of all denominations and the highest dignitaries of the church in this country, and in addition to that a woman who had made a success on the stage, who had been in Austria, in Poland and in all that country where the greatest of the suffering was. Her appearance before the committee was a success. I find from the hearings here that the chairman of the Committee on Rules made a statement at the conclusion of her statement that nobody with anything else than a heart of stone could listen to what she had to say without being moved. I remember very distinctly giving her tears, but I did not feel ready at that time to give cash, because I had wired early that morning for Mr. Barnes to come down from New York. We waited until after 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when Mr. Barnes arrived and was put on the stand, and testified that he had 5,000,000 barrels of flour that he had been attempting to sell, and that he could not sell it. I asked him if that flour could be immediately shipped. He said it could if he had the authority. He did not quite feel that he had the authority to sell it to Austria and Poland because the time for the advertisement of its sale for cash had not expired, and he did not feel that he had authority to sell it on credit, and suggested that if the Congress would give him the authority to sell it on credit that could be done, and that he might do it in any event.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is important to keep the record clear. My recollection is that Mr. Barnes stated that in view of the fact that the Grain Corporation and the administration had been under such severe criticism, while he did not doubt his authority, he would like to have the approval of the Congress for exercising it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think that is correct. Then I sent for the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and stated to him what had been stated by Mr. Barnes; and a bill was prepared and was passed under suspension of the rules on the next suspension day.

That is the history of the matter; and it was all done then for charity. There was not an idea that the Government of the United States would ever get back a dollar, although it was stated in the hearing before our Committee on Rules that the people of Austria were willing to pawn the crown jewels, pawn anything that they had under the old dominion, for food for the then starving people. We authorized the sale of flour that was not salable in this country on credit and such time as they required. That was done. I see no reason why we should now quibble over extending the time for payment. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Six minutes.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I thought I would have five minutes, but the time is limited and I will take only a minute to state my position.

I did not vote for the original bill granting this loan to Austria because I was not here. I was at my house ill at that time. I do not think I would have voted for it if I had been here. But I am not willing to vote for the pending resolution at this time. I think it ought to be recommitted. I, for one, have not sufficient information to know what I am doing, and I do not think the rest of the House has. We do not know what the facts are over there. I think the matter can at least be deferred until next session. The debt will not have matured by that time, and possibly our Foreign Debt Commission will have been completed and gotten to work. I think the commission can deal with this matter more efficiently than the Congress anyway, because they would know what terms and conditions could be obtained. I do not think we should release what securities we have and let them be turned over to other nation. Therefore I think I shall vote against the resolution.

If we are going to give this money to Austria as a charity we ought to at least see to it that it goes to the Austrian people who need it. We ought not to release our securities in order to permit Austria to use them to satisfy other creditors. I fear that will be the result of this resolution. Therefore I shall vote to recommit it to the Committee on Ways and Means for further consideration, with the hope that the committee can at a later time give us more light and information so we can act intelligently.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen talk about referring this resolution back to the Committee on Ways and Means for further information. There is no further information that can possibly be given. The nature of the security is stated on the second page of the report. It is all the assets that Austria has, assets that that nation itself is not able to turn into funds, and certainly we shall not be able to do anything with them.

Gentlemen have asked us where we would be in case the Reparation Commission undertook to get reparations from Austria. There is no way of finding out. We may assume that inasmuch as the Reparation Commission has now a prior lien, but has not enforced it from Austria, it will not undertake to collect reparations. In fact, it would be useless to attempt anything of the kind.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Would it not be extremely unfortunate for Congress to release this security and then have the Reparation Commission grab the security and devote it to the payment of awards?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Reparation Commission can not do that. Austria can not possibly raise funds to meet its obligations by its taxes or the sale of property or otherwise. The only thing it can do is to continue to issue more obligations, and if it can find any government charitably inclined, such government might extend further aid.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Has Austria asked for this?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; Austria has asked for this on her bended knees. The other countries in Europe have put us to shame and disgrace. England has let Austria have more money than we have. France has let Austria have more money than we have; and even Italy, bankrupt and poverty-stricken as few countries are, has let Austria, its hereditary enemy, have more money than we have, and they offer, along with us, to release whatever securities they have.

Gentlemen, are we, the richest country in the world, to stand back and say that these countries that have suffered so much in the war are to do more for humanity, more for the starving people of Austria, more for those who are suffering so much, than we? Shall Austria's ancient enemy which has so much to forgive be more merciful than we are?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] admirably answered the argument which he himself made. As he says, we have nothing from which we can force collections. This lien is of no value. We can not get anything out of it. There is no way in the world by which we or any other nation can realize a cent on it; but we can give Austria an opportunity to say whether some other nation will be a little more generous in the future and continue some further advances, more as a matter of charity, than in the expectation of receiving anything in repayment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The gentleman speaks of the liberality of England, France, and Italy. They can afford to be liberal with our money, can they not? They owe us $11,000,000,000 now, and we are unable to collect a nickel from them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are not liberal with our money; they are liberal with their own money. They are taking the money out of their own treasury. What they got of us they spent in this country for munitions and supplies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Why do they not pay their debt to us first?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Because they believe we can wait better than a starving people. They advanced this money to Austria because of the pity they took upon her people, whose condition would almost move a heart of stone. That is why they advanced this money. They had no more hope of getting it back than we had.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. If we pass this resolution, how will it help the starving people of Austria?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Austria believes that if we release this security it may get more funds elsewhere. At least the Government of Austria can go on and continue to function, and it can not go on under present conditions. If we refuse this extension their Government will cease to exist, and the last condition of these wretched people will be worse than the first.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An amendment offered by Mr. CABLE: Page 2, line 3, after the word "corporation," strike out the comma and the balance of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof a period.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KETCHAM: Page 2, line 3, after the word "corporation," strike out the comma and insert a colon, and strike out all the language following down to and including the word "resolution" in line 7.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, in support of my amendment I desire to point to what I regard as a dangerous provision of the resolution which has not been referred to very extensively in the course of the debate. A live issue before the country just now is the cancellation of the foreign loans. It is openly charged in the debate on the floor that certain influential House Members favor cancellation, and propaganda is unquestionably very common in support of such a proposition. With this fact in mind, I ask your careful attention to the language of this resolution which my amendment would strike out:

And to release Austrian assets pledged for the payment of such loan, in whole or in part, as may in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury be necessary for the accomplishment of the purposes of this resolution.

While the report of the committee well says that "this loan rests upon an entirely different basis from the allied loans made during the war"; yet a loan is a loan, whatever may be its purpose, and I can not escape the conviction that the language "release Austrian assets pledged for the payment of such loans" will rise up to plague us should the proposed cancellation of foreign loans ever get beyond the propaganda stage. It would not require much ability to frame up an argument for cancellation of loans to an ally based upon this proposed official abandonment of our last ray of hope of recovering $24,000,000 loaned to Austria, so recently our bitter enemy.

I offer this amendment with the hope that it will serve notice that the House views with disfavor anything that offers the slightest encouragement to those who would cancel our foreign loans. I am in sympathy with the extension proposed in the resolution, but I do not believe that the language which my amendment seeks to remove is wise in view of the cancellation agitation already referred to, and I hope my amendment will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONDON: Strike out line 4, on page 1, and all appearing on page 2, and insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following: "Cancel and discharge the debt incurred by Austria for the purchase of flour from the United States Grain Corporation and to release Austrian assets pledged for the payment of such loan."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 2, noes 86.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration S. J. Res. 160, authorizing the extension, for a period of not to exceed 25 years, of the time for the payment of the principal and interest of the debt incurred by Austria for the purchase of flour from the United States Grain Corporation, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the joint resolution to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a motion to recommit the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the resolution?

Mr. WALSH. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the joint resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means, and on that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to recommit the resolution and on that he moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 88, noes 83.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair thinks there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members. As many as favor the motion to recommit will as their names are called vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 114, nays 189, answered "present" 1, not voting 126, as follows:

Mr. Kendall with Mr. Ten Eyck.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 142, noes 50.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote and make the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withhold that to permit a suggestion?

Mr. BLANTON. If it will not interfere with a record vote. I do not want to lose the right for a record vote.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I was going to suggest that the record was made on the motion to recommit and that a further roll call is merely delaying the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. A "no" vote on the motion to recommit is not an "aye" vote on the passage of the measure.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order that we have just had a record vote and no business has intervened in the meantime.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not care to hear the gentleman from Texas. The Chair thinks that the gentleman has a right to have a quorum present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-three Members present, a quorum. The ayes have it and the resolution is passed.

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENDING CERTAIN PROVISIONS TO CERTAIN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report for printing under the rule on the bill (H. R. 9633) to extend the provisions of section 2305 of the Revised Statutes, and of the act of September 29, 1919, to those discharged from the military and naval service of the United States and subsequently awarded compensation or treated for wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9633) to extend the provisions of section 2305, Revised Statutes, and of the act of September 29, 1919, to those discharged from the military or naval service of the United States and subsequently awarded compensation or treated for wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
JOHN E. RAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
T. J. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9633) to extend the provisions of section 2305, Revised Statutes, and of the act of September 29, 1919, to those discharged from the military or naval service of the United States and subsequently awarded compensation or treated for wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on.

The effect of said action is to restore the language of the bill as it passed the House.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
JOHN E. RAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I present herewith for printing under the rules a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Army bill, passed this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, as I am particularly interested in the rivers and harbors section of the bill under discussion, and the time allotted for debate on this section being too limited to give opportunity to all of the Members of the House desiring to be heard on the same, although my statement will be very brief, I have requested the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The appropriation carried by this section will, I hope, take care of, in part at least, the project carried in the rivers and harbors bill recently reported to the House, which is of the greatest possible importance to the industrial development of New Jersey. It is the project known as the New York and New Jersey channels. The improvement proposed is a channel, 30 feet deep, from the main ship channel north of Sandy Hook through Raritan Bay via Seguine Point and Arthur Kill to Kill Van Kull, with channels north and south of Shooters Island through Kill Van Kull to deep water in upper New York Bay, and a channel, 30 feet deep, to the Pennsylvania Railroad coal piers at South Amboy. Justification for the deepening of the Raritan Bay Channel is found in the present and prospective commerce of South Amboy and Perth Amboy and of Arthur Kill between Perth Amboy, Chrome, Roosevelt, and Carteret, or points above. Carteret is about the same distance from Sandy Hook by either the northerly or southerly entrance to Arthur Kill, but with the same depth in both entrances vessels from points some distance above Carteret would probably use the Raritan Bay entrance rather than the congested waters of Kill Van Kull, upper New York Bay, and the Narrows. The relief of these main channels of New York Harbor is one of the important objects to be attained by the proposed improvement of the channel through Raritan Bay. On Arthur Kill there are many important industries which find the present channel depth insufficient to accommodate the class of vessels that are most economical for their business, and a depth of 30 feet is desired in this channel and also in the channels north and south of Shooters Island. The total commerce of all three waterways under consideration amounts to approximately 40,000,000 tons a year, of which about 26,000,000 tons pertain to Arthur Kill. In view of the steady increase of commerce and the remarkable growth of the industries located along this waterway, it is believed by the Engineering Corps of the War Department that the further improvement of these channels, with a view to securing a depth of 30 feet and a width of 400 feet throughout, should be undertaken without further delay.

The deepening of this waterway is also a matter of the greatest importance to the shipping interests of this country. It will permit many large plants located along this waterway to load and unload cargoes directly into ocean-going vessels and do away with the enormous delay and expense of lighterage, as well as allowing these vessels to load directly their coal and oil fuel. About 60 per cent of the Arthur Kill traffic is coal from the coal-dock terminals at South Amboy and Port Reading. The Standard Oil Co. now discharges its deep-draft vessels at Bayonne and pumps to its refinery at Bayway, whereas these vessels would go direct to Bayway if they had a channel 30 feet deep. The tonnage in oil at the present time, if my information is correct, is well over 2,000,000 tons annually.

The magnitude and importance of the commerce of this waterway are well known. Gradually its banks are being occupied by industrial plants of various kinds, and it seems practically certain that traffic will continue to increase. Manufacturing and terminal sites on navigable waters adjacent to New York Harbor and vicinity are becoming scarce, and those unoccupied, with the deepening of this channel, will soon be in demand. It seems to be thoroughly understood that great industrial development on both the New York and New Jersey sides of the improved waterway is certain to follow.

In view of the steady increase of commerce and the remarkable growth of the industries located along this waterway and its tributaries and the stimulation for a still greater industrial growth the improvement will bring it is therefore thought that ample justification is found for the expenditure of the funds necessary to provide channels of the depth and width recommended by the War Department and that the project should be adopted without delay.

In this brief statement I have quoted in part from the report of the engineers of the War Department. Their first survey for the project was made in 1915. And so you will note that the proposed improvement has been on the way for the past seven years. It is now considered one of the most important projects before the department. It is estimated that it will take several years to complete it.

When these deeper channels are completed it will mean that ocean-going steamers can go directly to these various terminal points, unload and load their cargoes to and from European ports, and thereby greatly lowering the cost of transportation not only for the steamship lines but for the land carriers as well.

In view of these facts, fellow Members, I trust the amendment for the increased appropriation as offered by Mr. DEMPSEY will receive your vote and become a part of the pending legislation.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon Senate Joint Resolution 160, the Austrian relief resolution, passed this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, on last Wednesday the House passed the bill, which had previously gone through the Senate, conditionally granting Austria an extension of 25 years within which to pay the American Government the debt of $25,000,000 she owes us for flour sold her and "to release Austrian assets pledged for the payment of such loan." The bill met no serious opposition in the Senate, but was strongly contested in the House.

Having voted against the bill I desire, by way of extension of remarks, to state my reasons therefor. In my judgment the bill constitutes the entering legislative wedge, being driven home by mauls in the hands of powerful international bankers, of those who are behind the movement to bring about a cancellation of the huge debt of more than $10,000,000,000 owing us by foreign Governments. That such a plan was on foot I long suspected. More recently insidious propaganda has been percolating through the usual channels.

In order to give the proposition an air of great respectability, a public speech made in December at Cleveland, Ohio, by Mr. Justice Clarke, the friend of the late Secretary of War, Hon. Newton D. Baker, and appointed by ex-President Wilson, was widely circulated, in which speech Justice Clarke declared to the world that the war debts "should be promptly and wholly canceled."

In an address made in the Chamber of the House the 5th of January last I directed attention to the utterance of Mr. Justice Clarke, and warned the American people that a plan, deep laid and subtle, was on foot to induce our Government to cancel the loans.

Every day that passes adds to the dark evidences of the schemes devised and the plan being pursued to have us give up the Great War loans that represent the toil and labor, self-sacrifice, and abnegation of millions of American citizens.

The bold schemers behind this project are after a great stake. Never before in the history of the world was so large a sum—ten billions—involved. No bank robber with jimmy and nitroglycerin, with bowie knife and dark lantern, ever planned with greater cunning, stealth, and determination to accomplish his purpose than the persons and interests that are now seeking the annulment of the foreign loans made by this Government during the war.

"Propaganda" is a new word, but an apt one, coined out of a necessity to represent the work, underground chiefly, of manufacturing a public opinion to effectuate an object.

My attention has been called to a weekly trade bulletin called The Current, of date March 16, issued by a New York City firm of stockbrokers, from which I read the following:

VITAL DEVELOPMENTS OF THE WEEK.

1. Foreign debts to us, with interest, $11,000,000,000, should become live issue on April 22, this date being end of moratorium as to interest.
2. As to this, we believe the question of cancellation now more widely agitated may influence next general election.

Your attention is directed to the concluding paragraph, which tells us that the question of cancellation is being widely agitated, and, furthermore, that the same may influence the next general election. How influence, may I ask? To me the declaration implies that those who are interested in the cancellation—foreigners, acting through and by their agents, the international bankers—expect to take a hand in American elections with the view of putting in Congress men who will vote for cancellation of the loans. To what ends they will go and by the use of what methods and means remains to be seen.

The question naturally arises, Why are the international bankers interested? The answer is: These men have banks not only in New York but in Paris, London, and Berlin. Their vaults are filled to capacity with the bonds of foreign Governments—some of them insolvent—securities bought at a low figure, and if our Government releases its claim then the value of their securities will be enhanced. In addition to this, such bankers are the fiscal agents of foreign Governments, and deem it their duty to advance the cause of their principals.

But, Mr. Speaker, to my mind the most convincing evidence of the movement I have described consists in a well-prepared address of Mr. Otto H. Kahn, the well-known international banker of New York. The speech was delivered "at the Advertising Club," and is being circulated by an organization styling itself "Committee of American Business Men." I presume every Member of Congress has received a copy of the speech. The one sent me was accompanied with a note saying that "the committee will be indebted to you (me) for any comment or suggestion you (I) may care to make." Evidently the "committee" has adopted this method of sounding out Members of Congress, the greater number of whom are expected to stand for reelection. The "suggestions" and "comments" I have to make I am, therefore, offering in this public way, not only for the benefit of the "committee" but also for the benefit of the country.

The argument of Mr. Kahn admits "that the debts are justly due us," and concedes that "the allied nations took material compensation from the vanquished to the extent that there were assets to distribute—territorial, physical, or financial—not to mention the obtainment of advantages of a less tangible but none the less very real nature. America, on the other hand, asked nothing and received nothing of the material spoils of war. We are carrying the immense burden of our war expenditures without any compensating tangible return whatsoever."

Of the assets taken over by England I might mention Mesopotamia, covering the regions of the Tygris and the Euphrates—a territory as rich as the valley of the Nile, except four times larger in area.

Of the assets taken over by France were Alsace and Lorraine, with their iron, coal, potash, and other tremendous wealth. Likewise these two countries took over a vast empire in Africa, and now own practically the entire rubber supply of the world. The United States motor-car industry is almost entirely dependent upon these two nations for its rubber supply.

To catalogue the vast properties, rights, and benefits obtained by our allies from the conquered nations would require many pages. It was only Uncle Sam who came away empty handed. Now it is proposed to cancel the notes given us by the Allies.

The apparently friendly attitude of Mr. Kahn, as indicated by the quoted matter, is soon dispelled, for by a further reading of his address we find him saying that the "reparation sum" placed upon Germany "is greatly beyond Germany's capacity to pay"; that in order to remove the causes which stood in the way of "stabilizing and normalizing Europe," he proposes as and for a remedy as follows:

I would cancel the allied war debts to America to the extent that they are war debts, not as a free gift but in consideration of and return for adequate pledges and appropriate action on the part of the nations concerned, leading to the elimination, as far as actually possible, or at least the prompt and essential mitigation of the remediable circumstances and conditions which keep Europe in turmoil and prevent it from exercising its normal and natural functions either as consumer or producer. Subject to that consideration in each instance, I would cancel all the allied war debts to us, regardless of the solvency of the nation concerned, and I would impose the stipulation that the war debts which the various allied nations owe as between themselves be likewise canceled.

Here, then, we have an open declaration by an international banker of his view on the subject. The fact that this speech was made, printed, and circulated is palpable evidence that the agitation will go on and, as The Current puts it, will be carried into the next general election.

The action of the House in extending the time for the payment of the Austrian loan will be heralded abroad as the attitude of Uncle Sam on all the foreign loans.

Furthermore, the release of the Austrian assets pledged to secure the loan is tantamount to handing over the security to our former allies, who thereby become the holders of a first mortgage to secure the huge indemnity exacted by them under the treaty of Versailles.

The stand I have taken I well know will make me the subject of attack by powerful interests, and I shall probably be marked by them for slaughter in the next election. Being convinced that I am right, I shall go ahead without regard to consequences. On the other hand, I am reassured by letters coming to me from men in every walk of life approving my stand. This morning's mail brought to me nine letters on the subject. Briefly, they are as follows:

Mr. M. T. Roberts, a business man, of Eggleston, W. Va., tells me that I am right and he is pleased with my efforts.

Mr. S. T. Goshorn, a justice of the peace, of Piedmont, W. Va., says that he can not commend my speech too much; that it expresses his sentiment.

Mr. P. M. Nelson, postmaster at Beverly, W. Va., says that he has read my address and that it embodies everything that is fair and just, and suggests that my speech on the subject be distributed all over the country.

Messrs. Marcum & Marcum, prominent lawyers, of Huntington, W. Va., write that they heartily indorse my position and say that we would be very foolish out of pure sentiment to cancel the $11,000,000,000 due us from foreign nations.

John H. Meek, Esq., of the law firm of Vinson, Thompson, Meek & Renshaw, Huntington, W. Va., says he indorses my position most heartily.

Mr. O. P. Vines, cashier of the Citizens' National Bank, Hinton, W. Va., says he likes the stand I have taken and feels sure that I will have the full support of my constituents on the question.

Ex-Major of Infantry Charles C. Robinson, now department vice commander for the second district of the American Legion of West Virginia, at Morgantown, W. Va., says he wishes to commend me for my frank and open statements, and feels sure that I will find the American people behind me with their support on the proposition.

Hon. J. Frank Marsh, secretary of the State board of education, at Charleston, W. Va., says, in regard to my stand on the matter, that he is pleased with the recognition I am getting for myself and the honor I am bringing to the State.

Hon. Howard Post, a member of the House of Delegates of West Virginia, at Clarksburg, W. Va., says he has read the address with pleasure, and congratulates me upon the splendid and clear argument I have offered against the cancellation; that he thinks he is safe in saying that at least 99 per cent of the citizens of West Virginia are with me in the matter; that foreign nations owe us this money and every cent of it should be paid with interest; that we should ask no quarter and surely give none.

It is eminently proper that I should give publicity to the views of our people on this subject. These are only a few of the many letters I have received in the matter.

The position of every candidate for Congress in the primaries and in the next general election on this all-important subject should be clearly stated. The people are entitled to know not only what the candidates have to say on the subject but they ought to fully investigate, with a view of determining whether or not his heart is right.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by setting forth therein the wage scales in the bituminous coal sections, incident to the pending coal strike.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this very lengthy?

Mr. FOSTER. Here it is. It is not very long.

Mr. GARNER. I do not see the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] here. He usually objects to matters of this kind. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to represent the tenth district of Ohio. It embraces six counties, as follows: Athens, Gallia, Jackson, Lawrence, Meigs, and Vinton. Each county contains bituminous coal mines. The present wage scale expires with the end of this month. A strike is now called. I have been asked by several Members of the House what the present wage scale is. Because of these inquiries, I herewith append a statement showing the wages paid for the different kinds of work necessary for the mining of coal in each county in that district.

By way of explanation, it may be said that the wages differ according to the nature of the work, the thickness of the coal vein, and other conditions surrounding the working places. Pick mining, or hand mining, embraces about 15 per cent of the total of the coal mined, while the coal known as machine mined is approximately 85 per cent.

Of the number of men employed in and about a mine, the day laborers compose about 30 per cent of the total.

Detailed mining scale for Athens County.

The coal mined in these three counties ranges in thickness from 22 inches to 4 feet 4 inches, and the above mining rates apply to the thin and thick mining alike.

Coal mining in southeastern Ohio has been at a low ebb during the past year. The mines in the tenth district have worked less than 25 per cent, while mines in eastern Ohio have worked approximately 40 per cent. Abnormally high freight rates have contributed to this condition. It is not uncommon to find shipments of coal from a point in Ohio to a point in Ohio where the freight rate is greater than the price of the coal.

The condition of the miners in southeastern Ohio is bad. In my home county of Athens the American Red Cross has for several weeks had charge of the distribution of clothing and food. In some of the schools the children are being fed by the Red Cross. Several thousand members of the families of miners are reported by the Red Cross as being in needy circumstances.

I think it but fair to all residents of the tenth congressional district as well as to the Members of Congress that these conditions be made public. One of the essentials in remedying conditions is that the truth be brought to light. This is accomplished in part by submitting data as above given, so that conditions may be understood exactly as they are.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Senate Joint Resolution 160.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on forest-land exchange.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are the remarks on some particular measure that is pending or on the subject in general?

Mr. RAKER. They are my own remarks on the subject in general.

Mr. WALSH. Any newspaper clippings?

Mr. RAKER. There are no newspaper clippings in this matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 263) authorizing the purchase of land for cemeteries for American military dead in Europe and the improvement thereof, when the Speaker signed the same.

ADDITIONAL HOSPITAL FACILITIES FOR EX-SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10864, to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau. Pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill be limited to four hours, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the ranking Democrat on the committee. I assume that there is practically no opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill be limited to four hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the ranking minority member on the committee. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the debate to be limited to the bill?

Mr. LANGLEY. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10864.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10864, with Mr. GREEN of Iowa in the chair.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau, by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise, such hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities to include the necessary buildings and auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, approach work, roads, and trackage facilities leading thereto, vehicles, live stock, furniture, equipment and accessories, and also to provide accommodations for officers, nurses, and attending personnel; and the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized to accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes named herein. Such hospital plants shall be of fireproof construction and the location and nature thereof, whether for the treatment of tuberculosis, neuropsychiatric, or general medical and surgical cases, shall be in the discretion of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

SEC. 2. That the construction of new hospitals or dispensaries, or the alteration, remodeling, or repair of all hospitals or dispensaries heretofore or hereafter constructed shall be done in such manner as the President may determine, and he is authorized to require the architectural, engineering, constructing, or other forces of any of the departments of the Government to do or assist in such work.

SEC. 3. That for carrying into effect the preceding paragraphs relating to additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $17,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10864 and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas, for an indefinite period, on account of illness in his family.

Mr. PATTERSON of Missouri (at the request of Mr. FAUST), for an additional 10 days, on account of the serious illness of his father.

Mr. CLARKE of New York, for 10 days, on account of business and planning for spring plowing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if it is the purpose to continue the consideration of the hospital bill to-morrow?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think Members ought to know of this fact.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 30, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 30, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, March 16, 1922.)

The Senate met in open executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

As in legislative session,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10871) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) authorizing the extension, for a period of not to exceed 25 years, of the time for the payment of the principal and interest of the debt incurred by Austria for the purchase of flour from the United States Grain Corporation, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 263) authorizing the purchase of land for cemeteries for American military dead in Europe and the improvement thereof, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

RECOGNITION OF PALESTINE AS HOMELAND OF JEWISH PEOPLE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts with regard to recognizing Palestine as the homeland of the Jewish people. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD and referred.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
In the year 1922.

Order relative to recognizing Palestine as the homeland of the Jewish people.

Whereas the supreme council of the Allied Peace Conference meeting at San Remo recognized the right of the Jewish nation to a national existence in Palestine and conferred upon Great Britain a mandate over Palestine; and

Whereas the various great nations of the world have approved the establishment of the national homeland for the Jews in Palestine; and

Whereas the people of the United States, individually and through their spokesmen in Congress and by leading men in all walks of life, have expressed their gratification at the realization of the national hopes of the Jews; and

Whereas the General Court of Massachusetts views with pleasure the progress of the Jewish people in Palestine, in developing the economic resources of the country, in founding institutions of learning, and in creating a spiritual center, so that it may the better serve mankind: Therefore be it

Ordered, That the General Court of Massachusetts urges the Government of the United States of America formally to recognize the present status of the Jewish people in Palestine and thus to approve the fulfillment of its yearning desire for a national home in the land of its forefathers; and be it further Ordered, That copies of this order be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts, and to the Zionist organization of America.

In house of representatives, adopted March 29, 1922.
In senate, adopted in concurrence March 29, 1922.
A true copy. Attest:

F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Broussard	France	Gerry	Townsend
Ernst

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the order to the Sergeant at Arms may be vacated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I have been intending for some time to make some remarks in regard to the Shipping Board, but I realize that the Senate is anxious to dispose of the treaties now pending before it, and I will only take a few moments.

I notice that the Shipping Board has come to Congress asking for subsidies or, at least, it is apparent that it is expecting some kind of assistance. I am not surprised that they should come to Congress and ask for help, considering the manner in which they have carried on the business intrusted to their care. I have had occasion to familiarize myself to some extent with their methods, and I must say that I know of no Government officials who look upon their duties as lightly as do the members of the Shipping Board, although several of its operatives are drawing salaries as high as $30,000 a year. They were before the Committee on Commerce some time ago, and I never was reminded more forcefully of 14-year-old giggling schoolgirls than I was on that occasion.

I noticed in the newspapers a day or two ago that they have some 164 ships tied up in a river in the neighborhood of New York, and the report stated that they had 600 guards, and yet, notwithstanding all those guards, they allowed something like $400,000 worth of Government property to be stolen from those ships. That, I suspect, is about in keeping with the manner in which they have performed their duties, and therefore I am not surprised that they are asking for more money out of the people's pocket to carry on the enterprise in which they are engaged.

The fact is that instead of trying to look out for business they have tied up ships to keep them from carrying on business. I believe that out of something in the neighborhood of 1,500 steel ships they were operating some time ago only 382. It is even claimed that they did not have enough ships in commission to carry the corn which we donated to the starving people of Russia. So, Mr. President, I think that Congress ought to be very slow to throw away any more money on such an incompetent set as the Shipping Board.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adapted by the Lambs' Club, of Kemmerer, Wyo., favoring the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Bemidji, Minn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Labette County, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRIS. I present a telegram from the Country Bankers' Association of Georgia, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Finance and placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ATLANTA, GA., March 29, 1922.

Senator WILLIAM J. HARRIS,
Washington, D. C.:

While the country bankers of Georgia are not very strong on tariffs, yet, since we are going to have a protective tariff, we ask that this tariff bill extend its protection to the products of the farmer, especially peanuts, peanut oil, and cottonseed oil, that are affected by the importation of foreign soyabean oil, peanuts, and peanut oil. If the present tariff is removed the farmer will get approximately $8 per ton less for his cotton seed and approximately $15 per ton less on peanuts. The farmers need this protection against oriental labor and must have it.

COUNTRY BANKERS' ASSOCIATION OF GEORGIA.

Mr. ASHURST presented a certified copy of house joint memorial No. 1, adopted by the Legislature of Arizona, urging the restoration to the public domain of a certain tract of land in the San Carlos division of the White Mountain Indian Reservation, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
FIFTH STATE LEGISLATURE,
First Special Session.

House joint memorial 1.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Fifth Legislature of the State of Arizona, in special session assembled, do respectfully represent that—

Whereas the boundaries of the White Mountain Indian Reservation were described in Executive order dated December 14, 1872, and the present south boundary of the said reservation is described in the recommendation of the Interior Department of the United States dated

July 30, 1873, and approved by the President August 5, 1873, by the following language:

"All that portion of the valley of the Gila River in the Territory of Arizona hitherto included in the San Carlos division of the White Mountain Indian Reservation as established by Executive order dated December 14, 1872, lying east of and above the site of old Camp Goodwin, be restored to the public domain."

And in compliance with the said recommendations one Paul Riecker, United States deputy surveyor, did survey in the year 1883 the said south boundary of the said reservation, the notes and maps whereof being now on file in the office of the Department of the Interior at Washington, D. C.

That in executing the instructions contained in the said recommendations of the Department of the Interior, to wit: "All that portion of the valley of the Gila River River * * * lying east of and above the site of old Camp Goodwin be restored to the public domain," the said Deputy Surveyor Riecker erred in so far as not including within the said survey as portions of the valley of the Gila River the course and drainage basins of Bonita Creek and other tributaries of the Gila River lying east of and above the site of old Camp Goodwin, and being by actual physical characteristics part and parcel of the valley of the Gila River.

That all that part of the valley of the Gila River south from a point 14 miles, 45.23 chains, directly north of that point of beginning at old Camp Goodwin described in the President's letter of approval of August 5, 1873, and being the point where the Baldwin survey (and Riecker survey) intersects the summit of the Gila Range of mountains which bears southeast and northwest, and which point being an angle point, is marked as follows: An iron post 3 inches in diameter, 20 inches in the ground to rock, surrounded by a mound of stone, which iron post is capped and said cap stamped "W M I R A P in W 14 M 45.23 chs P L in E Angle 1915 in S.", due east to a point of intersection with the east line of that part of the White Mountain Indian Reservation restored to the public domain by Executive order dated July 21, 1874, the same being known and designated on the official maps and plats as 109° 30' west longitude, and being approximately 35 miles in length, is not now and never has been used or occupied by the Indian wards of the White Mountain or San Carlos Reservations or any other Indians; nor is it of a character that would invite dwelling or sustain life of even an Indian; nor does it contain cattle or other stock of Indians; that no agricultural land is embraced in said section excepting a few acres along the Bonita Creek; that the said section is rough and hilly and what is known as a broken country; that it does contain in season feed for range stock and live water, the latter being the lifeblood of the cattle interests of the said section.

That by virtue of the facts hereinabove set forth, i. e., the section of country in question being in the valley of the Gila River "lying east of and above the site of old Camp Goodwin," being at present and as long as memory of man records uninhabited by Indians; being of no value as agricultural land; being a rough, hilly country of value to no one but that great pioneering class of the American frontier, the cattle raiser, it is hereby

Resolved by the Fifth Legislature of the State of Arizona, in special session assembled, That Congress be memorialized to take immediate action to the end that the above specified section of the White Mountain Indian Reservation be restored to the public domain. It is further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, and to the Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST and the Hon. RALPH CAMERON, United States Senators, and Hon. CARL HAYDEN, Congressman from Arizona, urging upon each the justness of the request, correcting an error of long standing, aiding a great industry and a large number of pioneers, while working a hardship on no class or individual; that they may do all in their power to secure the sought-for legislation.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Adopted by the senate March 16, 1922, by viva voce vote.

P. C. KEEFE,
Speaker of the House.
OSCAR ZAPF,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Adopted by the senate March 16, 1922, by viva voce vote.

H. B. WILKINSON,
President of the Senate.
ROY N. DAVIDSON,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST presented resolutions adopted by Stephen D. Little Garrison, No. 125, Army and Navy Union, of Nogales, Ariz., favoring the enactment of beneficial legislation for veterans of all wars, the imposition of an excess-profits tax rather than a sales tax for raising the necessary funds therefor, and the passage of the so-called Morgan bill increasing the pensions of Civil War veterans and their widows, which were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Preambles and resolutions adopted Monday, February 13, 1922, by Stephen D. Little Garrison, No. 125, Army and Navy Union.

Whereas in response to an insistent public demand the Congress of the United States is giving attention to the problem of providing adequate compensation, justly earned and due to World War service men, and is framing appropriate legislation to provide such compensation: Be it

Resolved, By Stephen D. Little Garrison, No. 125, Army and Navy Union, at Nogales, Ariz., embracing former service men of all wars of the Republic, would call to attention by the Congress that aged and infirm soldiers of other wars, who served well and faithfully, many now in dire poverty and want, are needing provision to meet advancing infirmities and disabilities of age, and should be awarded by act of Congress provision fully as liberal as that in course of enactment for World War veterans; hence, be it further

Resolved, That this Stephen D. Little Garrison, Army and Navy Union, urges upon the Congress adoption of suitable legislation to provide adequate compensation or pensions to service men (and their widows) of the war against Spain, of the various Indian wars, of the Philippine war, of the Boxer war in China, etc.; and that officers and men of those wars who by an act of Congress were deprived of travel pay and subsistence en route be restored the same and paid their just dues under a law that was repealed in 1899; and be it further

Resolved, That this garrison urges upon Congress speedy enactment of the Morgan bill, now pending, increasing pensions of Civil War veterans and their widows, as those still surviving from that great conflict are very aged, while pensions now paid are wholly inadequate; and

Whereas methods for providing funds necessary to meet such proposed pension and compensation legislation are causing very great and unnecessary concern; and

Whereas the past 30 years have witnessed growth within these United States of plethoric and swollen fortunes in the hands of profiteers, most of them of alien birth; be it further

Resolved, That this Stephen D. Little Garrison, No. 125, Army and Navy Union, would suggest to the Congress that all funds to meet pension and compensation legislation can be met by reenactment of the excess-profits tax, which is eminently right and just, because it can not be passed along to the consumer; and such passing of taxation should be prohibited by law; and be it further

Resolved, That Stephen D. Little Garrison, Army and Navy Union, opposes most earnestly imposition of a sales tax to meet these pension and compensation measures, because profiteers can put such a tax right back upon those for whom the proposed legislation is to be enacted, and upon the American people at large. Let those who have profited and are profiteering upon democracy pay for the blood and effort that made possible their unholy profiteering; and be it further

Resolved, That the commander and adjutant of this garrison are instructed hereby to transmit to United States Senator RALPH CAMERON, United States Senator HENRY F. ASHURST, and Hon. CARL HAYDEN, Member of Congress, copies of these resolutions, requesting them to present the same in the United States Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, asking that they be spread upon the minutes of each branch of Congress.

NOGALES, ARIZ., February 22, 1922.

The undersigned, commander and adjutant of Stephen D. Little Garrison, No. 125, Army and Navy Union, hereby certify that the foregoing resolutions were adopted in due form at a regular muster of said garrison, Monday, February 13, 1922.

ALLEN T. BIRD, Commander.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DIAL:

A bill (S. 3360) to authorize the building of a bridge across the Congaree River in South Carolina; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 3361) granting an increase of pension to Joseph A. Libby (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3362) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to promulgate schedule of fees to be charged vessels at the national quarantine, port of New York; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CAMERON:

A bill (S. 3363) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to Frank Luke, jr., Post, No. 1, the American Legion, Phoenix, Ariz., one piece of German field artillery with certain equipment; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) authorizing the transfer to the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on the Library of certain reservations in the District of Columbia for use in connection with the Botanic Garden; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 187) authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish additional cotton statistics; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

RECOGNITION OF INDEPENDENCE OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution, which I request may lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 264) was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States by the act approved August 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," vested in the Philippine Legislature, created by said act, general legislative power with respect to the Philippines, in order that by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers the people of the Philippines might become prepared to assume the responsibilities and enjoy the privileges of complete independence; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States in said act expressly declared that it was the purpose of the Government of the United States to withdraw its sovereignty from the Philippine Islands and to recognize the independence of the islands as soon as a stable government should have been established therein; and

Whereas, in conformity with the provisions of said act, a stable government, founded upon principles of political liberty and upon popular franchise, has been erected in the Philippine Islands and is exercising political powers therein, subject only to the powers vested in the Governor General of the Philippines and other officials appointed by the President of the United States, and certain supervisory powers exercised by the Secretary of War, and the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President enter into negotiations with the powers having territorial interests in the Pacific, or adjacent thereto, for the purpose of concluding a treaty or treaties whereby said powers agree to recognize the Philippine Islands as an independent State, and covenant to respect the political independence and territorial integrity of such Philippine State, when such State shall have been established and declared by the United States, and that upon the execution and ratification of such a treaty or treaties the sovereignty of the United States over the Philippine Islands shall be transferred to an independent Philippine government, and that thereupon all sovereignty by the United States over the Philippine Islands shall cease and determine.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10871) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TREATY CONCERNING CHINESE PRINCIPLES AND POLICIES.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the pending treaty may be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, proceeded to consider Executive P—a treaty between the United States, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal relating to principles and policies to be followed in matters concerning China, concluded at Washington February 6, 1922, which was read as follows:

The United States of America, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal:

Desiring to adopt a policy designed to stabilize conditions in the Far East, to safeguard the rights and interests of China, and to promote intercourse between China and the other powers upon the basis of equality of opportunity;

Have resolved to conclude a treaty for that purpose and to that end have appointed as their respective plenipotentiaries;

The President of the United States of America: Charles Evans Hughes, Henry Cabot Lodge, Oscar W. Underwood, Elihu Root, citizens of the United States;

His Majesty the King of the Belgians: Baron de Cartier de Marchienne, Commander of the Order of Leopold and of the Order of the Crown, His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Washington;

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India: The Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, O. M., M. P., Lord President of His Privy Council; the Right Hon. Baron Lee, of Fareham, G. B. E., K. C. B., First Lord of His Admiralty; the Right Hon. Sir Auckland Campbell Geddes, K. C. B., His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America;

And—

For the Dominion of Canada: The Right Hon. Sir Robert Laird Borden, G. C. M. G., K. C.;

For the Commonwealth of Australia: Senator the Right Hon. George Foster Pearce, Minister for Home and Territories.

For the Dominion of New Zealand: The Hon. Sir John William Salmond, K. C., Judge of the Supreme Court of New Zealand;

For the Union of South Africa: The Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, O. M., M. P.;

For India: The Right Hon. Valingman Sankaranarayana Srinivasa Sastri, Member of the Indian Council of State;

The President of the Republic of China: Mr. Sao-Ke Alfred Sze, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington; Mr. V. K. Wellington Koo, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at London; Mr. Chung-Hui Wang, former Minister of Justice.

The President of the French Republic: Mr. Albert Sarraut, Deputy, Minister of the Colonies; Mr. Jules J. Jusserand, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America, Grand Cross of the National Order of the Legion of Honor;

His Majesty the King of Italy: The Hon. Carlo Schanzer, Senator of the Kingdom; the Hon. Vittorio Rolandi Ricci, Senator of the Kingdom, His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Washington; the Hon. Luigi Albertini, Senator of the Kingdom;

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan: Baron Tomosaburo Kato, Minister for the Navy, Junii, a member of the First Class of the Imperial Order of the Grand Cordon of the Rising Sun with the Paulownia Flower; Baron Kijuro Shidehara, His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Washington, Joshii, a member of the First Class of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun; Mr. Masanao Hanihara, Vice Minister for Foreign Affairs, Jushii, a member of the Second Class of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun;

Her Majesty the Queen of The Netherlands: Jonkheer Frans Beelaerts van Blokland, Her Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary; Jonkheer Willem Hendrik de Beaufort, Minister Plenipotentiary, Chargé d'Affaires at Washington;

The President of the Portuguese Republic: Mr. José Francisco de Horta Machado da Franca, Viscount d'Alte, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington; Mr. Ernesto Julio de Carvalhoe Vasconcelos, Captain of the Portuguese Navy, Technical Director of the Colonial Office.

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I.

The contracting powers, other than China, agree:

(1) To respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China;

(2) To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government;

(3) To use their influence for the purpose of effectually establishing and maintaining the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations throughout the territory of China;

(4) To refrain from taking advantage of conditions in China in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of subjects or citizens of friendly States, and from countenancing action inimical to the security of such States.

ARTICLE II.

The contracting powers agree not to enter into any treaty, agreement, arrangement, or understanding, either with one another, or, individually or collectively, with any power or powers, which would infringe or impair the principles stated in Article I.

ARTICLE III.

With a view to applying more effectually the principles of the open door or equality of opportunity in China for the trade and industry of all nations, the contracting powers, other than China, agree that they will not seek, nor support their respective nationals in seeking—

(a) Any arrangement which might purport to establish in favor of their interests any general superiority of rights with respect to commercial or economic development in any designated region of China.

(b) Any such monopoly or preference as would deprive the nationals of any other power of the right of undertaking any legitimate trade or industry in China, or of participating with the Chinese Government, or with any local authority, in any category of public enterprise, or which by reason of its scope, duration, or geographical extent is calculated to frustrate the practical application of the principle of equal opportunity.

It is understood that the foregoing stipulations of this article are not to be so construed as to prohibit the acquisition of such properties or rights as may be necessary to the conduct of a particular commercial, industrial, or financial undertaking or to the encouragement of invention and research.

China undertakes to be guided by the principles stated in the foregoing stipulations of this article in dealing with applications for economic rights and privileges from Governments and nationals of all foreign countries, whether parties to the present treaty or not.

ARTICLE IV.

The contracting powers agree not to support any agreements by their respective nationals with each other designed to create spheres of influence or to provide for the enjoyment of mutually exclusive opportunities in designated parts of Chinese territory.

ARTICLE V.

China agrees that, throughout the whole of the railways in China she will not exercise or permit unfair discrimination of any kind. In particular there shall be no discrimination whatever, direct or indirect, in respect of charges or of facilities on the ground of the nationality of passengers or the countries from which or to which they are proceeding, or the origin or ownership of goods or the country from which or to which they are consigned, or the nationality or ownership of the ship or other means of conveying such passengers or goods before or after their transport on the Chinese railways.

The contracting powers, other than China, assume a corresponding obligation in respect of any of the aforesaid railways over which they or their nationals are in a position to exercise any control in virtue of any concession, special agreement or otherwise.

ARTICLE VI.

The contracting powers, other than China, agree fully to respect China's rights as a neutral in time of war to which China is not a party; and China declares that when she is a neutral she will observe the obligations of neutrality.

ARTICLE VII.

The contracting powers agree that whenever a situation arises which in the opinion of any one of them involves the application of the stipulations of the present treaty, and renders desirable discussion of such application, there shall be full and frank communication between the contracting powers concerned.

ARTICLE VIII.

Powers not signatory to the present treaty, which have governments recognized by the signatory powers and which have treaty relations with China, shall be invited to adhere to the present treaty. To this end the Government of the United States will make the necessary communications to nonsignatory powers and will inform the contracting powers of the replies received. Adherence by any power shall become effective on receipt of notice thereof by the Government of the United States.

ARTICLE IX.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the contracting powers in accordance with their respective constitutional methods, and shall take effect on the date of the deposit of all the ratifications, which shall take place at Washington as soon as possible. The Government of the United States will transmit to the other contracting powers a certified copy of the procès-verbal of the deposit of ratifications.

The present treaty, of which the French and English texts are both authentic, shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States, and duly certified copies thereof shall be transmitted by that Government to the other contracting powers.

In faith whereof the above-named plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty.

Done at the city of Washington the 6th day of February, 1922.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, unless there is some objection, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the treaty by articles be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The treaty is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the first article of this treaty recites that—

> The contracting powers, other than China, agree:
> (1) To respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China.

When another of these treaties was under consideration I advanced the idea that that is a mere declaration of a rule of international law which would obtain even though it were not thus expressed in the treaty. My esteemed friend, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], took issue with me upon that matter and felt it important enough to dilate upon on several occasions, asserting that no such principle of international law was recognized, and sustained his contention by references to history, showing that nations had repeatedly violated the territorial integrity of others by invading their territory.

Of course, Mr. President, regrettable as it may be, that has often occurred; but it has not occurred by right at all, but by wrong; and every nation which invades the territory of another sets up some reason to justify before the world what otherwise would be deemed by all the world to be a wrong on its part. That is the way the matter is treated by the writers on international law.

I should regret it very much indeed if the view thus expressed by the distinguished Senator from Alabama should remain unchallenged in this body. I content myself, therefore, with referring to just a few paragraphs in the latest work on international law, Oppenheim. I read from section 124, at page 178:

> Independence and territorial as well as personal supremacy are not rights, but recognized and therefore protected qualities of States as international persons. The protection granted to these qualities by the law of nations finds its expression in the right of every State to demand that other States abstain themselves, and prevent their agents and subjects from committing any act which contains a violation of its independence and its territorial as well as personal supremacy.

If a State has a right to demand that every other State respect its territorial integrity and political independence, the reverse must necessarily be true—that every State undertakes that it will so respect the territorial integrity and political independence of the others.

Section 125:

> The duty of every State itself to abstain and to prevent its agents and subjects from any act which contains a violation of another State's independence or territorial and personal supremacy is correlative to the respective right of the other State.

That is the correlative of the proposition which is laid down in the excerpt just read.

> It is impossible to enumerate all such actions as might contain a violation of this duty. But it is of value to give some illustrative examples. Thus, in the interest of the independence of other States, a State is not allowed to interfere in the management of their international affairs nor to prevent them from doing or to compel them to do certain acts in their international intercourse. Further, in the interest of the territorial supremacy of other States, a State is not allowed to send its troops—its men of war—or its police forces into or through foreign territory, or to exercise an act of administration or jurisdiction on foreign territory without permission.

In time of peace, and with a perfectly peaceful purpose, one State has no right to transport its troops through the territory of another State in order to get at an enemy beyond, much less has it any right to invade that State for purposes of war against it.

Section 126:

> Independence is not boundless liberty of a State to do what it likes without any restriction whatever. The mere fact that a State is a member of the family of nations restricts its liberty of action.

And the same proposition is laid in another section, in which it is stated that each State must expressly or tacitly consent to be bound for its international conduct by the rules of international law; that is to say, it is implied that each State has undertaken to conform its conduct to the rules of international law.

Section 129:

> From the earliest time of the existence of the law of nations self-preservation was considered sufficient justification for many acts of a State which violate other States. Although, as a rule, all States have mutually to respect one another's personality, and are therefore bound not to violate one another, as an exception, certain violations of another State committed by a State for the purpose of self-preservation are not prohibited by the law of nations.

That is to say, for self-preservation one State may invade another State; that is all. The rule is the other way, that it has no right to do so, and that it tacitly has undertaken that it will not do so.

Section 134 explains that intervention is a violation of the implied undertaking on the part of one State not to interfere with the affairs of another State. It provides, in part:

> Intervention is dictatorial interference by a State in the affairs of another State for the purpose of maintaining or altering the actual condition of things. Such intervention can take place by right or without a right, but it always concerns the external independence or the territorial or personal supremacy of the respective State, and the whole matter is therefore of great importance for the position of the States within the family of nations. That intervention is, as a rule, forbidden by the law of nations which protects the international personality of the States, there is no doubt. On the other hand, there is just as little doubt that this rule has exceptions, for there are interventions which take place by right, and there are others which, although they do not take place by right, are nevertheless admitted by the law of nations and are excused in spite of the violation of the personality of the respective states they involve.

I should regard it as singularly unfortunate, Mr. President, in this day and age, if this great Nation of ours were to go on record as subscribing to the doctrine that there is no implied obligation upon the part of any State to respect the territorial integrity of its neighbors.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, it is always a pleasure to listen to my colleague, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. He is always clear in what he says, and often convincing. But I still maintain what I said several days ago in reference to this question. Of course, when I was a schoolboy, many years ago, and studied Vattel and other works on international law, I recall that the writer on international law proclaimed the academic doctrine which has just been read by the Senator from Montana. I recognize that. I do not think there has ever been any dispute among the textbook writers as to that being the principle on which nations live.

When the other day I stated that nations were not governed in their conduct by any international law which required them to respect the rights of other nations, I did not refer to it as an academic question, which I admit to be true, which I more than admit ought to be true; but I referred to it then and I refer to it now as a fact.

International law is not made by enactments of nations, except in one way, and that is when they meet together and agree by treaty that certain rules shall govern their conduct in regard to each other. Until the organization of the League of Nations I know of no general declarations along these lines, except some which in the last decade or two have come out of The Hague. What the Senator has said in reference to the principle that nations should respect each other's rights is true, but that does not make it international law. It is an announcement of what international law should be.

In the end international law consists of those principles which are so well defined in the history of the world that all nations have respected them and maintained them. For instance, the so-called international law against piracy is recognized by all nations and maintained by all civilized nations. That is an extreme case; I could cite many others of lesser degree. But what I contended in my discussion before the Senate a day or two ago was that although the principle as announced by the Senator from Montana is a correct principle for nations to live up to and to maintain, it is not international law, because the history of the past shows that it has been violated many times by almost all the great nations of the world in their day and time. You can not contend that a matter is international law when it is only recognized by its nonobservance by the nations of the world.

I am sure the Senator from Montana will not contend with me that this principle has been one which has been recognized by the action of the nations of the world. Nations, through excuses of their own, have gone into wars of combat with other powers and have given the best excuse they could. If they won the fight, they have usually maintained the excuse; but after they have won the war, regardless of the invalidity of their action in beginning the war, the lack of justification for their beginning the war, they have then proceeded to treat the other State as if it had no rights—divided its territory and subjected its people. That has been going on for so many centuries that it has established the general rule of action for nations in that regard.

There may be a few exceptions to the rule. The declaration of this Government in favor of the Monroe doctrine, through the power and force of this Government, has brought about a respect of the territorial rights, at least, of a number of the South American Republics, but it certainly did not receive general acceptation by the nations of the world until comparatively recently. I suppose we can say now, especially since the signing of the treaty of Versailles, that the so-called Monroe doctrine may be accepted as an international law of the world. That is an exception to the rule.

I think we were justified in going into the war with Spain. As a Member of the House of Representatives I voted for the resolution declaring war. But when we came out we took away from Spain the Philippine Islands and pretended to compensate her for them by paying $20,000,000. I think the payment was a mere subterfuge. It could not be considered adequate compensation for a territory comprising the greatest group of islands in the Pacific Ocean and embracing 10,000,000 people.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator is it not true that we did exactly the same thing when we took all that territory from Mexico at the conclusion of the Mexican War?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. LODGE. We paid $20,000,000 for it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think we paid $20,000,000 then. It is something like our treaties with some of the Indian tribes, when we bought large quantities of land in this country for a few beads and baubles.

Of course, if gentlemen want to justify aggression because of a superiority of numbers or a superiority of race, that may open another question for argument; but, at any rate, the Kingdom of Spain, which had possessed those islands for hundreds of years, had a right to them. Her international rights existed. We did not respect her international rights, and we took the islands by force of arms. I know of no other nation in the world which protested against our doing so, which I think would have been done if it had been in violation of international law.

About 1880 Great Britain, through an excuse, took possession of Egypt, violated the rights of sovereignty and territorial integrity in Egypt, and maintained her position until a few days ago, when, for some good reason, she returned that country to its people.

Mr. KING. I would like to inquire of the Senator, if there had been a treaty existing between the United States and Spain at the time we went to war with Spain, under the terms of which we had solemnly agreed to respect the territorial integrity of her islands, especially the Philippine Archipelago, does he believe that it would have made any difference in the final result? Would we not have taken the islands just the same, regardless of the treaty, as we did when we did not have a treaty specifically referring to the Philippine Islands?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think so; but that has nothing to do with the question which is in issue between the Senator from Montana and myself, because that is a treaty between only two nations, which does not make international law. We are discussing the proposition as to whether there is a question of international law involved in respect to the rights of all nations, and I concede the academic question. I conceded it the other day and I do so now. The Senator is absolutely right from an academic standpoint, the standpoint of the text-writers, and that ought to be the rule. His position is clearly correct that each nation should respect the rights of others, but I say international law goes further than a mere announcement in a textbook. The real test is whether it is a principle which the great civilized nations of the world acknowledge, respect, and live up to, and I say all the precedents of the past clearly demonstrate that there is hardly a civilized nation in the world which has not violated that principle. I know they have given excuses for doing so, but they have violated the proposition of respecting the territorial rights of their neighbors, and no protest came from the other nations of the world unless those other nations thought their own interest was involved.

Therefore I say it is idle to pretend that the territorial rights of people, the sovereignty of nations, are protected by an understanding of international law which requires their rights to be protected. It does not exist as a fact, no matter what may be proclaimed about it in theory.

But I do say that when a number of great nations meet together and enter into a treaty mutually binding themselves to respect each other's rights, each other's territorial integrity, each other's sovereignty, then we come very much nearer to making what we all deem should be international law in fact and not merely in theory.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the Senator understand that an agreement to respect the rights and not to commit aggressions against territory still exists after war is declared?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; but of course I am assuming that if it is international law when two powers go to war the other powers that recognize it as international law will protest against the violation of what they consider to be international law. Of course, as I said to the Senator from Utah, we may have had a treaty with Spain, so far as I know, in which we mutually agreed to respect each other's rights and then violated it as soon as we went to war; but that was a contest between two nations. If it had been recognized as international law that the territorial integrity of the two nations should not be interfered with when the war was over and the balance of the world had been prepared to maintain it, we would have wound up the war and Spain would still have possessed the Philippine Islands.

Mr. PITTMAN. Has not such an aggression as is prohibited in the pending treaty always been considered as a casus belli?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It has been between the two nations themselves, but I am discussing the question from the broader standpoint, not from the standpoint of two nations involved in a quarrel but the understanding of a great moral principle to be maintained in the world that is recognized by all.

Mr. PITTMAN. Take, for instance, the Japanese aggression against the island of Sakhalin. They took the northern half of that island, which I believe now is designated as Sakhalin. They took possession of it on grounds which they considered sufficient to themselves, but so far as Russia was concerned, Russia would have a right to treat that as an act of war.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They conceded the southern half at the end of the war. The Senator said the northern half, but I presume he meant the southern half.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I am talking about the northern half, of which they are now in possession by reason of the alleged massacre of Japanese subjects.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly the Senator is right about that.

Mr. PITTMAN. As a matter of fact, if Japan had had an agreement with Russia to respect their territorial integrity, I doubt if they would have held that that treaty bound them not to take possession of the island on the ground they have now taken possession of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is true, but that is the same question which the Senator from Utah raised. That is an issue between two individual nations. I am discussing a principle of international law, which means the recognition of a principle by all civilized nations. Of course, I recognize that we probably had a treaty with Spain to recognize her rights when we went to war with her and she went to war with us. I do not say we had, because I never read it. I think probably we had some kind of a treaty with Mexico when we took California away from her. But that involves only the individual nations. That does not make international law.

Mr. PITTMAN. What I am getting at is that if there is no cause of war between two nations, if they are on friendly terms, then we would not expect either one of them to commit an act of aggression against the territory of the other, and I do not think it has ever been done as long as we were on friendly relations. But when they are not on friendly relations and causes arise which justify war, then this formal agreement of ours ceases to have force and effect.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, the Senator is discussing one side of the question and I am talking about another. I do not dispute at all what the Senator says in reference to individual nations. I am talking about it from a broader standpoint of international law. If it were an established principle of international law and two nations went to war, when the war was over I think they would respect the territorial rights of each other and return the landed property. But they do not do it now and never have done it.

Of course, it is not only a question of cause of war that makes one nation take the other's territory but it is greed and desire. It was not a cause of war that made Germany take the Shantung Peninsula, and the balance of the world recognized it. There was no real cause of war. It is true two of her citizens happened to be killed in the Province, but it was a matter that could have been settled, as are other causes. There was no threat to German citizens at large. There was no threat to the life of the German Government. But because of an incident of that kind Germany moved her troops into Shantung and demanded a leasehold interest in government, and she maintained it until after the Great War was over and until very recently, when her successor under that contract has agreed to move out.

If it had been a matter of international law, I mean not theoretical international law but actual international law, I think the moral force of the powers of the world would many years ago have prevented Germany from extending her possession of Shantung, because she had no cause of complaint against China. However, it was not recognized as international law.

We did not recognize it as international law when our Government sat still and allowed the Japanese Government to take Korea, although we had a treaty with Korea in which we recognized her national life and her national integrity. We did not regard that as a principle of international law which had been violated; at least, the action of our Government did not, and I regret the action of our Government in the matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think there ever will be international law, either by the methods which have slowly developed international law as a system or international law resulting from world-wide and mutual treaties, which would preserve indefinitely and against legitimate reparations the territorial integrity of all belligerent nations?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator uses the term "legitimate reparations," and I am afraid, with the word "legitimate" injected in the question, it would be difficult for us to get at a determination of the question at all, because I might not agree with him as to what would be legitimate reparations. But leaving that word aside, I will state that I supported article 10 of the League of Nations covenant, in which 27 nations sat at a table and agreed to respect and preserve each other's rights, because I believed that that principle should be international law, not international law in the theory of a textbook writer, but international law in fact and as declared by those nations which were great enough and powerful enough to make it international law. I am glad to say that that principle to-day is recognized by all those nations which signed the treaty of Versailles. But generally international law has never made any such principle effective, and therefore I say in fact, not theory, it has not existed in the world as international law.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator pardon me if I suggest that I do not think it was understood by many of us who supported article 10, and gladly supported it, that a proper interpretation of that article "froze into immutability," to use the language of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the status quo of all nations as their boundaries then existed or as they might be delimited by the instrumentalities set up by the League of Nations. I do not understand that it was intended that the status quo of the boundaries of all nations then existing and those who joined the league was to be forever preserved either by that treaty or by international law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What was intended, as I understand it, was that those rights should not be taken away from a nation by force. Of course, there are tribunals provided for in the League of Nations to determine the questions as matters of right and as matters of justice. I am not contending on that side. What I am contending against is the disruption of national integrity and national sovereignty by force of arms regardless of right or wrong.

I am taking issue only in part with what the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has said. I am not taking issue with him, and did not the other day, as a matter of theory; I am taking issue with him as a matter of fact. I think that every time we make the declaration in the League of Nations or in the treaty now pending that we will respect the rights of other nations and their territorial integrity—and it has only been done in the last few years—we come that much nearer to making a fact of what has been the theory of textbook writers as the law of the world as between nations.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. With pleasure.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Suppose one of the contracting powers fails to observe the obligation of article 1 to respect the sovereignty or independence of China, what course would the other contracting nations pursue?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, my friend and I were both very earnest and very strong supporters of the League of Nations. We both voted for its unconditional ratification. We had that same question asked us about article 10 I do not know how many times. Notwithstanding the question, we voted for article 10. That is aside, but I just wanted to call my friend's attention to our position, because we occupied the same position in that matter.

There is no obligation of force in the pending treaty. There is no obligation that one of the nine nations which signed the treaty can call on another nation to use force. But there is a moral obligation that will make the nation which violates it an outlaw in the face of the world. More than that, a nation which would violate this contract to respect the rights of China would be in a very serious position with eight other nations under this treaty in reference to its position in world affairs. I do not say that an obligation of that kind may not lead to force of arms. Anything may lead to force of arms. But there is no obligation whatever for it to lead to force of arms.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask the Senator what course the other contracting nations would probably pursue if one of the contracting powers should violate its obligation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think they would pursue the same course that this Government pursued as to Shantung, except that there would be nine powers involved instead of one.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator means that the contracting powers would make merely a protest?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They would make their protest so earnest and so forceful that I think the other nation which violated the obligation would reconsider its action and discontinue that violation. I am sure the Senator from Texas agrees with me as to the sanctity of moral obligations. I believe in moral obligations, of men and of nations, and so does the Senator from Texas.

I know there are some men who do not believe that a moral obligation carries weight; there are distinguished and able men on the floor of the Senate who do not believe that the world can be governed by anything but force; who believe that men are only governed by force; but I do believe in the great power and force of moral obligations. I have known the Senator from Texas for twenty-odd years and I know he agrees with me about that. That is the obligation of this treaty; and I think it is idle to say that a treaty in which nine nations have engaged in a contract to respect a great moral principle has no binding force and effect in the lives of nations. I do not know whether or not I have clearly answered my friend's question, but if I have not I will try to do so.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Alabama has not made clear what course the other nations would pursue against an offending nation, a nation failing to carry out its obligations under this treaty, except to say that they would make a protest.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I say they would make a protest; and I can not say anything more, because if a protest should not answer, then, so far as this Nation is concerned in the future, the matter would have to come to the Congress of the United States for an answer to the Senator's question; and I can not answer for future Congresses.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me ask the Senator a further question as to subdivision 2 of article 1, which reads:

(2) To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government.

What course is this Government expected to pursue in order to carry out that subdivision?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, in the first place, not to interfere with the Government of China; and, in the next place, if any other nation should try to interfere with the Government of China, to protest vigorously against such action.

If the Senator from Texas will only review the history of events which confronted the Conference on the Limitation of Armament in connection with far eastern questions when the pending treaty was written, he will realize that these declarations mean a great deal to China. The Chinese people are a great people; they are an industrious, earnest race.

Their civilization dates back far previous to ours. For thousands of years they enjoyed a civilization when our race of people was semibarbarous. They had developed the arts and the sciences; they had adopted religions; and to-day there is hardly a place in the civilized world where the Christian religion is making more rapid and greater strides than it is making in the Republic of China. However, after two or three thousand years under a monarchical government, during which time the people of China had been taught to respect the power and sovereignty of the Emperor, overnight the Government fell and a republican government was established in its stead. There are 400,000,000 people in China, and it takes time for those people to recognize and accept the new form of government as they accepted their government in the past.

Our own Government was in a chaotic condition for at least 10 years after the Revolutionary War; and it has not been more than 10 years since China proclaimed herself a republic. The fact is that the difficulty in China is due to a weakness of the Government. She has been torn asunder by the establishment of a so-called revolutionary government at Canton, covering five of her Provinces. Most of the other Provinces are controlled by military mandarins, who do not respect the mandates or the authority of the Government at Peking. So, governmentally, China is torn asunder. Almost any nation in the world, of modern war power, if left unrestricted, could proceed to dismember the Chinese Republic and tear China asunder. That is what Germany wanted to do at the close of the Boxer rebellion. She was sustained by some of the other powers, and if it had not been for the moral force of the United States protesting against the dismemberment of China her dismemberment would probably have been accomplished at that time.

However, our Government and the people of our country, to their great glory in the history of nations, unselfishly used their moral influence and efforts to protect and maintain the integrity of the Chinese Empire at that time, the sovereignty of their Government, and their existence as a homogeneous people; and it was not done by force of arms; it was done by moral effort and moral suasion.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then, is it the Senator's contention that the opportunity for China to develop and maintain an "effective and stable government," which this article obligates the contracting powers to provide, means merely the exercise of moral influence in that direction?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It goes that far; I do not say it goes farther.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Suppose it should develop that China could not, unaided, maintain internal order or "an effective and stable government" of her own, are we not then obligated under this article to take friendly steps, and military steps, if necessary, in conjunction with the other powers, to aid her in maintaining order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think there is any obligation to that effect.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think there is an obligation to employ whatever means might be necessary to provide the opportunity we promise in the treaty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think there is any obligation to that effect. As to what would be done under the circumstances mentioned, that is a different question. As I said a while ago, that will be a question, so far as our Government is concerned, for the Congress of the United States to answer when the time arrives.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand that the treaty creates a moral obligation to carry out its provisions and then that Congress is to decide how that obligation shall be carried out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I say there is no moral obligation in this treaty for us to use force.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If it should develop that force should be necessary to enable China to maintain "an effective and stable government," then we would be morally obligated to aid in providing it. To my mind, there can be no other conclusion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, the Senator has a right to his own conclusions; I am not disputing with the Senator about his own viewpoint.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is not that the Senator's own viewpoint?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not my viewpoint. I have just said so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will yield, does he not think that this is an affirmative obligation rather than a mere negative one?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I think it is an affirmative obligation, undoubtedly, but not an affirmative obligation that we shall use arms to carry out.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Wherever force shall be necessary or whatever other means shall be necessary, they should be employed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is nothing said about force in this treaty.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; but I say that whatever means shall be necessary to carry out the obligation ought to be employed; otherwise the treaty means nothing.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama indulge me for just a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. KING. The first subdivision of article 1 is what might be denominated a negative obligation; that is, we agree—

(1) To respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China.

Now, obviously that would not require us, if some other nation should aggress upon China, to interfere. There is merely an obligation that we shall respect her integrity. But by subdivision 2—

The contracting powers, other than China, agree—

And this is something affirmative, it seems to me—

(1) To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government.

We agree to do something; and, as the Senator from Texas has suggested, suppose that some power should intervene and should prevent the maintenance of an effective and stable government upon the part of China, how would we carry out the obligation which we assume to enable her to maintain an effective and stable organization? Of course, if we could do it by making representations by acts of conciliation, that would, perhaps, measure up to the requirements; but supposing that all of our efforts in those directions of moral suasion utterly fail, that an aggressive movement was continued by some other nation, and that that aggressive movement not only threatened but culminated in the overthrow of stable government and in the prevention of China establishing a stable government, would the powers which have signed this treaty have discharged their obligation if they should sit down supinely and permit the assumption by some other power of the control of China?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator is through—and I wanted to give him time to make his statement——

Mr. KING. My remarks embrace more than a question. They include a statement and a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am glad to have the Senator make his statement, but I do not think the Senator is correct. I think there is no moral obligation in this treaty of itself to use force, and it was not intended that there should be any moral obligation to use force. I do not say that some day in the future the Government of the United States, expressing its determination through the Congress of the United States, may not say to an offending nation, "Here, you stop," and enforce its orders, or try to enforce them. That is in the realm of speculation, and I am not going into the field of what may happen; but I say there is no moral obligation to use force contracted for on the part of our Government in this treaty, and I do not think it is necessary. I still come back to the proposition that there is a great moral force in this world. For generations and centuries it may have been under the heel of power; but every day and every hour that we live the moral force of men and nations is rising above the mere use of physical force and power and we are coming to the point where those moral forces will dominate the world. I believe in them themselves, and I believe that is what this treaty stands for.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am disposed to take the same view of this matter that the Senator does, that there is no obligation here to use force; but it must be admitted that the question of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is exceedingly pertinent.

By subdivision (1) of article 1 the contracting powers agree—

To respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China.

That is, they all say: "We will keep our hands off. We will not interfere with China."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, so far as we are concerned, then—that is, the contracting powers—the fullest opportunity is given to China herself to develop a stable government.

Now comes in subdivision (2), by which the powers agree—

To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government.

Is that a mere repetition of subdivision (1), or does it mean something else? Is there a supplementary obligation? Is there something more there than the mere matter of respecting the integrity of China—that is to say, keeping our hands off?

To illustrate: Of course, the Senator does not want to conceive of the possibility of Russia being rehabilitated; but, just for the sake of argument, let us conceive of a rehabilitated Russia, which invades China, and thus prevents China from setting up for herself and developing and maintaining an effective and stable government. We agree by this provision to provide for China—the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity * * * to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government.

Would that obligate us to keep Russia off?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I think not. I do not think there is any obligation in this treaty for us to keep Russia off; but I do not say that we would not do it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no; I agree; but the question is, What does this mean? What obligation do we assume?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My construction of it, and listening to the discussion of the treaty around the board by the men who made it, my viewpoint is—and I think that is the viewpoint of the men who made the treaty—that when they say:

To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity—

They meant it as if they had said:

To encourage the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity.

In other words, these declarations are declarations on the part of these nine nations as to what they will do. They are obligating themselves around that board between themselves, believing at the time this treaty was made that they were the only nations directly interested who could sit at the board. Of course, if Russia had had a government that our Government and the other Governments recognized, she would have been invited to the board; but as our Government and the Governments of these other eight nations did not recognize Russia, she was not invited to the board; but she is the only nation in all the world that might have been invited that had any interest in the matter.

Of course, I recognize that the word "provide" might be construed to mean something else, but I understand these obligations in section (1) to relate not to outside sources, not to be an obligation as to what we are going to do in reference to other nations; but as to these other eight nations sitting at the board with China, making nine in all, it is a contract on their part as to what they will do in reference to this matter. Of course, if some outside power came into the field and tried to overthrow this agreement, then it would be up to the Congress of the United States and the Governments of other nations to determine, independently of any obligation here, what they would do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in the case of internal disturbances, suppose it should develop that China, on account of one-half of her territory being under the control of one government and the other half under the control of another, was unable to maintain internal order. What, then, would be the duty of these contracting powers?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course there is no obligation at all as to internal matters. The Government at Peking practically changed twice, I think, in real control while this conference was being held.

Mr. SHEPPARD. But this subdivision makes no distinction between internal matters and external matters. It says:

To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To be sure—to China.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Suppose it should develop that she is unable to develop and maintain for herself a stable and effective government. Are we not then obligated to aid her in establishing a stable government?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is it not true that the language itself answers the Senator's question? In other words, it is for China to develop for herself an effective and stable government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FLETCHER. The only thing that the contracting parties agree here to do is that so far as they are concerned they will contribute as best they may in trade, in good will, in encouragement and support, toward achieving the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FLETCHER. In other words, she is to be given not military aid or naval aid or some other kind of aid, but she is to be given, so far as they can give it by their encouragement and support and cooperation, the opportunity to build and establish her own government. It is entirely for her to determine her own affairs and her domestic questions. They must be settled by herself, and the government must be established by China herself, and be made effective and stable by her.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What would be the case if it should develop that China is unable to maintain internal order?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no obligation here on the part of anybody else to interfere with that at all, as I understand.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then this treaty amounts to very little.

Mr. FLETCHER. Really, section (2) of article 2 is not much more than a statement of sections (3) and (4). Sections (3) and (4) are along the same line and in the same direction, and back of them is the same spirit, as I understand.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly the Senator from Florida is right. Of course, when we come to construing language, there are a vast number of constructions that we can place on it; but when this treaty, in section (2) of article 2, contracts—

To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government—

It means just what it says; it means an unembarrassed opportunity from us, the other contracting powers, for her to set up her own form of government, without being embarrassed by any action on our part; and if the Senator will read the other clauses, as the Senator from Florida suggests, they clearly sustain the whole article.

Section 3 reads:

To use their influence for the purpose of effectually establishing and maintaining the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations throughout the territory of China.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That relates to other nations, not to China.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. "To use their influence."

Mr. SHEPPARD. That provides equal opportunity for other nations. Section 2 means "opportunity for China herself."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To be sure; but this is opportunity for China as well as for us. If the Senator knew the difficulties in China at present, he would realize that this section means something:

For the purpose of effectually establishing and maintaining the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations.

The real difficulty in China has been that her Government has been so weak that when any other power faced her and demanded concessions during the last two decades she has been compelled to yield, and to yield whether she wanted to or not.

Mr. SHEPPARD. And the very powers that are now uniting in this solemn obligation to respect what is left of her territorial and administrative integrity are the powers that have been pillaging her and plundering her.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not all of them, by any means. This Government, although it may have some bad marks against it in parts of the world, can not be accused of ever having pillaged or plundered China, and I think that may be said for most of the powers that signed this treaty.

There we simply contract to use our influence against these efforts. We also contract—

To refrain from taking advantage of conditions in China—

The treaty recognizes the present conditions—

To refrain from taking advantage of conditions in China in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of subjects or citizens of friendly States, and from countenancing action inimical to the security of such States.

This treaty is an absolute declaration of right to China on the part of eight other nations sitting at that table. It is something that I do not think has ever happened in the history of the world before. Here was a great territory, practically as large as the United States, having a population of over 400,000,000 people, not savages, but people of an old civilization; not one that would satisfy us, probably, but an old civilization that satisfies them; people of high moral character, because it is said, and it is probably true, that there is no man more honest in his individual dealings than a Chinaman, and honesty is a test of character the world around; a people who had built great highways when the western world was a wilderness; a people who have erected great buildings, who established the silk industry, and taught the world how to raise and manufacture silk. Here is this great nation which, because it had fallen without an effective government, was the prey of any nation that desired to rape its territory; and all that has been done in this pact by these nations is to guarantee among themselves—every nation sitting at the board, except Russia, that could possibly be interested in that territory—the rights of these peoples, their territorial integrity, their right to govern themselves, their protection in their trade, and equal opportunity to all nations in that territory.

You may criticize this pact and say that some of China's territory has been taken and not returned. You may say that Japan has not given up Port Arthur. Japan acquired Port Arthur under the same right, if it be a right, the right of power, under which we acquired the Philippine Islands, the State of California, and the States of New Mexico and Arizona; she acquired it as a concession at the end of a war. You may say that she is in Manchuria and has only promised to come out, and has not come out. I think she will come out.

Those are matters of the past. There is no man on this floor who can deny that China's territorial integrity and her national sovereignty are not the better off because this treaty has been made, and we are not making this treaty for ourselves; we are making it for a great people, 400,000,000 people, and a territory they have lived in and possessed for 4,000 years. They have the right of protection at home and the right to govern themselves. What we claim here in these States of our own we are freely and willingly giving to our neighbor.

I say no such thing ever happened in the history of the world before, when nine great powers, which are capable of tearing a nation to pieces, meet in solemn conclave and agree to protect the right of the nation which is down until she can maintain her standing among the nations again, get on her feet, and develop her national life and her Government in the interest of her own people.

No more altruistic treaty has ever been written in the annals of nations than this, and I believe it means great good to the world. I believe that with this understanding between these nations such disputes as have arisen about China's territory will not occur in the future as to new aggressions or new conditions which may arise. I believe these eight nations which have contracted with China will live true to the terms of this treaty, and it is a great onward step in the history of nations, viewed from the high moral plane of national understanding.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the debate has departed very widely from the particular question which precipitated it, and with reference to that I desire to say that I am very highly gratified indeed that there is so little difference between the distinguished Senator from Alabama and myself. I want it distinctly understood that so far as I am concerned—and I believe it is the correct principle of international law—any nation which invades the territory of another nation, makes war upon it, is a lawbreaker. If I understood the position of the Senator from Alabama correctly the other day, he said he thought it was not a lawbreaker. I understand now that he does not take that position.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I may not have made myself as clear the other day as I should have done. My position was not that it was not a lawbreaker, but that they did continually break the law, which prevented it from being international law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is no doubt about that, and to make myself clear upon that matter, Mr. President, I think every individual member of society in any civilized country by becoming a member of such society undertakes that he will respect the rights of person and property of his neighbors, and the law raises an implied undertaking upon his part that he will do so. If he does not do so, but seizes without right the property of his neighbor, the law implies an obligation upon his part to pay for it, and he may be sued in contract.

It does not by any means prove that a principle is not a principle of international law because it has been repeatedly violated. Indeed, you can hardly conceive of a claim of one nation against another nation except that claim arises by reason of a breach either of a treaty or of some principle of international law.

I said that one, by becoming a member of society, undertakes that he will respect the rights of person and property of every other member of society, and that is my conception of the relation existing between members of the great family of nations. When we recognize the Government of a certain country, its representative comes here, presents his credentials to the President of the United States, and the President of the United States recognizes him as the representative of a Government exercising jurisdiction over a certain area, and by that act it appears to me that we undertake that we will respect that territory.

In the case of the individual member of society, if he violates his implied obligation to respect the rights of his neighbor he may be haled into a court and compelled to do justice, and the court will apply the principle to which I have adverted. Unfortunately, up to the present time we have been unable to set up any international tribunal before which an offending nation may thus be haled.

My part of the country was settled up before there was any established government, and if one did a wrong to his neighbor the wronged individual had no court to which he could appeal, but he was obliged to take the law into his own hands and go out and exact rude justice according to his own notions. That is the state of affairs in the world. So a nation, feeling that it has been wronged, takes the law into its own hands. But I would have it understood that in that case it must justify its conduct to the world; it must expose to the world that it has exhausted every means of securing justice for its alleged or claimed wrongs before it resorts to war to exact justice from its neighbor.

Reference was made to the Mexican War and to the Monroe doctrine in the course of the discussion here. What is the Monroe doctrine except a recognition of the principle for which I am contending? The United States declared to every nation in Europe, "You have obligated yourselves to respect the integrity of the South American Republics, and we propose to see that you observe that obligation into which you have entered." Otherwise there is no justification for our conduct at all in the matter. We are merely saying, "We will not tolerate or palliate upon your part any excuse for invading this territory. If you have any cause of complaint against these people, we propose to see that it is determined in some other way than by invading their territory or challenging their sovereignty."

It will be recalled very well that in the Mexican War we did not invade Mexico claiming any right to do so; nor did we claim we were not obligated under international law to refrain from doing so, but whether it was specious or otherwise, President Polk set up the claim that Mexico had invaded our territory, and he proposed to drive the Mexicans from our territory, and to punish them for the wrong done us. That may or may not have been specious, but we felt called upon to put forth to the world an excuse for our invasion of Mexico, or a justification of it.

That is all that interests me in this matter. I do not want to have a wrong done by Germany in invading the territory of Belgium or of France palliated in the slightest degree by the contention that there was no international wrong done. I speak entirely aside from the specific obligation under which she rested to respect and to preserve the territorial integrity of Belgium. Without regard to the specific treaty in that case, I think the world ought to hold that Germany had impliedly obligated herself to respect the territory of these countries, and to refrain from invading them, and she can only defend herself, if she can defend herself at all, by establishing her contention that she was acting in self-defense. Of course, the world does not accept that excuse, and I am sure the German people to-day can scarcely believe it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during the debates upon the treaties before us the discussion has taken wide range. While some of the treaties prepared at the Washington conference have been the subject of criticism, there has been a disposition upon the part of Senators to discover whatever merits these treaties possess and to appraise the work of the conference at its highest possible value. I have given to the treaties most earnest consideration and have been desirous of finding sufficient reasons to justify their ratification. I believe that some of the treaties possess merit and call for the approval of the Senate. It is my conviction, however, that when the work of the conference is fully analyzed and appraised many of the boastful claims made in its behalf will be successfully challenged by the American people, and there will be widespread disappointment because the results will fall so far below expectations. This anticlimax will be largely due to the extensive propaganda carried on throughout the United States by some partisan Republicans and by many hysterical and emotional people, whose desires for world peace and the abatement of war led them to think that the Washington conference had united all nations and secured universal disarmament and world peace.

Senators have been importuned to ratify this series of treaties upon the ground that they provided for complete disarmament. The letters and petitions received by Senators indicate the misapprehension existing among the people as to the purposes and the accomplishments of the conference; and I repeat, that further investigation of the work of the conference and the effects of the treaties will bring disillusionment to many who have been promised such marvelous results from the conference.

I hope the treaty on the limitation of naval armament may prove of great value and lighten somewhat the burdens of taxation, not only in the United States, but in other countries. But the effects of this treaty have been, in my opinion, greatly exaggerated and distorted. The people were led to believe that it would end naval warfare and lead to the destruction of warcraft and all other weapons and agencies employed in naval wars. This treaty was universally acclaimed as the supreme achievement of the conference. As stated throughout the land the view prevailed that it would bring about world disarmament, and that it presaged a millennial era. But an examination of this treaty discloses many defects and serious imperfections.

Naval warfare has undergone remarkable development during the last decade and vital changes as the result of the lessons and experiences of the recent war. Certain naval experts in Great Britain regarded the capital ship as the greatest and the highest possible agency in naval warfare. They were unwilling to admit that the progress of science and of naval development could produce an instrumentality of a factor that would menace or challenge or in any manner impair the preeminence of the capital ship. That view was accepted by some of the naval experts in the United States, and they planned a navy which disregarded or disparaged submarines and aircraft and other agencies and factors which have weakened the claims of the capital ship and compelled a revision of naval standards regarded by self-complacent experts as immutable because of their supposed perfection. The Battle of Jutland and the experiences of the war demonstrated the importance of mines, bombs, torpedoes, aircraft, destroyers, swift cruisers, and submarines, and have left the naval experts who clung so tenaciously to the capital ship in an amazed and bewildered condition.

I called attention yesterday to the fact that the Air Minister of Great Britain but a few days ago, in his speech in the House of Commons, emphasized the importance of aircraft, not only for defensive, but for offensive naval and military operations. The report of his address indicated that he looked upon aerial warcraft as of paramount importance. His statements conveyed the thought that future wars would be fought in the air and from the air rather than upon land or upon the surface of the sea.

Mr. Churchill, during the course of his debate, referred to the remarkable development in aerial warcraft, and stated in substance that if the World War had continued longer, the aircraft of the allied nations would have carried destruction and defeat to the armies of the Central Empires.

After the United States entered the war intensive study was given to the development of explosives and gases for use in aerial warfare, and we were assured by the Secretary of War that the armistice alone prevented a most deadly and destructive rain of explosives and gases upon the German armies, and also upon German cities. Many scientific men believe that the wars of the future will be fought by aircraft, and by submarines, and by naval craft lighter than battleships and battle cruisers, and by other forces and agencies, perhaps, not yet fully developed. The Washington conference did not deal with aerial warcraft or submarines or swift-sailing cruisers, or warcraft of less than 10,000 tons, or bombs or torpedoes or mines. It established a ratio of capital ships to be observed by the United States, Great Britain, France, Japan, and Italy, but it did not limit the use of submarines or aircraft or naval war vessels of less than 10,000 tons, or mines, or other agencies of destruction.

Undoubtedly there will be astounding progress in war mechanics, and important development in the use of submarines, and of all forms of aerial craft unless a world association of nations creates a spirit of concord among the nations. Swift flying machines will be invented, having a radius of many hundreds of miles and capable of carrying large torpedoes and bombs, explosives, and deadly gases which will work havoc and prove powerful factors in war, both upon land and upon sea. France is already building larger and swifter submarines, and the same is true of other nations. We will soon have undersea craft with a cruising radius of thousands of miles. Vessels will be constructed that will carry scores of aerial craft, and new methods of sowing the seas with mines will be discovered. Warcraft with great speed will be constructed, and they will be powerful factors in deciding sea contests. In other words, we will probably witness great advancement in all forms of warcraft, the cost of which will be prodigious, and the savings resulting from capital ship limitation will be absorbed in the construction of various other forms of naval warcraft.

I called the attention of the Senate yesterday to the able article written by Archibald Hurd, the great naval expert, appearing in the Fortnightly Review of January, 1922. Mr. Hurd apparently discovers no advantage in this treaty and no relief from the burdens of naval construction.

He declares that the treaty does little more than vary the factors of naval power, that it scraps obsolescent capital ships, but adds to the submarine tonnage and transfers expenditures from capital ships to other kinds of naval warcraft and instrumentalities to be employed in naval warfare. He points to the fact that the plan announced by Secretary Hughes leaves to the three powers a large tonnage of submarines which will result in increasing the number of cruisers, because cruisers in association with smaller craft, constitute the antidote to the submarine. Mr. Hurd also indicates that with the increased use of submarines it will lead to a general movement to arm merchant ships and compel those nations which have any considerable mercantile marine to maintain an enormous number of patrol craft.

Mr. Launcelot Lawton, in an article in the Fortnightly Review of February, 1922, appraises the Washington conference and declares in substance that its work has changed but little the territorial arrangement of the Far East, nor affected the situation strategically. He states that "Great Britain retains Hongkong and France Saigon with its splendid anchorage of Camranh Bay, and that Japan's position in Manchuria and Mongolia is strengthened." He further declares that, in view of the geographic realities, the ratio of battleships was not so important to Japan as some would believe, and that with the possession of submarines and airplanes her position is as impregnable as any position could be. He finally concludes that the success of the conference is "only spectacular and superficial, the Pacific problem remains in fact unsolved, and the evil day of reckoning has merely been postponed."

The Washington conference, in my opinion, missed the opportunity to bring proper reductions in the naval budgets of the world. I predict that demands will be made for large appropriations to strengthen our Navy, to increase the number of submarines, to build airplane carriers and various forms of aircraft, and to develop other factors which will become increasingly important in naval warfare as the years go by. If we do have a naval holiday in capital ship construction there will be no naval holiday in other lines of naval warcraft development, nor will there be any surcease in behalf of the American taxpayer from heavy burdens which the maintenance of our Navy will place upon him, unless international efforts are put forth to supplement the work of the League of Nations and that of the Washington conference.

In my opinion, substantially the same results in the limitation of naval armament attained by the Washington conference could have been secured if Congress, when it had under consideration the naval appropriation bill in the special session in May, 1921, had announced its abandonment of the 1915–16 naval program which provided for 17 capital ships, and if Senators and Congressmen had declared for a naval policy calling for material reductions in capital ship construction.

Great Britain during the latter part of the war constructed no capital ships and has built none since the war. The same is true of France and many other nations. This policy was adopted because of the enormous cost of capital ships and because they believed that the League of Nations would evolve a plan which would bring about both naval and land disarmament and introduce new and effective agencies to adjust and settle international controversies. Japan also was in a position to welcome any program that would permit her to reduce her military and naval budget.

May I add parenthetically that I have deprecated the severe assaults made here and elsewhere upon Japan and Great Britain and other nations? I have sometimes felt that some Americans have been too critical of other nations. Japan's progress and development challenge the admiration of the world. The Japanese people have serious problems, not the least of which is the racial question, which has been provocative of so much distrust, misunderstanding, and, indeed, resentment. But the mass of the people of Japan desire peace, and the liberal and democratic forces are being strengthened and it is believed will soon, if they do not now, control her policies. Japan's domestic and foreign policies, it is thought by many who are familiar with her present situation, will be determined by those elements in Japan which seek moral and intellectual progress and peace and fellowship with the world. I am not condoning or seeking to extenuate those policies of Japan which have been and still are imperialistic, but I do believe that the American people should seek to more clearly understand the Japanese point of view and treat with less rancor and antipathy and, indeed, with greater sympathy a nation and a people who have come out of the past full panoplied for world position and world service as Minerva sprang from the brow of Jove.

Many jingoists and those who insisted upon the United States adopting a naval policy that would cost hundreds of millions affected to believe that Great Britain and Japan had designs against the peace of the United States. The fact is that Great Britain has sought the friendship of the United States and has desired that a community of interests be recognized. What is true of Great Britain is likewise true of her Dominions. Canada, Australia, New Zealand—all entertain for the United States an enduring friendship. It is true questions arise from time to time which produce irritation, but Great Britain and her Dominions appreciate the importance of maintaining amicable relations with the United States. There are racial, linguistic, religious, and intellectual ties which tend to unite nations and bring into bonds of amity peoples of different nations.

When it was announced that our 1916 naval program giving the United States naval supremacy in the world would be completed, officials of Great Britain announced that she would not seek to prevent America's naval preeminence. She desired to terminate all naval rivalry, and even the jingoist cries of the United States did not provoke her to a race for naval supremacy.

Japan's naval program, which was the subject of consideration at the Washington conference, was prepared 12 or 15 years ago. Work upon it had but slow progress, and I believe that the best thought of Japan favored a modification of that program. The movement of our fleet to the Pacific coast, the constant demands for fortifications in the Pacific, and the enormous appropriations to execute the 1916 program, calling for a Navy the greatest in all the world, together with the great flood of bitter criticism of Japan which periodically if not constantly inundated the United States, undoubtedly filled some of the Japanese people with fears and apprehensions. They were not able to understand why the United States, with its wealth and power, with its inexhaustible resources, should be so feverishly engaged in naval construction. Japan knew that she could not send her fleet across the Pacific and attack the United States. Her people knew that Great Britain had no designs upon the United States and, indeed, that no other nation or combination of nations desired any controversy with this Nation. The situation gave the reactionaries and the jingoists of Japan an excuse to inflame sections of Japan's population against the United States. Undoubtedly, some portions of the Japanese press and many of the people were led to believe that we sought territorial acquisition in the Pacific, either insular possessions or certain economic or other concessions upon the Asiatic mainland. But, I repeat, Japan earnestly desired some manifestation upon the part of the United States of a purpose to abandon any competitive naval policy. We all know that Japan entered the League of Nations with the utmost enthusiasm, and the Emperor of Japan issued a statement immediately following the signing of the Versailles treaty in which, speaking for the Japanese people, he proclaimed their loyalty to peace and their desire to observe the obligations imposed upon Japan by the Versailles treaty and the covenant of the League of Nations.

Mr. President, there is much in the record to justify the charge that the naval rivalry which has existed since the war has been largely due to the naval activity upon the part of the United States. This Nation has been the storm center of naval activity. If at the close of the war we had announced an abandonment or a modification of the 1916 program, Japan would have materially modified her naval program, and our belligerent and militant attitude has been largely responsible for the naval expenditures incurred by other nations since the termination of the war, as well, of course, as those which the United States has been compelled to meet.

The treaty limiting naval armament, we all sincerely hope, will not only reduce naval expenditures but be promotive of a better international understanding. It is unfortunate that more nations did not participate in the conference and that the subject of naval disarmament was not treated in a broader and more comprehensive manner. Unfortunately, we still have submarines and destroyers and war vessels of less than 10,000 tons, and aerial fighting craft and mines and other known agencies of naval warfare and of death and destruction. There is no limit fixed by this treaty upon these agencies and instrumentalities. Thousands of cruisers and naval war craft, provided the tonnage of each vessel is less than 10,000, can be constructed. Submarines without limit as to number or size may be built; indeed, whatever weapon science or the genius of man may devise to carry on naval warfare, may be used without limit, except capital ships. And, as I have indicated, many experts believe that their days are numbered, and that without treaties limiting their construction, their preeminence as fighting craft would soon be denied and their use greatly reduced.

It is to be regretted that the conference was unable to deal with all agencies which in the future will constitute the forces for naval as well as land warfare. The work of the conference, conceding what many claim for it, demonstrates the importance of a world conference, a world League of Nations, which is empowered to deal not only with naval limitation but with the question of world disarmament.

France felt disinclined to ban submarines so long as other nations might employ them and so long as her security was not assured. The League of Nations, with the broad program for which it stands, can deal with all questions involved and bring to France and other nations that assurance of territorial integrity and protection as will banish their fears, and which led them unreservedly to assent to a disarmament program which would involve all nations of the league.

It is claimed by some enthusiastic and partisan Republicans that the treaties numbered 6 and 7, which relate to the principles and policies to be followed in matters concerning China and providing Chinese customs tariff, are remarkable achievements and will be of great interest to the inhabitants of China. I am unable to accept this view and believe that further study of these treaties and their operation will not justify the vainglorious claims made in their behalf.

Treaty No. 6 is merely a reaffirmation of the open-door policy which was proclaimed many years ago, and adhesion to which has been given by all signatories to this treaty. Moreover, all such signatories who accepted the covenant of the League of Nations gave solemn assurance that they would respect the territorial integrity and political independence of China. The Versailles treaty and the covenant of the League of Nations provide China guaranties and protection far more important than the provisions of the treaty which I am now discussing. If Japan, Great Britain, France, Belgium, and Portugal will not observe their solemn obligations contained in the league covenant with respect to China and her integrity and independence and the open door, they will not observe the terms of this treaty and the protestations therein made.

This treaty gives China no more—indeed, gives her much less—than does the League of Nations, to which China is a party. It does, however, give her the assurance that the United States seeks no advantages to China's hurt, and will respect her sovereignty and independence. Did China need such assurances from the United States? Is China benefited by our assurances? As stated, she not only has assurances from the other nations signatories to this treaty, but she has other solemn covenants not only to respect her territorial and administrative integrity but to guarantee the same. Moreover, the United States has in the past declared for China's economic and political freedom. Obviously, this treaty means nothing to China, and is of no importance to the United States. It is a friendly declaration—a sort of magnificent international gesture, and that is all. No one is deceived by it except some thoughtless people who were anxious to discredit the league, disparage the work of President Wilson, and ascribe to the present administration achievements surpassing those of all time.

Treaty No. 7 is a repudiation of the solemn and pious protestations contained in treaty No. 6. It in effect treats China as a conquered province, or at least as a nation incapable of managing her own affairs. Protesting that her integrity and independence will be respected, this treaty fastens upon her a tariff law by which she is restricted to imposing tariff duties of substantially 5 per cent upon importations. The United States, while joining in binding China by treaty so that she may not impose tariff duties upon American articles introduced into China, is providing a tariff bill laying duties so high as to prohibit imports in many instances.

It has been the traditional policy of the United States not to interfere with the internal affairs of other nations or to control the exercise of their sovereign national rights. The laying of duties is a sovereign right of a nation. China has the right, as an independent nation, to determine its own domestic policy and to lay and collect such taxes as she may desire in her own way and according to the national will. An attempt to require China, by treaty or otherwise, to fix the tariff duties which she may be permitted to lay and collect on imports, or to control the internal taxation of China, is in contravention of the settled policy of the United States and an unwarranted interference with the independent powers and sovereign rights of the Chinese Government.

And yet this treaty limits the power of China to lay and collect taxes upon imports. China is weak, and because of internal dissensions feels unable, perhaps, to assert herself and her independence as she otherwise would. European nations, years ago, coerced her into the signing of treaties abridging her sovereign powers and restricting the tariff duties which she laid upon imports. The United States became a party to treaties which perpetuated this wrong and this infringement upon the sovereign power of the Chinese State. It is urged that because China came to the peace table bound by tariff treaties there was no impropriety in negotiating another which slightly ameliorated her condition and permitted an inconsiderable increase in tariff duties. The principle to me is intolerable. I think it is an affront to China, a grave wrong committed against a sovereign State and against the dignity and honor of a great people. And yet this is one of the ornaments of the Washington conference, which produces choruses of adulation and songs of glorification of the marvelous achievements of the Washington conference.

Mr. President, the American people should study carefully, dispassionately, and indeed sympathetically the work of the conference. I have attempted to do so, earnestly desiring to support the treaties there framed. The result of my investigations has brought the conviction that the conference missed some opportunities for higher service and that the net results of its accomplishments, beneficial as they may be and doubtless are, will prove increasingly disappointing as the days go by.

I now come to a discussion of the four-power treaty. Its provisions have been analyzed and the discussion has been so searching and comprehensive that I can not hope to add much of value to the discussion. Much was said during the debate as to who prepared the four-power treaty, and there was criticism because of the limited information furnished by the President and by the State Department as to the genesis of the treaty, as well as the reasons for its preparation. I have not been so much concerned as to who prepared the treaty. I have been profoundly interested in the terms of the treaty and in the reasons assigned for its existence. In my opinion, no sufficient explanation has been offered to justify its ratification by the Senate of the United States. I assume that no sufficient explanation can be offered. I believe that the more the treaty is examined the stronger will be the opposition to it. Some persons have sought to justify it because they believed that it removed the United States from its isolation and signalized the active participation of this Republic in the affairs of the world.

It has been suggested by one Senator that "it introduces the United States into the League of Nations by means of the back door." I am not able to accept that view. If I believed that this treaty would be instrumental in taking the United States into the League of Nations, I should vote for it, imperfect, ambiguous, and uncertain as are its provisions; but I fear that it will be calculated to weaken the league and embarrass its operations and provoke international groupings, combinations, alliances, and counteralliances which will inevitably result in international strife and possible sanguinary conflicts.

Let me say at this point, although I shall return to the matter later in my remarks, that if Russia regards this treaty as an alliance among the United States, Japan, Great Britain, and France, she will undoubtedly seek a counter alliance. It is known that Germany is displeased with the attitude of Japan, Great Britain, and France and is exhibiting a disposition to refuse to execute her obligations under the Versailles treaty. Germany, perhaps more than any other nation, is interested in the rehabilitation of Russia. Before the war Russia was one of Germany's best markets and Germany annually purchased hundreds of millions of Russia's products. Russia's prosperity depends largely upon Germany, whose rehabilitation will only come with Russia's prosperity. It is natural that these two mighty nations should seek close economic relations. Thus they will naturally be brought into close political relations. We also know that Russia is now seeking to establish intimate relations with China.

Controversies over boundaries and Provinces in Siberia and northern China will doubtless be compromised in order to bring these two States into more friendly relations. Undoubtedly, this quadruple alliance, or agreement, unless it is expanded or amplified so as to include China and Russia, will tend to bring them together. In my opinion China's opposition to this treaty will increase when the people of that nation discover its terms, its implications, and, above all, its apparent aggrandizement among the nations of the earth of the Japanese Empire.

The world to-day needs not a four-power alliance, not a combination or group of four of the great military and naval powers of the earth, no matter how beneficent the announced purposes of the alliance may be, but it needs a league of all nations, an association in which all will be partners and which furnishes the machinery, the instrumentalities, and the sanctions for the determination of international controversies and the adjustment and settlement of all causes of war.

Mr. President, some who have supported the treaty base their arguments upon the alleged innocuousness of the treaty. They contend that it is so harmless and anemic as to provoke no fears or apprehensions upon the part of nations outside of the combination. Of course that view is not tenable; but if it were, undoubtedly some nations will regard the treaty as the basis of an alliance upon the part of four great powers, and they will, in attempting to fathom its purpose and ascertain the reason for its existence, perceive some sinister or menacing design and plan to advance the interests of the four nations involved or to interpose obstacles to the advancement and development of some other nation or nations. If it is an alliance and stands for the purposes which have usually brought nations together in an alliance, then it will prove a distinct evil, if not a menace, and will injuriously affect the peace and honor of the United States, if not the peace of the world.

Mr. President, I repeat that no satisfactory explanation has been offered to justify the ratification of this treaty. Frantic efforts have been made to indissolubly connect it with the other treaties to which I have referred, as well as those which I have not mentioned but which were formulated at the Washington conference, and statements have been made by some advocates of the four-power treaty that unless the Senate ratified it the other treaties might be defeated. Indeed, Senators have stated that unless that treaty were ratified they would vote against the treaty limiting naval armament.

The attitude of many earnest defenders of the treaty has been equivalent to a threat, and indicated that they would coerce, if they could not convince, Senators to vote for the ratification of the four-power pact. In my opinion it is disingenuous, if not insincere, to contend that the other treaties are dependent upon this quadruple alliance treaty, and that their fate will or should be determined by the Senate's action upon the latter.

The resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho, which became the basis for calling the Washington conference, did not contemplate a treaty such as the four-power pact. During the discussion of the naval appropriation bill in the early part of 1921 the navalistic régime and the jingoists throughout the land clamored for enormous appropriations, and demanded the building of the largest Navy in the world. Some Senators opposed these hysterical appeals and contended that the 1915–16 naval program should be abandoned because it was archaic and because its completion would not only entail huge expenditures but would inevitably provoke other nations to enlarge their navies and increase their naval budgets. The American people were not in favor of the navalistic policies advocated by the Naval Board and by bellicose and militant American citizens, and demanded that the naval expenditures be materially reduced. Senators will recall that some of us who opposed the naval bill which was enacted into law in May last insisted that if the United States suspended naval construction upon capital ships other nations would welcome the decision and promptly follow the example. I remember bringing to the attention of the Senate the statement of a British naval official who declared in the House of Commons that the attitude of the United States in carrying forward the construction of 17 huge capital ships would compel Great Britain, which was then building no capital ships, to revise her naval program and begin work upon the construction of super-Hoods; that is, of capital ships of greater dimensions and power than any the United States was building.

Senators also took the position that if the capital ships of the 1916 program were completed, in view of the effect such action would have upon other nations causing them to construct one or more larger battleships and in view of the developments in aircraft and submarines, they would be obsolescent, if not obsolete, when completed, so that after having spent hundreds of millions the United States would then not have an efficient, scientific, and modern fleet.

Mr. President, it was apparent during the consideration of the naval bill in the spring of 1921 that the time had come to limit naval as well as military armament. The League of Nations was hampered in working out a program for world disarmament by the militant position of the United States. Japan and Great Britain, as well as some other nations, were reluctant, if not unwilling, to assent to a plan calling for the disarmament of the nations within the league, while the United States, and perhaps Russia, were outside the league and were exhibiting a military, if not an imperialistic, attitude. Some nations suspected then, and they suspect now, the motives and the aims of the United States. They are not convinced that the American people are free from the ambitions and appetites which have guided many powerful nations. They remember that we took Porto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippine Islands from Spain. It is true we gave to Cuba an autonomous government, but nevertheless it is so bound that it may not break certain bonds uniting that Republic and the United States. Some nations likewise remember that we took from Mexico a large part of her domain; that we acquired Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands and the Philippine Islands; and that we occupied with naval forces Haiti and Santo Domingo.

Following the World War the President of the United States went to Europe to aid in preparing a treaty which would consolidate the gains of the war and also liquidate its liabilities and provide for the disordered condition in the world. Pursuant to announcements made in eloquent and impressive terms—announcements which had received enthusiastic support from the enlightened and liberal forces of the world—President Wilson, with other great statesmen, projected a plan to bring all nations into world fellowship and into a virile and effective league which would be authorized, without interfering with the sovereign and national authority of its members, to apply the principles of justice and international law to prevent controversies, promote peace, and bring about world disarmament. The treaty which he signed was not ratified, and the peoples of many nations regard the action of this Republic, in rejecting the treaty and the league, as tantamount to a declaration of hostility to the league and to its purposes, and as evidence of a design upon the part of the United States to pursue a policy of isolation and selfishness.

Notwithstanding the great work which the league has done and the multiplying evidence of its importance, and indeed its imperative necessity to cure the ills of the world and to promote world peace, this Nation has, under the Republican administration, exhibited an implacable hatred of the league and a determined purpose to thwart the execution of the plans which it projects and the policies which in good faith it is seeking to execute.

In view of these facts shall we hastily condemn those who distrust the United States and regard it as possessing imperialistic designs? Of course, we know that we have no selfish ends to serve and sincerely desire the welfare of all nations.

Mr. President, during the war and before the United States entered the conflict, Congress enacted a measure which "authorized and directed the President to call a conference for the purpose of considering and bringing about a reduction in the naval strength of the world." The war prevented President Wilson from immediately acting upon the authority given, but at the Paris conference he attempted to secure not only a reduction in the naval strength of the world but to bring about a general disarmament.

Early in 1921 the Senator from Idaho offered a resolution which in effect directed the President to call together in conference the United States, Great Britain, and Japan in order that a policy might be agreed upon to secure a proportionate reduction in the naval strength of these powers. This resolution was opposed by the President of the United States and by the leaders of the Republican Party. This fact was made known in the press and was revealed by the statements of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] upon the floor of the Senate. He declared in substance that the President did not believe there was any necessity for the resolution. Public opinion and the insistence of the Democrats in Congress compelled the administration to accept the Borah resolution, and it passed both Houses with practical unanimity.

Pursuant to this resolution the President issued invitations to a few nations to attend a conference to be held in Washington beginning November 11. The conference was primarily called to consider the limitation of naval armament. It is true reference was made in the formal invitation extended by the President to the discussion of Pacific and far eastern questions. The agenda prepared did not provide for the discussion of a four-power treaty, nor did it indicate that the conference would be asked to agree upon such a treaty. The Secretary of State, in his notable address when the conference was opened, in a rather bold and dramatic way presented a plan for the limitation of naval armament upon the part of Great Britain, Japan, and the United States. The delegates, and the people of the United States generally, approved this plan and welcomed a program that seemed to promise relief from the staggering burdens which competitive rivalry in naval craft involved. There was no thought at the time that a four-power treaty would be negotiated. The work of the conference centered around the limitation of naval armament, and but slight attention was given by the American people to any other subject before the conference. Later, when the treaty was presented it came as a shock to the public. Nothing had foreshadowed its appearance and no sufficient reason for its presentation was suggested.

Following the adjournment of the conference the people began to appraise its work, and everywhere the question was propounded, "Why was this treaty formulated, and what relation does it bear to the purpose for which the conference was called, as that purpose was announced in the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho?"

No adequate reason for the treaty was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts when he presented it to the plenary session. Neither he nor the able Senator from Alabama has submitted convincing reasons for its ratification by the Senate. The eloquent appeals that have fallen from the lips of the Senator from Massachustts and other Senators who opposed the treaty of Versailles for world peace, for the removal of the causes of war, and for the reign of law and of international fellowship, excited surprise and amazement when the attitude of the same Senators, with respect to the Versailles treaty, was recalled.

The efforts of President Wilson to promote world peace and to bring all nations into world fellowship were bitterly opposed by the Senator from Massachusetts and others who now so loudly avow their devotion to the cause of peace and world amity. One can scarcely believe that there has been a sincere conversion, and Senators and others may be pardoned if they experience skepticism when they listen to the fervid appeals of these new converts for a broader and more generous world spirit.

We were offered the opportunity to ratify a treaty that would not only have limited naval armament but would have brought about, within a reasonable time, the practical disarmament of all nations. The four-power treaty is a pitiful thing, if one is to believe the views of its advocates in the Senate who are urging ratification, but it may be a treacherous and a menacing instrument if it is to be interpreted, as contended by some who are its supporters and others who are its opponents. There is so much of doubt and uncertainty as to its meaning and implications and purposes as not only to justify but to demand the most careful scrutiny of its provisions.

Any treaty which seems to call for a departure upon the part of the United States from its traditional policy demands the most serious consideration. The treaty is presented in such a mysterious and enigmatical manner that not only the curiosity but the suspicions of honest and patriotic Americans necessarily are aroused. The question is constantly propounded, "What is the purpose of this treaty?" It is not related to the limitation of armament treaty, and its ratification is not essential to the execution of the terms of the naval limitation treaty.

No valid reason has been suggested for this treaty unless it be that it terminates or will have the effect of terminating the Anglo-Japanese alliance. In my opinion, the defense of this treaty upon that ground is an afterthought and, indeed, a subterfuge. The treaty of Versailles specifically declares that all treaties which contravene in any manner its provisions are terminated. This was so understood by Great Britain, France, and Japan. It was understood that the Versailles treaty and the League of Nations established a new order in the world. The Versailles treaty, in addition to prescribing peace terms, sought to unite all nations in a world union to establish and perpetuate world peace. It was realized that the old system, under which alliances were fostered and groupings of nations occurred, must end if a new day was to dawn and world peace was to come.

Accordingly it was designed that all treaties, alliances, and international agreements, which in any manner were contrary to the Versailles treaty and the league, should be abrogated. Great Britain and Japan appreciated the fact that alliances were not to be permitted under the league and that a world union and a world alliance could not tolerate the grouping of a few nations, great or small, and the formation of alliances by a few or many nations. Later it was declared by representatives of Great Britain and Japan that they regarded the Anglo-Japanese alliance as having been terminated by the obligations assumed in the Versailles treaty. Arguments, it seems to me, are unnecessary to prove that the Anglo-Japanese alliance was inconsistent with the Versailles treaty. Senators can easily perceive situations arising which would lead to acute controversies between the alliance or one member of the alliance and the League of Nations. When Japan and Great Britain entered into a world league under covenants to respect and preserve the territorial integrity and political independence of all members of the league, and when, in addition, they accepted and covenanted to abide by the provisions of the league and the orders of the instrumentalities and agencies thereby created, it becomes manifest that they regarded an alliance as violative of the spirit, if not the letter, of the covenant of the League of Nations.

One of the objects of the league was to bring about a rational and proper world union and to prevent racial or sectional or geographic or economic groupings and combinations which tend to divide nations and are calculated to engender international strife. It becomes apparent, therefore, why Japan and Great Britain formally placed on record their declaration that, in view of the League of Nations and its requirements as to existing treaties, the Anglo-Japanese alliance was terminated. We have not been advised by what process of ratiocination or legerdemain this superseded treaty of alliance was galvanized—but not vitalized—by Great Britain and the United States, both before and during the conference, to be paraded as a frightful specter which could only be banished by a quadruple alliance between the United States, Great Britain, France, and Japan.

It seems to me that neither the American people nor Congress have been dealt with in good faith in respect to this matter.

One is compelled, in the absence of information which has been denied to the American people and to the Senate, to explore whatever avenue is open for reasons for this course. Speculations and conjectures necessarily will be indulged in when valid reasons are not adduced. Many who have earnestly sought to learn the reason for the four-power treaty, and have been told that it was necessary in order to terminate the Anglo-Japanese alliance, are compelled to doubt the sincerity or honesty of the statement, in view of the indisputable facts which establish that the treaty no longer exists. I repeat, the Anglo-Japanese alliance was terminated by the Versailles treaty; the parties to the treaty construed it as having been terminated and Great Britain and Japan formally accepted and declared that construction.

It would seem that the contention that the Japanese alliance was still in existence and could only be terminated by a quadruple alliance was a threat without foundation, and was held in terrorem over the Senate to abate opposition which it was known would be inevitable to the creation of an alliance, such as is provided in the four-power treaty. The Anglo-Japanese alliance was a defensive and offensive combination dealing with the interests of Great Britain and Japan in the Pacific, in Asia, and in India. The Versailles treaty ended all such alliances and combinations. That was one of its great virtues.

Those who framed the league were familiar with the wars that had been waged and the blood that had been shed by reason of alliances among nations. The old system of checks and balances and alliances and groupings of nations had been discredited. Its evil effects were appreciated by the world, and the enlightened conscience of all nations demanded that these alliances should end and that all nations should come together in an association or league, containing ample provisions for the settlement of international controversies and guaranties and sanctions for the prevention of war.

Ipso facto then the Versailles treaty would terminate treaties, alliances, and combinations formed among nations. Why then does the Senator from Massachusetts and others who have demanded the ratification of this treaty give, as a pretext for its ratification, that without it the Anglo-Japanese alliance will continue? But, conceding that the Versailles treaty did not abrogate this alliance, is it necessary, in order to purchase its abrogation, that a quadruple alliance be formed in which the United States shall be a party?

The Anglo-Japanese treaty has not proven a menace to the peace or security of the United States. Indeed, many Americans have believed that it was of benefit to this Republic. Those urging the ratification of the four-power treaty insisted that the Anglo-Japanese alliance was a menace to the Philippine Islands. In what manner it was a menace has not been pointed out. Great Britain, we know, would not provoke war with the United States over the Philippine Islands, nor would Japan. If the latter had attempted the conquest of the Philippine Islands, Great Britain would have protested. Australia and New Zealand would have denounced such a course, because they would regard Japan's sovereignty over the Philippine Archipelago as a menace to their security. It is absurd, in my opinion, to argue that the Anglo-Japanese alliance constituted a danger to the United States. Indeed, the treaty of 1911 between Japan and Great Britain specifically provided that the alliance there formed should not be operative or binding in the event that either of the parties was brought into conflict with some third power with which the parties or either of them had treaties of arbitration. Between the United States and Great Britain such a treaty exists, so that in the event of a conflict between the United States and Japan, Great Britain was under no obligations to aid Japan. Moreover, if there were such an obligation, in my opinion neither Great Britain nor any of her dominions would consent to aid Japan in a conflict with the United States.

But the Anglo-Japanese alliance provides that where there is an obligation to aid, it only arises in the event of an "unprovoked aggression" by another power. Does the United States contemplate any unprovoked or aggressive action against Great Britain or Japan in the Pacific or elsewhere? Manifestly not. It is obvious, therefore, that in no aspect of the case can it be considered that the Anglo-Japanese alliance was a menace to the United States.

I respectfully insist that no sufficient reason has been assigned justifying this four-power treaty. If there is a reason, it has been concealed. The reason given, and which I have briefly discussed, is not tenable, and, in my opinion, it is not complimentary to the fairness or to the intellectual integrity of the opponents of the treaty to urge as a reason for its ratification the pretended or alleged existence of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. The American people may be fooled and duped by this specious argument, but sooner or later the scales will fall from their eyes.

It is, in my opinion, absurd to state, as it has been repeatedly declared, that the four-power treaty is so inextricably connected with the other treaties that they must stand or fall together. I affirm that the four-power treaty is so disassociated from the naval armament treaty that one may stand and the other fall. Neither is essential to the success or validity of the other.

Mr. President, the United States secures nothing by this treaty, but it confirms the titles to the Pacific insular possessions of the other signatories to the treaty. Many of these islands are held as the fruits of war and conquest. The United States makes no claim to them, although this Nation should insist that the mandated islands are held in trust by Great Britain and Japan, and that their title is not absolute and indefeasible. Can this treaty motivate upon the fear that the United States may assert a claim to some of these Pacific islands, and it is important for Japan and Great Britain to obtain a release of all claims?

I ask again, What is the purpose of this treaty? Japan, Great Britain, and France are members of the league. They have, by the terms of the league, covenanted "to respect and preserve, as against external aggression, the territorial integrity and existing political independence of each other." A like obligation has been assumed by every other member of the league. The territorial integrity therefore not only of their insular possessions but of all their possessions is guaranteed by the league.

Great Britain has no designs upon Japan's insular possessions. Japan does not seek Great Britain's insular possessions in the Pacific or elsewhere. France has no designs upon the insular possessions of either Great Britain or Japan. As stated, there are mutual covenants between these three nations, as well as nearly 50 other nations, to respect not only these insular possessions but to preserve them as well as all other territory belonging to the members of the league. If neither of these three nations made any claim to the insular possessions of the others, why this treaty? It was not to protect themselves or either of them from aggression by any of these nations.

If these three powers could not trust themselves under the Versailles treaty, which contains stronger covenants than are found in the quadruple treaty, it is clear they could not obtain any greater protection from each other under the treaty before us. These three nations are members of a world league which is behind them and which guarantees the protection of their territorial integrity and political independence. No nation menaces their insular possessions in the Pacific. It is possible Russia might some day seek to recover the southern half of the island of Sakhalin, but such a contingency is not so imminent as to justify Japan's seeking an alliance with other powers. If Japan aims to secure control over Chinese or Russian territory, then it is obvious that an alliance such as this treaty provides would be of great value to her.

In searching for reasons for this treaty one is driven to mere conjectures and speculation. Apparently the only reason for dragging the United States into this compact is that it may be said there is an agreement or combination or alliance with reference to Pacific questions, to which the United States is a party. This Republic has refused to enter into the league and has assumed an attitude of comparative isolation and has attempted to place upon its own brow the crown of world primacy. Its wealth and material position in the world compel more or less of world adulation, though they create secret resentments. Some nations of the world believe that we have been and are selfish; that we failed in the discharge of our duties following the war with respect to the problems which the settlement of Europe created. Perhaps it was thought that if the United States could be induced to enter into the four-power treaty it would be the beginning of a broader and wider activity upon the part of the United States in world affairs. Manifestly neither of the other parties to this treaty believes that the United States coveted the insular possessions of either Japan, Great Britain, or France in the Pacific Ocean or elsewhere. These nations know that the United States seeks no new territory, and, indeed, will soon be ready to relinquish authority over the Philippine Archipelago. The United States knows that the other parties to this treaty contemplate no movement looking to the acquisition of any of its Pacific insular possessions. If, therefore, Great Britain, Japan, and France are bound by the Versailles treaty to respect and preserve the Pacific insular possessions of each, and if, as everyone knows, the United States does not covet such possessions, and if—and such is known to be the fact—none of these three nations seeks to possess any of the insular dominions of the United States whether covered by the four-power treaty or otherwise, then, I ask, in all sincerity, what is the object of the compact?

Judged by all accepted standards applied to human conduct, there seems to be absolutely no reason justifying the treaty. According to the professions of some of its advocates it seems to be so meaningless, so absolutely innocuous, that those who seriously inquire as to its origin and purpose become dissatisfied with the empty phrases explanatory of its existence and purpose, and skepticism, as to the sincerity of some who are connected with the treaty, was provoked, and this skepticism finally ripened into distrust, suspicion, and open hostility to its ratification. It is not believed that four great nations would enter into a meaningless treaty, and so efforts are made to discover whether there are hidden reasons or some secret questions and matters which some of the interested parties have been unwilling to reveal. And these suspicions multiply when upon investigation it is ascertained that any possible controversy between the four powers would not arise out of their insular possessions.

The most superficial knowledge of Pacific problems furnishes indubitable proof that any serious dispute between the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and France in the region of the Pacific would grow out of the mainland of Asia and not the islands in the Pacific, which come within the terms of the treaty. In my opinion there would have been less ground for objection to this treaty if its terms had been broader and it had dealt with all controversies and questions arising, or likely to arise, between the four powers, not only in the Pacific, but in the Far East.

If the treaty merely calls for consultation between the four powers, in the event of any controversy arising out of their insular possessions in the Pacific, then the treaty may be of little value, even if it is not so regarded, because, as stated, Great Britain, Japan, and France have a stronger agreement in the Versailles treaty for their mutual protection and for the settlement of controversies than that afforded by the four-power pact, and because they do not contemplate any aggressive movement against the United States, nor does the United States covet any of their insular possessions in the Pacific. If it is believed that this treaty is necessary for the protection of the insular possessions of the four powers against the aggressive movement of any other nation, then it is manifest that Russia was in contemplation, and that, not satisfied with the guaranties of the league, it is intended to secure by this treaty the protection of the United States. There are many who believe this treaty is designed as an alliance for the protection of the rights of the four powers, not only of their insular possessions, but also of each other generally against the aggression of any nation in the region of the Pacific, including the Asiatic mainland. Being unable to perceive any reason for the treaty if it deals only with the insular possessions of the four powers, they are driven to the conclusion that there are meanings to be attached to the treaty, and implications arising from its terms, which involve the United States far more than has been declared by the proponents of the treaty. There are patriotic Americans who perceive in this treaty a scheme to unite the four powers against China and against Russia, or to protect Japan against any aggressive movement upon the part of China, or Russia. No one pretends to submit any valid reason why it is of any benefit to the United States. No one suggests that this treaty was proposed by the United States, or was ever regarded as necessary for the safety or welfare of the United States. When the Borah resolution was under discussion, no one in either branch of Congress dreamed of an alliance between the parties to this treaty, or of any treaty embodying similar terms. I repeat, there are many who can not understand why the treaty was not made applicable to that field where controversy is not only possible, but perhaps probable, and why it did not relate to the Asiatic mainland, and why China was not made a party to the treaty, and why it was not drawn so as to permit Russia, when a stable and enlightened government is erected therein, to become a party to the treaty and to avail itself of any provisions calculated to promote peace and avert war.

If it is replied that the nine-power treaty is broad enough to cover the matter just referred to, then it is proper to inquire, "Why the necessity of this treaty?"

Mr. President, any effort to deal with the problems of the Pacific must take into account the mainland and the interests of China and Russia. If peace is desired in the Pacific it must be sought not in the insular possessions, except Sakhalin, referred to in this treaty, but in China and Mongolia and Manchuria and Siberia. The clouds are not in the Pacific Ocean. They hover over the mainland of Asia.

This treaty seems to be a mere smoke screen to cover other movements and conceal other purposes. Were it not for the League of Nations the United States might possibly be warranted in considering the question of entering into an agreement with all nations that had interests in the Pacific and in China, Mongolia, Manchuria, and Siberia, with a view to settling controversies that might arise within that region, but even then the objections to an alliance or combination of such a character are numerous and valid.

Much has been said about alliances and the attitude of the fathers of this Republic with respect to alliances. In my opinion, "entangling alliances" are as objectionable now as they were in the days of Washington and Jefferson. Notwithstanding the great changes in the world—and that fact has been stressed by proponents of this treaty to justify departing from the advice of Washington—entangling alliances are as harmful now as they were in the early days of this Republic. This Nation must not form entangling alliances. It must not promote a combination or alliance of a few nations or pursue a course that will divide the world into groups and combinations.

Many speeches have been delivered during the debate upon this four-power treaty, and when the Versailles treaty was under consideration, in which the evils flowing from alliances among nations were fully portrayed. If this treaty is not an alliance or does not contemplate some of the results and force and vitality of an alliance, then, I repeat, it is innocuous and, there being no reason for its existence, it should not have been ratified. If it constitutes an alliance or if it shall be regarded by the signatories, or by other nations, as an alliance, then it should have been approved.

Yesterday, in the admirable address of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], he stated in a candid and honest way that this treaty did constitute an alliance, and as I interpreted his position, that was the only reason for its justification. He also interpreted the treaty as implying force, and argued with great vigor that compacts and agreements and laws without force behind them were of no utility. He believes in a world union which can put force behind its decrees, as courts have behind their judgments officers of the law and the posse comitatus, and finally the Army and the military and naval forces of the Government.

The able Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] stated in substance, in reply to a question asked by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], that an alliance would result from the treaty and that a situation might arise which, if it did not involve war, would at least involve financial obligations upon the part of the signatories to the treaty.

That other nations, no matter what view may be taken by the parties to this treaty, will regard it as an alliance, as a more or less defensive or offensive movement upon the part of the four nations signatory thereto, I have no doubt. Moreover, it will be regarded by some nations as a scheme upon the part of the United States to set up its own world group. This view in part arises because the United States refused to enter the League of Nations or to assume any of the burdens involved in the pacification of Europe following the war.

This treaty will be regarded by some, who deplored or resented our refusal to ratify the Versailles treaty, as a plan to set up a rival organization. The question will be asked, "Why was the United States unwilling to join with European nations and many other nations to settle the problems of the war and to bring about world peace but is now willing to enter into engagements with three great military and naval powers, ostensibly for the purpose of preserving peace in the region of the Pacific?" They will inquire, "Are the Pacific and the Orient more important than Europe?" "Is Japan more vital than the Occident, than the nations of Europe who are struggling against the great tide of sorrow and adversity which the war set in motion?"

Is the United States more interested in Japan than it is in the Christian nations of Europe, nations who were recently our allies and who gave their blood and treasure, as we gave our blood and treasure, in defense of civilization and in vindication of national rights?

The action of this Government will be regarded by many as cynical and selfish, and they will speculate and conjecture, indulging doubtless in many baseless conceptions and unjustifiable resentments, but nevertheless earnestly seeking to learn why America turned its back upon Europe and the world alliance to seek an alliance with three great naval and military powers to deal with Pacific problems only. The nations constituting the league have been anxiously looking to the United States to join with them in covenants to respect the territorial rights of all nations and to labor to promote the peace of all nations. They have recognized the importance of this Nation, its paramount position in the world, and they have supplicated, but thus far in vain, the United States to participate with them in carrying out the beneficent purposes for which the league was organized. Will not some nations regard the action of this Nation as a deliberate purpose to organize a league or association of its own?

It will be remembered that President Harding often spoke of an association of nations and conveyed the idea that he favored some sort of association of nations. His attitude before the election was uncertain. His addresses left his hearers in doubt as to his exact position. Some believed he was for the league with reservations. Others asserted that he was vehemently opposed to any kind of a league or alliance. Thirty-one eminent Republicans, among them being Secretary Hughes, Mr. Hoover, and Chief Justice Taft, made a strong and vigorous appeal to the American people to support Harding upon the ground that his election was the surest way of bringing the United States into the League of Nations. Millions of Americans voted for President Harding with the understanding that he was for the league with reservations. He had voted for the league with the Lodge reservations, and thus declared in effect that the covenant must be preserved. The contention that his election was a repudiation of a League of Nations is not sound, nor can it be successfully contended that his election provided that the League of Nations, with the Lodge reservations, was not desired by the American people. I think the evidence is overwhelming that the American people expected that upon the election of Mr. Harding the United States would enter the league after obtaining such modifications as were deemed necessary for the protection of our national interests.

Support is given to the four-power treaty by many who regard it as a bridge to carry the United States into the League of Nations. They affect to believe that it will place our Nation in such a position as to inevitably draw it into the league. In my opinion, this view is untenable and does not indicate clarity of judgment as to conditions in the world or the effects of treaties, or the character of the treaty.

Many will regard this treaty as an effort to weaken the league. Some small States, now members of the league, will regard it as a plan to establish a powerful group of nations revolving around the United States. They will see in the movement a force and strength and power which may eclipse the league and ultimately wholly destroy it. They will regard the attachment of Great Britain and France and Japan to this treaty as an indication that they have abandoned, or intend to abandon, the league. Other nations will resent the association of four great powers and will attempt to form another league or alliance which will counterbalance the one by this treaty set up. It will constitute an example, whether regarded as an alliance or as a friendly grouping of friendly nations, which will likely be followed by other nations; and we will witness during the next few years frantic struggles upon the part of nations to form groups and countergroups and combinations and alliances and associations for political or economic advantage and protection, or for territorial aggrandizement. The psychology of this movement will be bad, and its effects, in my opinion, will be distinctly disadvantageous, if not dangerous, to the peace of the world. Undoubtedly Russia and Germany and a large part of the population of China will regard this treaty as an alliance, aimed, if not directly at Russia and China, at least calculated to protect and promote the interests of the four powers signatory to the treaty, to the disadvantage of other nations, particularly China and Russia.

The world was prepared, following the war, for a rational international association. There was a practically unanimous demand for the overthrow of the old system of checks and balances and alliances and the birth of a new era and a new day where freedom and justice and equal opportunity were to be the inheritance of all nations. I repeat, this treaty will be regarded as reactionary and as a backward step and as opposed to the great spiritual and moral tide which, it is hoped, is sweeping humanity forward.

Undoubtedly the Russian people will regard this treaty as containing a menace to their country. They will not be able to understand the reason for the United States refusing to participate in European affairs and yet eagerly seeking the opportunity of associating with Japan, Great Britain, and France with respect to Pacific problems.

The ardent champions of the four-power treaty have claimed as one of its principal virtues its brevity and its simplicity. Brevity often contributes to clarity of expression. It sometimes conduces to uncertainty and difficulty of interpretation. The debates in the Senate over this instrument, and the variety of views expressed here and elsewhere as to its meaning, refute the claims of the Senator from Massachusetts and others that the instrument is clear and unambiguous in its meaning. Even the President of the United States, who presumably was in close contact with the conference and particularly with the delegates selected by him to represent the United States, construed the treaty differently from his appointees and interpreted it to mean that the principal islands or the mainland of Japan were not embraced within its terms. Other persons who were seeking to determine the meaning of the treaty reached the same conclusion as did the President. The delegates to the Washington conference speedily disillusioned the President, and let it be known to the American people that Japan proper was within the terms of the treaty. Thereupon another treaty was prepared—a treaty between the same four powers supplementary to the above, signed February 6, 1922—which was designed to remove all doubts as to the insular possessions and insular dominions in the region of the Pacific, to which the treaty should apply. By this supplemental treaty only a portion of the insular possessions of Japan were included.

Again, the treaty was so obscure and indefinite in its terms, and uncertain as to its meaning, that what is denominated a declaration accompanying the above four-power treaty was prepared by the conference and signed by the delegates of the four powers who were signatory to what is called the four-power treaty. Evidently this declaratory statement, which is in effect another treaty, or at least a treaty contemporaneously executed and relating to the subject matter of the four-power treaty, and therefore is to be construed in connection therewith either for the purpose of changing, modifying, interpreting, or otherwise, was deemed necessary by the delegates representing the four powers, in order to remove doubts as to the meaning of the treaty. There were conflicting views as to whether the mandated islands in the Pacific Ocean were within the terms of the treaty or not, and even with the declaration which I have just mentioned there is still uncertainty as to the rights of the respective parties to the treaty as to the mandated islands. It is uncertain as to whether or not the four-power treaty is an attempt to withdraw the mandated islands in the Pacific from the control of the League of Nations. It is also uncertain as to what the rights of the United States are in relation to the mandated islands. It may be claimed that the islands are unimportant and can not be the subject of controversy between the signatories and the treaty or other powers.

The claim of the unimportance of the islands is refuted by the tenacity with which Great Britain sought control of the islands south of the Equator and Japan of those north of the Equator. Even before the United States entered the war secret treaties between Great Britain, France, and Japan provided the disposition to be made of the islands lying in the Pacific and which it was expected would be taken from Germany. They were deemed important by those powers then, and they were regarded as important when the Versailles treaty was drawn.

The four-power treaty does not make clear what the rights of the United States are relating to the mandated islands or in what manner or before what tribunals the United States could assert any claim to these islands in the future.

While it is true that questions which, according to the principles of international law, lie exclusively within the domestic jurisdiction of nations, nevertheless controversies may arise as to what are domestic questions. The meaning of the treaty was so clouded or so uncertain as to whether domestic questions were reserved by the signatory powers that subdivision 2 of the declaration above referred to was deemed necessary and constitutes a part of the supplemental treaty. And yet it must be said if the position of Republican Senators is to furnish any guide, that even these clarifying and explanatory and interpretative words still leave the subject enveloped in doubt.

The Senator from Massachusetts and other Republican Senators, when the Versailles treaty was under consideration, notwithstanding that treaty quite clearly indicated that the domestic concerns of the members of the league were not brought within the treaty, insisted upon a strong reservation which declared that the United States reserved to itself exclusively the right to determine what questions were within its domestic jurisdiction, and further declared that "all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, the tariff, commerce, the suppression of traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs, and all other domestic questions, are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way, either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or to the assembly of the League of Nations, or of any agency thereof, or to the decision or recommendation of any power."

It will be observed that paragraph 2 of the declaration falls far short of the explicit provisions in the reservation insisted upon by the Senator from Massachusetts and other Republican Senators when the Versailles treaty was being considered.

It is contended that the four-power treaty relates solely to the insular possessions of the signatory powers, and that in determining what Japan's insular possessions are the supplementary treaty signed February 6, 1922, and which was ratified yesterday, governs. Yet there are various views entertained as to the meaning of the four-power treaty and just what territory directly or indirectly it applies to, and what obligations are assumed by the powers who have negotiated it. It is declared in the treaty that it is for the purpose of preserving the general peace and the maintenance of the rights of the four powers in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the region of the Pacific. It is clear that controversies may arise in the regions of the Pacific not directly connected with the insular possessions referred to, but which inevitably would affect a portion or all of said insular possessions and thus bring into operation the full force and power, whatever it may be, of the treaty.

A controversy between Japan and some power other than one of the signatories of the treaty, and which in its inception related to Japan proper or to the mainland of Asia, might quickly draw within its encircling movement all of Japan's insular possessions. And if China should seek to expel Japanese authority from Korea and she should be powerful enough to attack Formosa or other insular possessions of Japan, hoping thereby to weaken the power of Japan, to what extent would the controversy be brought within the terms of the treaty? It is easy to conceive of disputes which might eventuate in war between one or more of the signatories to the treaty, or between one or more of them and some other power, and which would soon involve the insular possessions in the Pacific of the belligerent nations.

Does the treaty cover cases of that character? Obviously, serious differences would arise as to the meaning of the treaty or as to its application with respect to controversies analogous to the illustrations or suppositious cases which I have just mentioned. Section 1 of the four-power treaty declares that should there develop a controversy arising out of any Pacific question and involving their—meaning the high contracting parties—said rights, which is not satisfactorily settled, and so forth, then certain steps should be taken. It would seem that the controversy referred to would relate to the insular possessions of the parties, and yet the section refers to "any Pacific question." Controversies arising upon the mainland of Asia or Japan proper, or the continental possessions of the United States, might involve a Pacific question, and such controversy might indirectly affect the insular possessions of the high contracting parties. Manifestly there is ample ground for dispute as to the interpretation which all persons would place upon these words to which I have just called attention.

The debate over the meaning of section 1 has been exhaustive, and I do not pretend that I can make any contribution thereto, but the fact that it has been the subject of earnest discussion and diversified views offers demonstration that its terms are not unambiguous or free from doubt.

The Senator from Massachusetts and others who have so eloquently pleaded for ratification of the treaty insist that under article 1 no obligation is assumed by the high contracting parties other than that they shall invite the four powers to a joint conference in the event of any controversy arising out of any Pacific question and involving their insular rights and possessions in the Pacific. When the conference is to be called, in the event of any controversy, is not determined, nor is it clear as to the mode of procedure when the conference convenes or the method of arriving at a conclusion, whether by unanimous vote or by majority vote, or how a deadlock may be avoided, or what course shall be pursued in the event the four parties are unable to agree. No provision is made for arbitration or for the selection of some independent power to aid in determining the controversy or breaking any deadlock that might arise. The section provides that "at the joint conference the whole subject—that is, the controversy—will be referred for consideration and adjustment." That is to say, if when a controversy arises between two or more signatories to the treaty and a joint conference is called and the four powers respond, they will refer the subject matter of dispute to themselves for consideration and adjustment. The section contemplates that the controversy will be adjusted and the high contracting parties covenant that it will be referred for consideration and for adjustment.

Supporters of the treaty have contended that the obligation of the treaty would be fulfilled if representatives of the high contracting parties met and considered the controversy; that there was no obligation to "adjust" the dispute and no method of compelling adjustment. In other words, that the provisions of this section were so innocuous as that if the parties did not elect to meet, or if they met and did not consider the controversy or adjust it, nothing further could be done. If I understand the Senator from Massachusetts and others who have defended the treaty, they point with great satisfaction to this provision and assert that its chief virtue lies in the fact that it contains no strength, no force, no power, no vitality, and no authority. It merely opens the way for representatives of the four powers to confer in the event of a dispute arising among them.

I concede that there are advantages arising from conferences where disputes exist between two or more nations, but I can not believe that it was the intention of all the delegates to the conference that this section should bear the construction which has been placed upon it by a number of Senators who are its earnest supporters. Already we learn from the dispatches from overseas that France is not satisfied with the interpretation placed upon the treaty. If we are to believe the dispatches, some public men in France interpret the treaty as containing some authority or power to create agencies by which controversies arising would be settled, even though the adjustment and settlement were not brought about by a mere "conferring" of the signatory powers.

There are many who insist that "consideration and adjustment" mean that the controversy will be adjusted—that is, that it will be settled and "determined"; that the treaty means more than a mere meeting of representatives of the four powers for the purpose of talking or conferring over a controversy; that it means that the four powers shall take steps to settle, determine, and adjust and conclude the subject of the controversy, no matter what means may be required, following the conference to effectuate that object.

In the speech of the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that point was elucidated with great clearness and the absurdity shown of the claim that the conference merely meant a meeting or "getting together" of representatives of the signatory powers. Whether his interpretation is right or that offered by the Senator from Massachusetts is to be accepted, the fact still remains that there is and will continue to be conflicting views as to the meaning of section 1.

An examination of section 2 of the four-power treaty emphasizes more clearly the differences of opinion that may arise and already have arisen as to the meaning of its provisions. Here, again, the Senator from Massachusetts and Senators who have urged the ratification of the treaty with apparent exultation, if not exaltation, proclaim as the chief virtue of this section that there is no force or authority behind it. Apparently these Senators belong to that school of pacifism which denies the majesty of the law or sanctions for its observance and enforcement. They seem to be enamored with the thought that nations agree to confer. I might add in passing that they have that right regardless of treaties, and already there exist between the United States and the other powers who have signed the treaty before us treaties providing that disputes which are not adjusted by diplomacy shall be submitted for investigation and report to international commissions to be created in the manner defined in such treaties.

As indicated, there are many who entertain the view that this section means that force shall be employed if that is the most "efficient measure" to meet the exigency that necessitated "frank and full" communication between the high contracting parties. This section provides that if the "rights of either of the powers is threatened by the aggressive action of any other power," there shall be "full and frank communication between the signatories to this treaty." This is an obligation, but the obligation calling for a full and frank communication does not stop there. These communications must be for the purpose of enabling the parties to arrive at an "understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation." There is not only an agreement to communicate for the purpose of reaching an understanding, but it seems manifest that the agreement is that an "understanding" shall be reached.

It is obvious that if some other power has made war upon one of the signatories to the treaty, which threatens the insular dominions in the Pacific of such power, then an obligation arises upon the part of the signatories to the treaty to not only fully and frankly communicate but to reach an "understanding" which will call for "efficient measures" to be taken to protect the rights of the nation so assailed. If diplomacy would be an efficient measure, then the obligation would be discharged if diplomatic representations brought peace, but if military or naval force were the only efficient measure and if, moreover, it required the military and naval forces of all the powers, then it would seem that the exigencies of the particular situation would call for that and that an obligation to that extent is assumed under the treaty.

At any rate, if that is not the correct interpretation it is beyond controversy that such interpretation is placed upon its terms by statesmen, publicists, and intelligent persons who have earnestly sought to ascertain the true meaning of this instrument. Moreover, if we are to believe reports as to the utterances of Japanese statesmen and French writers, that is the view which they take of the treaties. Undoubtedly the Japanese people believe that the four-power treaty constitutes a quadruple alliance, and that Japan, as to her insular possessions at least, receives the same guaranties as were extended to her with respect to all of her possessions by the Anglo-Japanese treaty of 1911.

Senators, as well as many patriotic Americans who find no cause for the rejection of treaties because they may involve the use of force, construe section 4 of the four-power treaty as an obligation upon the part of the signatories to the same to employ force necessary for the protection of the insular possessions and insular dominions of each and all of the parties to the treaty.

It is not a mere captious criticism to say that article 2 is uncertain in another respect. Is unanimity required by the four powers when they are adopting the most "efficient measures" to meet outside aggression or will a majority vote determine what measures shall be adopted, and if the latter, what obligation rests upon the nonassenting nation? Would its refusal to accept the decision of the majority constitute a breach of treaty, and, if so, would such breach be casus belli? If a unanimous decision were reached by the powers, that force was required in defense of the assailed nation, and one of the agreeing parties failed to observe the decision and make its proper and just contribution, to what penalty would such a nation be subjected?

Senators will recall that vehement protests originated in the Senate and elsewhere when the first draft of the League of Nations was submitted because it did not clearly state whether certain important decisions made by the council and by the assembly were to be unanimous or reached by a majority vote of the members of those organizations. The final draft of the covenant met this criticism, and provision was made that such decisions of the council should be by unanimous vote.

Mr. President, I have called attention to some of the features of the treaty which have aroused discussion and developed contrariety of views. This treaty will, in my opinion, lead to misunderstandings between the nations who have signed as to its meaning and implications and obligations. When some crisis arises which tests the treaty, then its imperfections, uncertainties, and weaknesses will be fully disclosed. I am not now alluding to the effects of the treaty upon other nations, nor the jealousies and suspicions and resentments which may be aroused because of the belief or fear that it constitutes an alliance and indicates a purpose upon the part of four great naval and military powers to assume a dominating if not an oppressive position in the world. That it will be regarded by some nations as an offensive and defensive alliance upon the part of these four great naval and military powers will be conceded if we are to judge the future by the past. Already the Koreans and the Russians, particularly those inhabiting Siberia, are expressing their disapproval.

They affect to see in the treaty a combination which seeks the advancement of Japan and her elevation to a position of paramount, if not supreme, importance in the Orient. Already we are advised by the newspapers published in eastern Siberia that the four-power treaty is regarded as a menace to the Russian people and to Russia's Asiatic territory. Opposition to the treaty also comes from various parts of China, particularly from what is called the Cantonese section.

China and Russia have always been the steadfast friends of this Republic. The most friendly and cordial relations have existed between the United States and China, and when some of the great powers were seeking to bind China, to carve up her territory and to establish spheres of influence which, in fact, constituted the economic if not the political subjugation of China, her people looked to this great Republic for relief. China's unhappy situation aroused in the United States profound sympathy and a determination that China should no longer be the victim of intrigues and exploiting policies of foreign powers.

Neither China nor Russia will understand why this four-power treaty was entered into. No matter what explanations may be offered, the Russian people and the Chinese people will regard with fear and apprehension and growing resentment and anger the work of the conference and the action of the four powers in ratifying this treaty. No sufficient explanation can be made of article 2, and, indeed, for that matter, of article 1, of the treaty. Those nations appreciate that there is no controversy between the high contracting parties as to their insular possessions in the Pacific. They will be unable to understand the motives of the parties in negotiating a treaty which contains the provisions found in paragraph 1. Their opposition to the treaty will be stronger as they consider article 2 of the treaty, and, in my opinion, their resentment will increase when they learn that various reservations offered to the treaty were defeated. It must be conceded that in the draft of article 2 Russia was in the minds of the representatives of the four powers. It would seem that the only possible aggressive action with respect to the insular possessions in the Pacific of the four signatories to the treaty would be upon the part of Russia. Of course, if China, roused by the aggressive action of other nations and the indignities to which she has been subjected by European and other nations, should develop a strong national spirit, no one could foretell the consequences. Thousands of her young men have been educated in the United States and Europe, and they have carried back to their land a new spirit, and that great inert mass of people, responding to their appeals and to a nationalistic spirit, will, like a mighty lion shaking its invincible locks, break asunder all bands which limit the freedom of their country and all fetters which bind her people. Who can say that they may not seek an alliance with Russia? It is known that for several years the soviet régime has cultivated the friendship of the Chinese and sought to draw them within the influence of the Bolshevik government.

I dislike to indulge in criticism of other nations, particularly our former allies in the Great War. Indeed, I have only feelings of deep regard for most of the nations of the earth. I do not approve of intemperate and harsh criticisms of other nations, nor do I look with favor upon the boastful attitude taken by so many Americans when they speak of their own country. I have sometimes thought that we were not sufficiently considerate of the feelings of other nations, nor sufficiently appreciative of their great achievements. Many do not appreciate that China has a civilization which dates back more than 4,000 years. Many Americans display lamentable ignorance as to the accomplishments of other nations and the great contributions which they have made to civilization. However, in the discussion of international questions we are sometimes compelled to speak rather frankly of other nations. China feels that she has been oppressed by Japan and Germany and France and Great Britain. Foreign nations have controlled her economic life, and to-day more than 70 per cent of her territory is, economically at least, under the control of other powers. We need not be surprised if the Chinese people view this treaty as a scheme to exalt Japan and to further weaken the authority of the Chinese Government. The question will be asked, "Why was there not a quintuple combination or alliance, instead of a quadruple one?" May not Russia's fears be increased when she learns that the Senate refused to adopt a reservation which would have provided Russia an opportunity to confer with the four contracting powers in the event of any controversy affecting her interests and the interests of the four powers which are involved in the treaty? The reservation offered by the Senator from Arkansas provides that—the high contracting parties will respect the rights and possessions of other nations and refrain from all acts of aggression against any other power or powers. If there should develop between any of the high contracting parties and any other power or powers a controversy which is not satisfactorily settled by diplomacy and is likely to affect the harmonious accord subsisting between any party or parties to this compact and any other power or powers, the high contracting parties shall invite all powers claiming an interest in the controversy to a joint conference to which the whole subject will be referred for consideration and adjustment.

This reservation confessedly was to enable Russia and China to participate with the four powers in settling controversies that rise among them. The treaty in its present form would prohibit Russia from conferring with the four powers in the event of any controversy arising between her and Japan or between Russia and either of the other parties to the treaty. The four powers may confer, and they are to devise efficient measures in the event of any aggression by Russia or China which threatens the rights of Japan or either of the other parties to the treaty. But neither Russia nor China can participate in any conference. The Senate has declared by its vote in rejecting this proposed reservation that Russia shall not be invited, nor shall China nor any other power, notwithstanding their interests or their desires to avert war and promote peace.

During the debate frequent reference has been made to what Russia believes to be the aggressive action of Japan in Siberia. Japan has seized the northern half of Sakhalin, and her troops are now occupying portions of Russian territory. I do not call attention to this fact for the purpose of indulging in criticism, but we can not close our eyes to the fact that this situation may bring about a serious conflict between Russia and Japan. Who can doubt that if such a conflict should arise it would not extend to some of the insular possessions of Japan. Under such conditions the United States, France, and Great Britain will be required to arrive at an understanding with Japan as to the most "efficient measures" to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet such exigency. This would array these nations, apparently, if not in fact, against Russia. The treaty precludes any conference at which Russia could be heard. It would seem that the treaty instead of making for peace in the Pacific will be provocative of controversy and international resentments and fears.

Mr. President, the terms of this treaty, upon many matters, are so uncertain and ambiguous as to leave those who analyze it in doubt as to its meaning and effects. A number of reservations were offered for the purpose of removing ambiguity and of protecting the interests of the United States. These reservations were all rejected.

I have just called attention to the reservation offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and its rejection by the Senate. The New York World, under date of March 18, criticized, editorially, this action of the majority, notwithstanding it has been, and still is, an earnest supporter of the treaties. In its editorial of that date it refers to the fact that under article 2 of the quadruple treaty nothing is said about bringing Russia into the conference. Indeed, it declares that Russia is to be excluded, notwithstanding the fact that "the complaining witness (referring to Japan) is a member of the court in which the controversy may be settled." It expresses an inability to understand why Republican Senators voted against a policy which would have brought Russia into the conference where her interests were involved and where the peace of the Pacific was jeopardized. The editorial proceeds:

Taking everything into consideration, that is a dubious method of stabilizing peace in the Far East, inasmuch as it is certain that Russia will not indefinitely submit to continued Japanese occupation of territory in Siberia and in northern Sakhalin. If there is any trouble and the United States is obligated to enter a conference, the only rational thing would be to bring Russia into the conference, too. A conference to which only one member of the dispute is admitted is not a conference at all. Not only should Russia be admitted but the United States should make it plain at the outset, in order to prevent further misunderstandings, that such is to be its policy.

The four-power treaty does not provide for this, but the Senate can provide for it without amending or mutilating the agreement in any respect. To attach the Robinson formula to the treaty as a resolution of the Senate does not change the obligations or responsibilities of the United States. It neither adds to them nor subtracts from them. It simply rounds out the conference, in so far as this country can do it, and makes that conference complete.

Other reservations, perhaps not so important, but clarifying and calculated to secure a better understanding among the parties to the treaty, were inconsiderately, indeed contemptuously, rejected by the majority. Permit me to refer to several of these rejected reservations.

Senators have sought to justify the treaty upon the ground that it abrogated the Anglo-Japanese alliance, yet there is nothing in the four-power treaty which prevents a renewal of such alliance, assuming that it was not terminated by the Versailles treaty and is abrogated by this treaty. A reservation was offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] which, in effect, declared that the United States ratifies the treaty with the understanding that the Anglo-Japanese alliance, concluded in 1911, is not "in fact or in substance to be renewed during the life of said treaty." Thirty Senators voted for this reservation and 62 against it.

Another reservation offered, and also rejected, declared that the ratification of the treaty was with the understanding that during the life of the treaty no treaties should be entered into between the parties with reference to their insular possessions in the region of the Pacific, or with reference to the Asiatic mainland, which in any manner would prejudice the objects and rights of the parties to the treaty or which would be inconsistent with its terms.

Another reservation was likewise rejected, which declared that ratification of the treaty was with the understanding that, in the event of independence being given to the Philippine Islands, the signatories to the treaty would recognize and respect the political independence and territorial integrity of the Philippine Islands, following their independence.

Why there should be objection to this announcement of a policy so important and so in harmony with the principles of justice and freedom, I am unable to determine. The United States has by law declared its purpose to relinquish control over the Philippine Islands. This solemn promise unquestionably will be observed. The charge has often been made in the press of the United States that Japan coveted the Philippine Archipelago. Is it not a wise and prudent course for the United States to pursue when entering into this four-power treaty to take steps, by proper agreement or reservation, to protect the independence of the Philippine Islands when the Filipinos establish a government of their own?

The Versailles treaty provided for the withdrawal of the United States from the league if it so desired. A reservation was offered to the four-power treaty, which was defeated by a vote of 63 to 28, which declared that the United States reserved the right to withdraw at any time if any of the parties to the treaty wrongfully engaged in war with any country which imperiled the peace of the Pacific. The President under this reservation was to judge whether such a contingency arose.

Another reservation which was rejected provided that article 2 of the treaty should not apply to a situation arising out of the military occupation by any of the high contracting parties of any part of the mainland of Asia included within the boundaries of the Chinese or Russian Empires as they existed in 1890.

A reservation was defeated which declared the right of the United States to withdraw upon its giving one year's notice of its intention to do so.

I have not time to discuss these various reservations, as well as other important ones, which were offered. Some of these reservations were undoubtedly in the interest of the United States and made more definite the meaning of the treaty, and their rejection can not be defended.

Mr. President, in an illuminating article in the March number of the Atlantic Monthly Hon. Samuel W. McCall, a statesman of recognized ability, examines in a critical but impartial manner the work of the conference. A perusal of his article will disillusion some who have been enthusiastic in their praise of the treaties before us. He declares that—with the exception of a port and perhaps the sale of a railroad and a doubtful concession upon the post office question, China promises to retire from the conference empty handed. The door, however, is to be opened in the interest of the trade of other nations. All are to be admitted upon equal terms and at low rates of duty. The net result of it all promises to be that the powers will have done little for China and much for themselves. As to the restoration of the loot of three-fourths of a century, a proposition to that end checked the flow of fine phrases and threw a cold chill over the conference.

Speaking of the four-power treaty, he controverts the position of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] "that no military or naval sanction lurks anywhere in the background," and insists that—the treaty creates a defensive and an entangling alliance. It is the very sort of alliance against which Washington warned us. What reason is there why we should, for the first time in history, depart from his solemn injunction? What have we or the world to gain? Does it in the slightest degree remove any cloud upon our title to the Sandwich Islands or the Philippines or increase our ability to defend them? Indeed, one of the other treaties in the group of treaties framed by the conference promises to prohibit us from constructing naval bases at Guam or in the Philippines.

He further declares that these treaties—crown Japan as the Empress of the Orient. With her naval bases so near the China coast, and her proximity to the open door, she is likely in any crisis to have her own way. The power of the West to safeguard China against the possible aggressions of Japan will be much reduced by the abandonment of our right to fortify Manila and Guam. That nation is to be congratulated upon the triumph of her diplomacy won single-handed and in open competition with the western nations.

Governor McCall refers to the folly of ignoring Russia, which creates "a great and dangerous vacuum in the affairs of men." In the concluding portion of his article he clearly indicates that the proper policy for the United States to pursue would be to unite with the 50 nations who have already banded together within the league to execute the high purposes to which it is devoted. He declares that—the essential thing is to present a united front against war. This country is the only obstacle to world union. If we shall take our place by the side of Europe and Asia and Africa, then the prophecy of the Latin poet may be at last fulfilled, the rough ages will become gentle and the gates of war be closed.

Mr. President, there is another phase to this question for consideration. In the event of conflict between the parties to this treaty and the League of Nations, where is the supreme authority to lie? Great Britain, Japan, and France are members of the league. They have solemnly covenanted to observe its provisions and stipulations. Article 11 of the covenant of the league provides that—any threat of war, whether affecting the members of the league or not, is a matter of concern to the league, which shall take action to safeguard the peace of nations.

Assuming that a controversy arises between Japan and Great Britain in regard to their insular possessions in the Pacific, it would be the duty of the league to intervene, and through the instrumentalities of the league adjust the controversy and prevent war.

Article 12 of the covenant provides that if any dispute likely to cause a rupture between members of the league arises between them, they will submit the matter either to arbitration or to inquiry by the council. The league provides methods of arbitration and conciliation and establishes an international court which may pass upon certain disputes submitted for its consideration. In the event of a dispute arising between Great Britain and Japan, as I have suggested, will the provisions of the league govern? Will its machinery for arbitration, conciliation, and judicial determination govern? Or will the provisions of the four-power pact control the contentious States? If the league assumes jurisdiction, will the parties to the four-power pact deny its authority and jurisdiction and will it be superseded, at least where there is conflict?

Let us suppose a controversy arises between the United States, which is not a member of the league, and Japan which is bound by the terms of the Versailles treaty. It would be the duty of the League of Nations to intervene, to compose the differences between our Nation and Japan. Will Japan follow the league and carry out the orders and mandates given by it, or will it be governed by the four-power treaty? In the event that it gives its adhesion to the league and insists that the United States accept the procedure and agencies established by the league, what position will the United States take?

These are but a few of the many questions that suggest themselves when the situation is considered and the four-power treaty is examined.

When this treaty is contrasted with the covenant of the league, its imperfections become more patent. There is no tribunal established to interpret its meaning. No agencies are provided looking to conciliation or arbitration. To the most superficial student of history and world forces it is apparent that if it has any purpose that purpose transcends the protection of the few insular possessions described in the treaty, and that if any controversy arises involving the interests of either of the parties to the treaty other nations will be involved. This treaty closes the door to them—shuts them out from peaceful means for settling the controversy, and seeks to weld, for offensive or defensive action, the four parties to the treaty. Why were there not provisions for arbitration and for reference to an international tribunal? Why was the international court, recently established by the league, ignored?

Mr. President, I repeat what I have heretofore suggested. Many peoples and some nations will regard this pact as nations a century ago regarded the Holy Alliance; they will regard this organization as one seeking, if not world hegenomy, at least the domination of the Pacific and the Orient.

Mr. President, in my opinion this Nation should be strengthening the league instead of attempting to weaken it. It should seek affiliation with it rather than attempt to alienate therefrom nations who have pledged allegiance to the same.

Some Senators may deride, and often do, references to the League of Nations, and proclaim with manifest delight their belief in the early demise of this great world association.

I believe, Mr. President, that we should reexamine its provisions and seek such changes in its constitution, if any be required, as may be deemed necessary for the welfare of the United States, and then our Nation, uniting with other nations, should bring to fruition its important and beneficent mission. Imperfect as the league is, it constitutes an important advance in the direction of world concord.

Some of the assaults made upon the Versailles treaty are justified, at least in part. No treaty dealing with such mighty problems and drawn while the smoke of battle was in the eyes of the people could in a perfectly just and righteous way deal with the questions brought to the peace table at Paris. Racial prejudices and deep-seated antipathies, based upon hundreds of years of oppression, suspicions, and wrongs, could not be forgotten. Imperialistic ambitions were not dead and the greed of nations for territory and trade still persisted. But the league has wrought great deeds and aided in guiding a war-torn world from bloody fields and deadly hates to sunlit heights where the rancor and bitterness are yielding to the spirit of friendship and international good will.

With the United States and Russia outside the league and iconoclastic assaults being made in this country and elsewhere upon the league, it has not been able to function in the highest degree or to execute all of the powers with which it is endowed. Instead of aiding it in accomplishing the humane and beneficent purposes for which it was established, we by this four-power treaty, indirectly if not directly, assail it and seek to undermine its foundations.

My principal objection to this treaty is found in the fact that, as I interpret it, it arrays the United States and other nations in opposition to the league. It seeks to set up a rival organization, to establish an alliance whose power will challenge the league, and to reintroduce into the world policies and systems which for ages have been provocative of international strife and war. If we are to have alliances, let us have a world alliance; or if we are to have alliances and not a world alliance, let us be wise enough to become parties to an alliance which will not engender suspicions, create resentments, and provoke international jealousies.

No treaty drawn at the time the Versailles treaty was prepared could have prescribed an absolutely just standard. That was recognized; but the treaty was flexible, and provision was made for readjustments and for the correction of errors or wrongs recorded in the treaty. Tribunals were established to deal with international controversies and machinery set up competent and adequate to meet all proper requirements of all peoples to the end that justice might be done to all members of the league.

For years prior to the treaty the most advanced nations of the world had sought to establish an international court and to provide tribunals for conciliation. The League of Nations answered the demands of the most advanced thinkers and was a response to the conscience of the civilized and liberal forces of the world. The Versailles treaty and the league sought the destruction of alliances and secret agreements and the removal of the prolific causes of international controversy and fratricidal wars.

If, as some Senators contend, the boundaries of nations set up by the Versailles treaty were not proper and if the economic or political rights of some peoples were not fairly recognized and provided for, the league furnished the machinery and agencies to rectify injustices or wrongs and to vindicate the rights and liberties of small as well as great nations.

I shall not review the work of the league, important and beneficent though it is. Notwithstanding the assaults made upon it and the obstacles which have been interposed to prevent its successful functioning, it is still a vital and important force for good and for justice. It should be strengthened and not weakened. It should be defended and not attacked. The Christian people of this Nation did much to inspire throughout the world a demand for a world league to diminish if not to end the causes of war and to promote international brotherhood. I avow my faith and belief in a world association of nations and in an alliance of all peoples and all States for the purpose of promoting the peace of the world. If this great Nation should, even at this late hour, give its mighty influence to sustaining the league and executing the purposes for which it was established, the authority of the league would be strengthened and its influence would be world pervasive. If that course were taken, the treaties before the Senate, including the four-power pact, would be unimportant and, indeed, unnecessary from any point of view.

The league provides not for a mere limitation of naval armament upon the part of three or four powers but it provides for world disarmament. It does not divide the world into sections or deal with the interests of a few peoples or a few nations only. It seeks universality and the application of the principles of justice and freedom in all parts of the world. There is no controversy, great or small, no international problem, important or insignificant, that may not be determined, and righteously determined by and through it and its agencies.

President Wilson and those who conceived a world association of nations were not only prophets who had vision but they were statesmen who comprehended the practical problems and questions to be met by peoples and governments. There are some supporting this treaty who would destroy their work and deny the wisdom of establishing an international association of nations, an association in which individual and national rights would be not only unassailed or questioned but fully protected, and yet one so effective as to remove the causes of international conflicts and thus tend to promote peace throughout the world.

Mr. President, I have occupied more time than I intended in the discussion of this treaty. There are many objections to the treaty which I have not considered, but which will be forced into the international forum, perhaps sooner than is anticipated even by those who opposed its ratification. In my opinion, there will be an awakening in our own land, and when the shadows of the night are banished the American people will perceive the tragic mistake made when this country failed to approve the treaty of Versailles. Then will be the day of vindication for those men and women of vision who saw in a world association the healing of the nations and the lifting up of a standard of righteousness and international justice and fraternity.

Speaking of Woodrow Wilson, I said in this Chamber just before he left the White House—I ask that it be printed in the usual RECORD type—

"A dispassionate review of his acts as President and the results and accomplishments of his administration will for all time place him among the world's foremost figures. Even in the hour of defeat his greatness is recognized and his influence is pervasive.

"He reached the high place which history will accord him because of his intellectual integrity, his exalted ideals, his devotion to human liberty, and his deep sympathy for the sorrows and sufferings of the world. He saw peoples shackled by industrial chains and nations oppressed by despotic power, and he sought their liberation.

"This Nation he regarded as the favored child of Providence, an evangel to lead the way along the pathway of international development. The imperialism of nations, the mad ambitions which prompted rulers to seek territorial gain and conquest, filled him with sorrow, indeed with anger; but it was the great inarticulate mass, struggling and groping for light and freedom, to whom he gave the rich outpourings of his heart. He sought to lighten the burdens of labor, to lift up the downtrodden, and to inspire courage in the hearts of those who saw nothing in life but the cold tragic processes of a materialistic universe. He believed that there were moral and spiritual forces operating within this little world of ours, and that beyond the stars there was One whose power was omnipotent and whose love extended to struggling humanity and whose law operated for man's salvation.

"Woodrow Wilson is a commanding figure in the world to-day. He will soon leave his high station, but his teachings and his example will not be forgotten, and as the years go by his fame will increase and men will pay homage to his memory. He gave his strength fighting for principles which he believed to be right, for his country and its honor, for the liberation of the world from war, and for the establishment of a union of the nations of the world to promote justice and international peace.

"In my opinion time will vindicate this great man, and the purposes of his heart will be fully comprehended by his countrymen.

"We speak of Jefferson as the father of Democracy, the founder of an undying faith, the prophet of liberty, and the foe of tyranny. We speak of Lincoln as the great emancipator, the apostle of justice and righteousness. Those who come after us will speak of Woodrow Wilson as one who sought to extend the principles established by Jefferson and to bring emancipation to oppressed people everywhere. It will be said of him that he gathered into his great soul the highest moral and spiritual and liberalizing forces of his time, and gave his strength, if not his life, in order that there might be a new baptism of freedom and a consecration to the ideals which promote justice and international fellowship. And so there will be linked the names of Jefferson and Lincoln and Wilson, and our children and those who come after us will seek his shrine and there pay homage to a great Democrat and to the strongest defender of the weak and oppressed who appeared among men during the greatest crisis in the world's history."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I shall occupy the time of the Senate for a few moments, and if I am not interrupted only a few moments. I want to say something in regard to the Chinese treaty before we vote upon it. I am not willing that it should be voted upon without some expression as to the construction which I place upon its effect. It has not been discussed in the Senate and I am not advised as to the construction and effect which others may place upon it. I may be in error, but such time as I have been permitted to give to it has enabled me to arrive at certain conclusions in regard to it, and those I desire briefly to state.

The preface to my remarks may be aptly expressed in a paragraph or two from an editorial in the New York Times under date of February 6, 1922. In that editorial it was said:

> Nothing was said by Mr. Balfour about past agreements of that kind. Those had been firmly kept by Japan from the purview of the conference. And suppose that in the days to come any nation should seek to separate itself from "the collective action taken in Washington" in respect to China? "Why," said Mr. Balfour, "that nation will not be able to plead ignorance." Not such an awful fate, when you come to think of it.
> If Mr. Balfour was frank, the Japanese ambassador was equally so. Baron Shidehara joined cordially in the expressions of good will for China. Japan is "vitally interested in the speedy establishment of peace and unity in China." But let there be no misunderstanding. "To say that Japan has special interests in China is simply to state a plain and actual fact." This does not necessarily mean imperialistic designs, conquest, annexations of territory. There is much talk of a "new" Japan, not militaristic but industrial. But it must not be forgotten that an industrialized Japan will cast as covetous an eye upon China as ever did militarized Japan. On this point Baron Shidehara was entirely explicit:
> "It is indeed to the Asiatic mainland that we must look primarily for raw materials and for the markets where our manufactured articles may be sold. Neither raw materials nor the markets can be had unless order, happiness, and prosperity reign in China. Under good and stable government, with hundreds of thousands of our nationals resident in China, with enormous amounts of our capital invested there, and with our own national existence largely dependent on that of our neighbor, we are naturally interested in that country to a greater extent than any of the countries remotely situated."
> That can scarcely be mistaken, whether regarded as a statement of fact or a declaration of intention. Of course, the Japanese ambassador spoke smooth things about the open door in China and equal opportunity for all. But it is plain to the wayfaring man that Japan is acutely conscious of the special advantage which she enjoys in China, by virtue both of propinquity and penetration, and that she means unhesitatingly to maintain it. She is there, and there she stays.

It is agreed by all students of Far Eastern matters that there can be no peace in the Pacific or in the Far East until the Chinese problem is solved, and it is very generally agreed that there can be no solution of the Chinese problem that is in harmony with peace other than that which does justice to China. If the aggressions which have taken place in the Far East during the last 10 or 15 years are to be continued, the fruits of the conference lately held will be Dead Sea fruit.

The treaty which is before us is designed, we are advised, to aid and assist China. If it is adhered to in good faith, if the spirit of the treaty is observed, it will undoubtedly be of service to China and beneficial to the cause of peace in the Pacific and in the Far East.

On the 3d of July, 1900, I think it was, our then Secretary of State, John Hay, put out his circular with reference to the open door. In that circular is this statement:

> To bring about permanent safety and peace to China, preserve Chinese territorial and administrative entity, protect all rights guaranteed to friendly powers by treaty and by international law, to safeguard for the world the principle of equal and impartial trade with all parts of the Chinese Empire.

This is the cardinal principle of what is known as the open door, for which we are indebted to the statesmanship of Mr. Hay. The nations which assented to this policy were Great Britain, Russia, France, Germany, and Japan. I think it will be conceded that so far as the United States is concerned it has lived up to that doctrine faithfully. It has observed the principle which was announced, and I do not know that it has ever been charged with digressing in any respect from that principle.

Later in 1902 what is known as the first Anglo-Japanese treaty or Anglo-Japanese alliance was made. I read a paragraph from that treaty:

The Governments of Great Britain and Japan, actuated solely by a desire to maintain the status quo and general peace in the extreme East, being moreover specially interested in maintaining the independence and territorial integrity of the Empire of China and the Empire of Korea, and in securing equal opportunities in those countries for the commerce and industry of all nations, hereby agree as follows:

ARTICLE I. The high contracting parties having mutually recognized the independence of China and of Korea, declare themselves to be entirely uninfluenced by any aggressive tendencies in either country. Having in view, however, their special interests, of which those of Great Britain relate principally to China, while Japan, in addition to the interests which she possesses in China, is interested in a peculiar degree politically as well as commercially and industrially in Korea, the high contracting parties recognize that it will be admissible for either of them to take such measures as may be indispensable in order to safeguard those interests if threatened either by the aggressive action of any other power or by disturbances arising in China or Korea, and necessitating the intervention of either the high contracting parties for the protection of the lives and property of its subjects.

Since the announcement of the doctrine of the open door, and since the negotiation of the first Anglo-Japanese alliance, both of which were designed to protect the territorial and administrative integrity of China, to stay aggressions in China, there has been a more pronounced policy of aggression with reference to China than was ever known before in the history of the Far East. Indeed, Mr. President, the difficulties now foremost and uppermost for consideration with reference to the Far East are difficulties which spring from a disregard of the principles of the open door and the principle of policy announced in the Anglo-Japanese alliance.

I am advised by those who seem to be well informed that practically 77 per cent of the Chinese territory is now under the control or domination of foreign powers. Not all of that has been acquired since the announcement of the doctrine of the open door and the Anglo-Japanese alliance, but a very considerable amount of it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. In what degree is the domination exercised by foreign governors over this 77 per cent of the territory, or does the Senator mean that 77 per cent of the territory lies in the so-called spheres of influence?

Mr. BORAH. That is what I have reference to. Of course, in some instances there is actual physical domination of the territory.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator does not mean that foreign administrators or troops are in occupation of 77 per cent of the territory?

Mr. BORAH. No; but what I understand to be the contention is that in 77 per cent of the territory the dominating influence is a foreign power.

During the existence of the Anglo-Japanese alliance China had presented to her what are known as the 21 demands. These demands consisted of five different groups, as they were styled—first, second, third, fourth, and fifth. The first group relates almost exclusively, I think, to the matter of Shantung. The fifth group was afterwards, under the pressure of public opinion, withdrawn, and was not urged finally by Japan. The second, third, and fourth remain, and also the first except as it has been modified by the present treaty now being negotiated between China and Japan. I read the second, third, and fourth groups. The second group reads:

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, since the Chinese Government has always acknowledged the special position enjoyed by Japan in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia, agree to the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. The two contracting parties mutually agree that the term of lease of Port Arthur and Dalny and the term of lease of the South Manchurian Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway shall be extended to the period of 99 years.

As I understand, that remains unchanged. There is no resolution and no provision in the Shantung treaty modifying this particular provision.

ART. 2. Japanese subjects in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia shall have the right to lease or own land required either for erecting suitable buildings for trade and manufacture or for farming.

ART. 3. Japanese subjects shall be free to reside and travel in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia and to engage in business and in manufacture of any kind whatsoever.

ART. 4. The Chinese Government agrees to grant to Japanese subjects the right of opening the mines in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia. As regards what mines are to be opened, they shall be decided upon jointly.

ART. 5. The Chinese Government agrees that in respect of the (two) cases mentioned hereinbelow, the Japanese Government's consent shall be first obtained before action is taken:

(a) Whenever permission is granted to the subject of a third power to build a railway or to make a loan with a third power for the purpose of building a railway in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia.

(b) Whenever a loan is to be made with a third power pledging the local taxes of south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia as security.

ART. 6. The Chinese Government agrees that if the Chinese Government employs political, financial, or military advisers or instructors in south Manchuria or eastern inner Mongolia, the Japanese Government shall first be consulted.

ART. 7. The Chinese Government agrees that the control and management of the Kirin-Changchun Railway shall be handed over to the Japanese Government for a term of 99 years, dating from the signing of this agreement.

III.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, seeing that Japanese financiers and the Hanyehping Co. have close relations with each other at present and desiring that the common interests of the two nations shall be advanced, agree to the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. The two contracting parties mutually agree that when the opportune moment arrives the Hanyehping Co. shall be made a joint concern of the two nations, and they further agree that without the previous consent of Japan China shall not by her own act dispose of the rights and property of whatsoever nature of the said company, nor cause the said company to dispose freely of the same.

ART. 2. The Chinese Government agrees that all mines in the neighborhood of those owned by the Hanyehping Co. shall not be permitted, without the consent of the said company, to be worked by other persons outside of the said company; and further agrees that if it is desired to carry out any undertaking which it is apprehended may directly or indirectly affect the interests of the said company the consent of the said company shall first be obtained.

IV.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, with the object of effectively preserving the territorial integrity of China, agree to the following special article:

The Chinese Government engages not to cede or lease to a third power any harbor or bay or island along the coast of China.

My understanding is, Mr. President, that this question was not dealt with by the conference at all and was not dealt with by any treaty or any resolution emanating from the conference. Of course, I have seen in print some statements upon the part of delegates from Japan as to future action, and so forth, to which I do not give any consideration, for the reason, in the first place, I do not know whether those delegates are correctly quoted, and, in the second place, I should not think of forming an opinion as to the future policy of a country from the individual statement of some particular citizen of that country.

It is quite clear that practically none of the questions which relate to the territorial integrity of China and which have menaced the territorial integrity of China are settled by this or any other treaty except, we will say, the Shantung treaty, to which I may refer later. I understand perfectly that it was not within the power of the conference to effectuate anything along that line, and it is not in criticism of the conference that I make this suggestion, but rather to recall a situation and a condition which confronts us with reference to far eastern questions.

We, in my opinion, will never secure a solution of them other than through the power of public opinion, if we do at all; in other words, Japan is in Manchuria and inner eastern Mongolia; she is in possession of lines of railway; she is now in control practically of large portions of Siberia, and her policy of penetration continues. The Japanese declined to permit the conference to take these matters up for consideration. We were advised by the public prints that when Mr. Hughes proposed a commission, which was to have something of an investigating power with reference to aggressions in China, it was proposed to make it retroactive. The commission, in the first instance, was designed to gather together facts and circumstances with reference not only to future aggressions and acts upon the part of governments as affecting Chinese territory but it was designed to enable the commission to go into past transactions. That proposition was rejected, as we are informed. The Japanese Government declined to accept that resolution. So these questions remain unsettled and undetermined so far as the treaties formulated by the Washington conference are concerned.

I do not undertake to say, Mr. President, that it was at all within the power of the conference to have done more than it did. I only undertake to say that it ought to be understood that any Senator voting for this treaty must not be considered as indorsing the acts which have already taken place in China or as giving moral approval to their continuation or to the continued possession of the territory which has thus been seized.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether, in his opinion, this treaty does anything more for China than did the promulgation of the doctrine of the open door by Mr. Hay, to which assent was given by the very same powers that are signatories to this treaty? Will China be any more secure? Is not this a rather magnificent gesture upon the part of the United States and the other powers, a promise to do that which they have promised heretofore to do, namely, to respect China's territorial integrity and her political independence?

Mr. BORAH. In my judgment the treaty has this merit: It is a reaffirmation of a very sound policy, and I do not think a man or a nation can make a moral resolution to reform himself or itself too often, although it may not be lived up to. I have always believed in taking a New Year's resolution, and I have found sometimes it has helped for a considerable period. I think if you make good resolves often enough it may help in ultimate recovery from bad practices. All these Governments, or most of them, signing this treaty have made the same promises with regard to China that are made in this treaty some six times heretofore. It can do no harm and may do good to make them the seventh time.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Idaho, if he will permit me, whether there was any evidence before the Committee on Foreign Relations tending to show that any of the powers which signed this treaty had relinquished any of their spheres of influence or whether they were as strongly intrenched now and propose to be as strongly intrenched in the future, notwithstanding this treaty, as they were anterior to its adoption?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not understand that any of the seized territory has been released. That was a matter which both Great Britain and Japan regarded as outside of the jurisdiction of the conference.

Mr. President, I have called attention to these circumstances and conditions in order to make a very brief observation upon the treaty itself. If I considered that this treaty would have the effect of confirming—not in express terms, I grant you, but in moral effect—these past aggressions, I should feel that I could not vote for it. I should very much fear unless it is clearly declared otherwise, the construction which will be placed upon the treaty, rather than the making of the treaty, will be that of giving moral sanction to the aggressions which have already taken place. In other words, it may be contended that the powers, having met and having declined to take up and correct the evils and the wrongs of the past, and having made a treaty dealing entirely with the future, so far as the present conditions are concerned, they must be considered as having been settled, acceded to, acquiesced in, and morally confirmed.

I am perfectly aware that the treaty itself in its express terms can not be construed to that effect; but I look at the surrounding circumstances and the facts which accompany the making of the treaty; and I am not quite willing, so far as I am individually concerned, to have even the presumption raised that the United States has acquiesced in the aggressions which have taken place or in any way became an accomplice or connived at the holding of territory which we have always considered was taken in violation of the Hay doctrine, and was certainly taken in violation of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, although to that, of course, we were not a party.

The very fact that the matter was suggested in the conference by the Chinese delegation, and that the conference refused to deal with it owing to the objection of certain parties, might very well give rise to the argument in the future upon the part of certain Governments, that while the conference did not expressly settle all past transactions it tacitly did so. As I have said, no one has discussed this treaty; the view has not been expressed one way or the other by its negotiators as to what effect it would have along those lines.

One word more, Mr. President. As I said a moment ago, we find that China to-day has——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that point will he yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. KING. I have noticed in the press that the Cantonese Government, which speaks for a large part of the people of China, perhaps, from 100,000,000 to 180,000,000 people, has denounced the Chinese tariff treaty. I was wondering if the Senator had learned whether in their denunciation they had included this treaty. It was claimed there that the tariff treaty was an infringement of the sovereignty of China; that, whereas the conference had professed to recognize the sovereignty of China and its right to control its domestic affairs, here was a clear violation of that profession, and an attempt by the signatory powers to determine the kind of a tariff China should impose upon herself.

My recollection is that in the same interview, which was given out by Wu Ting Fang, and by others who had participated in a public meeting, they had denounced the pending treaty. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has learned of any general approval of this treaty by any element in the Chinese Empire?

Mr. BORAH. I have no information upon that subject at all.

Mr. President, I have very great sympathy and very great respect for the Chinese people; I believe them to be a noble race, and I understand, as we all do, the misfortunes which have overtaken them in these days. I have no opinion to express as to what their future may be; but I know that they are entitled to the sympathy and the moral support of the United States in their effort to extricate themselves from the unfortunate dilemma in which they are now found.

China has many reasons highly to regard the friendship of the United States. I feel that, with very rare exceptions, we have always been her friend, and she has trusted us as no other nation in the world has ever trusted any other country. I did not want to cast a vote upon this treaty with the slightest implication that the United States Senate, or, at least, those who are willing to express themselves upon it, are even conniving at what I regard as great wrongs toward the Chinese people.

This treaty was designed for the benefit of China; it was undoubtedly intended to help China; I sincerely hope it may help her; but it would be a great detriment to China if it should be construed as confirming and acquiescing in the wrongs which have already been committed against China.

Mr. President, I ask permission to print, in this connection, two letters from Charles Edward Russell, a student of far eastern affairs, and a man noted for his broad sympathy with wronged peoples:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 17, 1922.

DEAR SENATOR: The news from China these days is most disquieting. I have no doubt you noted yesterday that General Wu Pei-Fu has taken the field against Chang Tsao-Lin and that a new civil war has begun, to be attended, we must fear, with all the horrors that usually belong to such conflicts. This is the certain result of the four-power pact, and ought to give us the gravest uneasiness as to the length to which its disastrous influence upon China may go. I suppose you know that Wu Pei-Fu, a very able man, and, I believe, an honest one, represents Chinese nationalism, and that Chang Tsao-Lin, the military governor of Manchuria and former bandit, represents the Japanese influence in north China. What has happened seems clear enough. Since the disarmament conference rejected China's just and moderate demands for independence and sovereignty, and the four-power pact served notice upon her that she must submit to a continuation of the existing conditions of subjection, men like Wu Pei-Fu have come to the conclusion that the western world intends to do nothing for China except to bind her fast and deliver her to the exploiters, and they have therefore resolved to fight against these intolerable conditions.

We should never lose sight of the fact, so easily overlooked by the conference, that the continuation of present conditions insured by the four-power pact means the continuation of Japanese supremacy, and that this is a condition to which the new China will never submit without a struggle. Since the rejection of China's pleas by the conference Chang Tsao-Lin, the emissary of Japan, a ruthless, powerful, resourceful man, has been visibly stretching his influence down from the north upon Peking, which he to-day largely controls. With the warrant of the four-power pact back of him and the apparent support of Japan by the United States, the influence that he represents must gain enormously in prestige and power. Thus it is against this menace of the loss of all they had hoped for that the Wu Pei-Fu element has taken the field.

The situation is most deplorable, because it may breed the greatest calamities China has known in modern times. Obviously, if Chang Tsao-Lin is successful, he will become the dictator of all northern China. Either then he will imitate Yuan Shi-Kai and seize the Government in his own name, or, if he listens to British influence, he will carry out the favorite British design of restoring the Emperor. In either case there will be revolution, assassinations, widespread punishments, and a reign of terror to be ended only with terrible bloodshed and devastations, for young China will never submit willingly to another Yuan Shi-Kai nor to any return of the Manchus. On the other hand, if Wu Pei-Fu should win, his victory would be a moral and essential defeat for Japan, which in the existing conditions Japan could not be expected to take easily.

All these contingencies of evil and disaster the disarmament conference might easily have prevented. The largest promise for Chinese unity, Chinese democracy, Chinese progress, lies in Chinese independence. If the western nations would get out of China and take their exploiters with them, China could take care of herself and would do so in a way to astonish the reactionary and refute the cynic. The proposal to do this was before the conference, submitted by the delegates of France. I assume that you remember its historic rejection by the delegates of Great Britain and the reason they gave of the necessity to defend Hongkong with heavy artillery at Kowloon. With that rejection the last hope of peace and progress for China seems to have disappeared.

It is melancholy to reflect upon what all this means for us as for China. There was a time when the influence of the United States there exceeded the influence of all other nations together. To a degree beyond precedent in international affairs the Chinese people trusted and sought the leadership of the United States. There was a time when they would have gone anywhere or attempted anything under that leadership, wisely used. That time will not come again. The United States deliberately threw away the greatest opportunity to do good that was ever intrusted to any nation. It could have pacified, united, and inspired China. Instead it has joined hands in the four-power pact with China's exploiters and sent her reeling backward, perhaps for generations. When we reflect that until China is pacified there will be no peace in the Pacific region, that China will not be pacified until it is free, that upon China depends to a great extent the condition and progress of the vast Orient, and that the Orient comprises a large proportion of the children of the earth, the disaster seems almost illimitable. We might have lighted up and led the world, and we turn to insure the safety of private investments and the progress of alien assimilation.

Yours very truly,

CHARLES EDWARD RUSSELL.

To Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 18, 1922.

MY DEAR SENATOR BORAH: There is another phase of the four-power pact I beg leave to draw to your attention, although I have no doubt you are already familiar with it. Of course, the real purpose of the Anglo-Japanese alliance was to secure Japan's assistance in maintaining British supremacy in India. British statesmen have never been in the least deceived as to the perilous nature of the British tenure there. On Saturday we had news that in view of the highly threatening situation in Indian affairs, Great Britain had called upon Japan for the assistance to which the treaty gave warrant. The four-power pact supersedes the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and is its successor. Do we succeed also to the obligations in regard to India, implied if not expressed? Great Britain is certainly too wise to surrender, particularly in these uneasy times, the great asset of help she had in the arrangement with Japan. If the United States, as one of the successors to the old contract, is not to be expected to furnish assistance in an Indian crisis, has Great Britain another agreement with Japan that will fill this hiatus? And if she has, in what respect does it differ essentially from the old Anglo-Japanese alliance that Mr. Hughes assured us many times must be obliterated?

We have news to-day that Ghandhi, the leader of the Indian people, has been sentenced by the British Government to six years' imprisonment for advising his countrymen not to buy British goods, for that is what the case really means. We have, then, a compendious and satisfying view of what that British supremacy in India really means that Japan is now called upon to uphold. Do we wish to take our place side by side with Great Britain and Japan in this endeavor? Morally if not physically, is not this exactly what we shall be doing anyway under this pact? Is it not what the British people understand us to be doing? And the Indian people no less? Is it not true that the Indian movement for freedom, like all of the Chinese movements to the same end, was inspired by the United States, believed to be the conspicuous example of liberty and democracy, and is it not true that when we appear to both these peoples hand in hand with the nations they regard as their oppressors, we strike the chill of despair into their hearts?

Besides all this, I must view the pact with the greatest uneasiness, because it seems to me to be undeniably the entering wedge of the Anglo-American alliance, for many years the dearest object of British statecraft. In my judgment, it was for this that the country has been for so many years inundated with always increasing British propaganda, that our scholiasts and so large a part of our press have been aligned, that so many and such subtle influences have been at work to reach and infect the public mind with representations most favorable to Great Britain and an alliance with her. I am without the least racial prejudice on this subject, but it has been my lot to observe much British governmental operations at close range and much of the effect thereof in British dominions, and for this country to ally itself with a nation of such ideals and practices seems to me the collapse of every hope the world has had of the United States.

Yours very truly,

CHARLES EDWARD RUSSELL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, at the risk of being charged with threshing over old straw, I desire to revert for just a moment to an incident which occurred upon yesterday afternoon during the discussion of the so-called submarine and poison-gas treaty.

In the course of my remarks I made the assertion that the United States upon a certain occasion had refused to give its assent to a convention prohibiting the use of asphyxiating gases in warfare, and I stated at the time that that refusal was registered at a convention or meeting at The Hague. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], in replying, took occasion to say that the United States had not done any such thing; and I will confess that the senior Senator from Massachusetts almost persuaded me that I was mistaken in my statement. I find, however, upon looking through the records of The Hague conventions that I was right. On July 29, 1899, there was promulgated at The Hague an international declaration respecting asphyxiating gases. The declaration was confined entirely to that one subject. At the convention the United States was represented in the person of Admiral Mahan. The one paragraph which is of interest and importance and around which the entire convention revolves reads as follows:

> The contracting powers agree to abstain from the use of projectiles the sole object of which is the diffusion of asphyxiating or deleterious gases.

That convention was signed by all the countries whose delegates were present, with the exception of the United States. The United States flatly declined to agree to that convention; and Admiral Mahan at the time, in arguing against it, referred to the fact that that method and type of warfare could be no more cruel than that involved in the sinking of a battleship and the resultant drowing of sailors in the dead of night.

That our Government has had this conception of its own attitude, first established upon this occasion, is evident from the further fact that in a booklet printed by the War Department, entitled "Rules of Land Warfare," dated 1914, corrected to April 15, 1917, we find on page 1 a reference to this declaration at The Hague of the 29th of July, 1899, and a note added to this effect:

> This has never been ratified by the United States.

It is worthy of mention, Mr. President, that that paragraph, in the declaration of July 29, 1899, does not appear in The Hague Convention of 1907 specifically. It should be said, however, that The Hague Convention of 1907 prohibits the use of poison or poisoned weapons. To that the United States agreed; but the United States has never agreed until yesterday that asphyxiating gases should be prohibited in war.

I mention this, Mr. President, in the interest of historical accuracy.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the express purpose of this so-called nine powers treaty relating to principles and policies to be followed in matters concerning China is, as declared in the preamble—

> To stabilize conditions in the Far East, to safeguard the rights and interests of China, and to promote intercourse between China and the other powers upon the basis of equality of opportunity.

Mr. President, as an illuminating side light interpreting what this treaty intends to do and perhaps may be expected to do, I ask the consent of the Senate to have printed in the RECORD three documents. Two of them are already historic, and one of them, having to do with this treaty, will, in my judgment, become historic in the years to come.

The first of those documents is a memorandum which bears the date "somewhere about September, 1914," and is the memorandum published by the Black Dragon Society of Japan. The Black Dragon Society is a secret organization of Japanese who live in China. So far as I am able to find out, the name came because of the fact that the members of this organization, who were largely Japanese officers, were in consultation in Heilungchiang, or the Black Dragon Province of Manchuria, and therefore the name of this society was called the Black Dragon Society. It represented the power of Japan in China; and this memorandum—which I will not read, but which I do ask consent of the Senate to place in the RECORD at this point—is illuminating as to the purposes of Japan in China. It speaks of the change from a republican government to a monarchy under the control of Japan, and it indicates all through its length and breadth the absolute domination of China by Japan.

The second document that I ask leave to print following this statement is the so-called 21 demands of Japan upon China, which, if I remember correctly, bears the date January 18, 1915.

The third document to follow here consists of the eight articles of the pending treaty, which comprises the substantive parts of the treaty.

If I may have that permission, Mr. President, it concludes my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PART I. THE EUROPEAN WAR AND THE CHINESE QUESTION.

The present gigantic struggle in Europe has no parallel in history. Not only will the equilibrium of Europe be affected and its effect felt all over the globe, but its results will create a new era in the political and social world. Therefore whether or not the Imperial Japanese Government can settle the Far Eastern question and bring to realization our great imperial policy depends on our being able to skillfully avail ourselves of the world's general trend of affairs so as to extend our influence and to decide upon a course of action toward China which shall be practical in execution. If our authorities and people view the present European war with indifference and without deep concern, merely devoting their attention to the attack on Kiaochow, neglecting the larger issues of the war, they will have brought to naught our great Imperial policy and committed a blunder greater than which it can not be conceived. We are constrained to submit this statement of policy for the consideration of our authorities, not because we are fond of argument but because we are deeply anxious for our national welfare.

No one at present can foretell the outcome of the European war. If the Allies meet with reverses and victory shall crown the arms of the Germans and Austrians, German militarism will undoubtedly dominate the European Continent and extend southward and eastward to other parts of the world. Should such a state of affairs happen to take place the consequences resulting therefrom will be indeed great and extensive. On this account we must devote our serious attention to the subject. If, on the other hand, the Germans and Austrians should be crushed by the Allies, Germany will be deprived of her present status as a federated State under a Kaiser. The federation will be disintegrated into separate States and Prussia will have to be content with the status of a second-rate power. Austria and Hungary, on account of this defeat, will consequently be divided. What their final fate shall be no one would now venture to predict. In the meantime Russia will annex Galicia and the Austrian Poland; France will repossess Alsace and Lorraine; Great Britain will occupy the German colonies in Africa and the south Pacific; Serbia and Montenegro will take Bosnia, Herzegovina, and a certain portion of Austrian territory, thus making such great changes in the map of Europe that even the Napoleonic war in 1815 could not find a parallel.

When these events take place, not only will Europe experience great changes, but we should not ignore the fact that they will occur also in China and in the South Pacific. After Russia has replaced Germany in the territories lost by Germany and Austria, she will hold a controlling influence in Europe, and, for a long time to come, will have nothing to fear from her western frontier. Immediately after the war she will make an effort to carry out her policy of expansion in the East and will not relax that effort until she has acquired a controlling influence in China. At the same time Great Britain will strengthen her position in the Yangtze Valley and prohibit any other country from getting a footing there. France will do likewise in Yunnan Province, using it as her base of operations for further encroachments upon China and never hesitate to extend her advantages. We must therefore seriously study the situation, remembering always that the combined action of Great Britain, Russia, and France will not only affect Europe but that we can even foresee that it will also affect China.

Whether this combined action on the part of England, France, and Russia is to terminate at the end of the war or to continue to operate, we can not now predict. But after peace in Europe is restored, these powers will certainly turn their attention to the expansion of their several spheres of interest in China, and, in the adjustment, their interests will most likely conflict with one another. If their interests do not conflict, they will work jointly to solve the Chinese question. On this point we have not the least doubt. If England, France, and Russia are actually to combine for the coercion of China, what course is to be adopted by the Imperial Japanese Government to meet the situation? What proper means shall we employ to maintain our influence and extend our interests within this ring of rivalry and competition. It is necessary that we bear in mind the final results of the European war and forestall the trend of events succeeding it so as to be able to decide upon a policy toward China and determine the action to be ultimately taken. If we remain passive, the Imperial Japanese Government's policy toward China will lose that subjective influence and our diplomacy will be checked forever by the combined force of the other powers. The peace of the Far East will be thus endangered and even the existence of the Japanese Empire as a nation will no doubt be imperiled. It is therefore our first important duty at this moment to inquire of our Government what course is to be adopted to face that general situation after the war? What preparations are being made to meet the combined pressure of the Allies upon China? What policy has been followed to solve the Chinese question? When the European war is terminated and peace restored we are not concerned so much with the question whether it be the dual monarchies or the triple entente which emerge victorious, but whether, in anticipation of the future expansion of European influence in the Continents of Europe and Asia, the Imperial Japanese Government should or should not hesitate to employ force to check the movement before this occurrence. Now is the most opportune moment for Japan to quickly solve the Chinese question. Such an opportunity will not occur for hundreds of years to come. Not only is it Japan's divine duty to act now, but present conditions in China favor the execution of such a plan. We should by all means decide and act at once. If our authorities do not avail themselves of this rare opportunity, great difficulty will surely be encountered in future in the settlement of this Chinese question. Japan will be isolated from the European powers after the war, and will be regarded by them with envy and jealousy just as Germany is now regarded. Is it not then a vital necessity for Japan to solve at this very moment the Chinese question?

PART II. THE CHINESE QUESTION AND THE DEFENSIVE ALLIANCE.

It is a very important matter of policy whether the Japanese Government, in obedience to its divine mission, shall solve the Chinese question in a heroic manner by making China voluntarily rely upon Japan. To force China to such a position there is nothing else for the Imperial Japanese Government to do but to take advantage of the present opportunity to seize the reigns of political and financial power and to enter by all means into a defensive alliance with her under secret terms as enumerated below:

THE SECRET TERMS OF THE DEFENSIVE ALLIANCE.

The Imperial Japanese Government, with due respect for the sovereignty and integrity of China and with the object and hope of maintaining the peace of the Far East, undertakes to share the responsibility of cooperating with China to guard her against internal trouble and foreign invasion and China shall accord to Japan special facilities in the matter of China's national defense, or the protection of Japan's special rights and privileges and for these objects the following treaty of alliance is to be entered into between the two contracting parties:

1. When there is internal trouble in China or when she is at war with another nation or nations, Japan shall send her army to render assistance, to assume the responsibility of guarding Chinese territory, and to maintain peace and order in China.

2. China agrees to recognize Japan's privileged position in south Manchuria and inner Mongolia and to cede the sovereign rights of these regions to Japan to enable her to carry out a scheme of local defense on a permanent basis.

3. After the Japanese occupation of Kiaochow, Japan shall acquire all the rights and privileges hitherto enjoyed by the Germans in regard to railways, mines, and all other interests, and after peace and order is restored in Tsingtao the place shall be handed back to China to be opened as an international treaty port.

4. For the maritime defense of China and Japan, China shall lease strategic harbors along the coast of the Fukien Province to Japan to be converted into naval bases and grant to Japan in the said Province all railway and mining rights.

5. For the reorganization of the Chinese Army, China shall intrust the training and drilling of the army to Japan.

6. For the unification of China's firearms and munitions of war, China shall adopt firearms of Japanese pattern, and at the same time establish arsenals (with the help of Japan) in different strategic points.

7. With the object of creating and maintaining a Chinese Navy, China shall intrust the training of her navy to Japan.

8. With the object of reorganizing her finances and improving the methods of taxation, China shall intrust the work to Japan, and the latter shall elect competent financial experts who shall act as first-class advisers to the Chinese Government.

9. China shall engage Japanese educational experts as educational advisers and extensively establish schools in different parts of the country to teach Japanese, so as to raise the educational standard of the country.

10. China shall first consult with and obtain the consent of Japan before she can enter into an agreement with another power for making loans, the leasing of territory, or the cession of the same.

From the date of the signing of this defensive alliance, Japan and China shall work together hand in hand. Japan will assume the responsibility of safeguarding Chinese territory and maintaining the peace and order in China. This will relieve China of all future anxieties and enable her to proceed energetically with her reforms, and with a sense of territorial security she may wait for her national development and regeneration. Even after the present European war is over and peace is restored China will absolutely have nothing to fear in the future of having pressure brought against her by the foreign powers. It is only thus that permanent peace can be secured in the Far East.

But before concluding this defensive alliance two points must first be ascertained and settled. (1) Its bearing on the Chinese Government. (2) Its bearing on those powers having intimate relations with and great interests in China.

In considering its effect on the Chinese Government, Japan must try to foresee whether the position of China's present ruler, Yuan Shi-kai, shall be permanent or not; whether the present Government's policy will enjoy the confidence of a large section of the Chinese people; whether Yuan Shi-kai will readily agree to the Japanese Government's proposal to enter into a treaty of alliance with us. These are points to which we are bound to give a thorough consideration. Judging by the attitude hitherto adopted by Yuan Shi-kai we know he has always resorted to the policy of expediency in his diplomatic dealings, and although he may now outwardly show friendliness toward us, he will in fact rely upon the influence of the different powers as the easiest check against us and refuse to accede to our demands. Take for a single instance his conduct toward us since the Imperial Government declared war against Germany and his action will then be clear to all. Whether we can rely upon the ordinary friendly methods of diplomacy to gain our object or not it does not require much wisdom to decide. After the gigantic struggle in Europe is over, leaving aside America, which will not press for advantage, China will not be able to obtain any loans from the other powers. With a depleted treasury, without means to pay the officials and the army, with local bandits inciting the poverty-stricken populace to trouble, with the revolutionists waiting for opportunities to rise should an insurrection actually occur while no outside assistance can be rendered to quell it, we are certain it will be impossible for Yuan Shi-kai, single-handed, to restore order and consolidate the country.

The result will be that the nation will be cut into many parts beyond all hope of remedy. That this state of affairs will come is not difficult to foresee. When this occurs, shall we uphold Yuan's Government and assist him to suppress the internal insurrection, with the certain assurance that we could influence him to agree to our demands, or shall we help the revolutionists to achieve a success and realize our object through them? This question must be definitely decided upon this very moment, so that we may put it into practical execution. If we do not look into the future fate of China, but go blindly to uphold Yuan's Government, to enter into a defensive alliance with China, hoping thus to secure a complete realization of our object by assisting him to suppress the revolutionists, it is obviously a wrong policy. Why? Because the majority of the Chinese people have lost all faith in the tottering Yuan Shi-kai, who is discredited and attacked by the whole nation for having sold his country. If Japan gives Yuan the support, his Government, though in a very precarious state, may possibly avoid destruction. Yuan Shi-kai belongs to that school of politicians who are fond of employing craftiness and cunning. He may be friendly to us for a time, but he will certainly abandon us and again befriend the other powers when the European war is at an end. Judging by his past we have no doubt as to what he will do in the future. For Japan to ignore the general sentiment of the Chinese people and support Yuan Shi-kai, with the hope that we can settle with him the Chinese question, is a blunder, indeed. Therefore in order to secure the permanent peace of the Far East, instead of supporting a Chinese Government which can neither be long continued in power nor assist in the attainment of our object, we should rather support the 400,000,000 Chinese people to renovate their corrupt Government, to change its present form, to maintain peace and order in the land, and to usher into China a new era of prosperity, so that China and Japan may in fact, as well as in name, be brought into the most intimate and vital relations with each other. China's era of prosperity is based on the China-Japanese alliance, and this alliance is the foundational power for the repelling of the foreign aggression that is to be directed against the Far East at the conclusion of the European war. This alliance is also the foundation stone of the peace of the world. Japan, therefore, should take this as the last warning and immediately solve this question. Since the Imperial Japanese Government has considered it imperative to support the Chinese people, we should induce the Chinese revolutionists, the imperialists, and other Chinese malcontents to create trouble all over China. The whole country will be thrown into disorder and Yuan's Government will consequently be overthrown. We shall then select a man from amongst the most influential and most noted of the 400,000,000 of Chinese and help him to organize a new form of government and to consolidate the whole country. In the meantime our army must assist in the restoration of peace and order in the country, and in the protection of the lives and properties of the people, so that they may gladly tender their allegiance to the new Government which will then naturally confide in and rely upon Japan. It is after the accomplishment of only these things that we shall without difficulty gain our object by the conclusion of a defensive alliance with China.

For us to incite the Chinese revolutionists and malcontents to rise in China we consider the present to be the most opportune moment. The reason why these men can not now carry on an active campaign is because they are insufficiently provided with funds. If the Imperial Government can take advantage of this fact to make them a loan and instruct them to rise simultaneously, great commotion and disorder will surely prevail all over China. We can intervene and easily adjust matters.

The progress of the European war warns Japan with greater urgency of the imperative necessity of solving this most vital of questions. The Imperial Government can not be considered as embarking on a rash project. This opportunity will not repeat itself for our benefit. We must avail ourselves of this chance and under no circumstances hesitate. Why should we wait for the spontaneous uprising of the revolutionists and malcontents? Why should we not think out and lay down a plan beforehand? When we examine into the form of government in China, we must ask whether the existing Republic is well suited to the national temperament and well adapted to the thoughts and aspirations of the Chinese people.

From the time the Republic of China was established up to the present moment, if what it has passed through is to be compared to what it ought to be in the matter of administration and unification, we find disappointment everywhere. Even the revolutionists themselves, the very ones who first advocated the republican form of government, acknowledge that they have made a mistake. The retention of the republican form of government in China will be a great future obstacle in the way of a Chino-Japanese alliance. And why must it be so? Because in a republic the fundamental principles of government, as well as the social and moral aims of the people, are distinctly different from that of a constitutional monarchy. Their laws and administration also conflict. If Japan act as a guide to China and China models herself after Japan, it will only then be possible for the two nations to solve by mutual effort the Far East question without differences and disagreements. Therefore, to start from the foundation for the purpose of reconstructing the Chinese Government, of establishing a Chino-Japanese alliance, of maintaining the permanent peace of the Far East, and of realizing the consummation of Japan's imperial policy, we must take advantage of the present opportunity to alter China's republican form of government into a constitutional monarchy, which shall necessarily be identical in all its details to the constitutional monarchy of Japan, and to no other. This is really the key and first principle to be firmly held for the actual reconstruction of the form of government in China. If China changes her republican form of government to that of a constitutional monarchy, shall we, in the selection of a new ruler, restore the Emperor Hsuan T'ung to his throne or choose the most capable man from the monarchists or select the most worthy member from among the revolutionists? We think, however, that it is advisable at present to leave this question to the exigency of the future when the matter is brought up for decision. But we must not lose sight of the fact that to actually put into execution this policy of a Chino-Japanese alliance and the transformation of the Republic of China into a constitutional monarchy is in reality the fundamental principle to be adopted for the reconstruction of China.

We shall now consider the bearing of this defensive alliance on the other powers. Needless to say, Japan and China will in no way impair the rights and interests already acquired by the powers. At this moment it is of paramount importance for Japan to come to a special understanding with Russia to define our respective spheres in Manchuria and Mongolia, so that the two countries may cooperate with each other in the future. This means that Japan, after the acquisition of sovereign rights in south Manchuria and inner Mongolia, will work together with Russia after her acquisition of sovereign rights in north Manchuria and outer Mongolia to maintain the status quo and endeavor by every effort to protect the peace of the Far East. Russia since the outbreak of the European war has not only laid aside all ill feeling against Japan, but has adopted the same attitude as her allies and shown warm friendship for us. No matter how we regard the Manchurian and Mongolian questions in the future, she is anxious that we find some way of settlement. Therefore, we need not doubt but that Russia in her attitude toward this Chinese question will be able to come to an understanding with us for mutual cooperation.

The British sphere of influence and interest in China is centered in Tibet and the Yangtsze Valley. Therefore, if Japan can come to some satisfactory arrangement with China in regard to Tibet, and also give certain privileges to Great Britain in the Yangtsze Valley, with an assurance to protect those privileges, no matter how powerful Great Britain might be, she will surely not oppose Japan's policy in regard to this Chinese question. While this present European war is going on Great Britain has never asked Japan to render her assistance. That her strength will certainly not enable her to oppose us in the future need not be doubted in the least.

Since Great Britain and Russia will not oppose Japan's policy toward China, it can readily be seen what attitude France will adopt in regard to the subject. What Japan must now somewhat reckon with is America. But America in her attitude toward us regarding our policy toward China has already declared the principle of maintaining China's territorial integrity and equal opportunity and will be satisfied, if we do not impair America's already acquired rights and privileges. We think America will also have no cause for complaint. Nevertheless, America has in the East a naval force which can be fairly relied upon, though not sufficiently strong to be feared. Therefore in Japan's attitude toward America there is nothing really for us to be afraid of.

Since China's condition is such on the one hand and the powers' relation toward China is such on the other hand, Japan should avail herself in the meantime of the European war to definitely decide upon a policy toward China, the most important move being the transformation of the Chinese Government to be followed up by preparing for the conclusion of the defensive alliance. The precipitate action on the part of our present cabinet in acceding to the request of Great Britain to declare war against Germany without having definitely settled our policy toward China has no real connection with our future negotiations with China or affect the political condition in the Far East. Consequently all intelligent Japanese, of every walk of life throughout the land, are very deeply concerned about the matter.

Our Imperial Government should now definitely change our dependent foreign policy which is being directed by others into an independent foreign policy which shall direct others, proclaiming the same with solemn sincerity to the world and carrying it out with determination. If we do so, even the gods and spirits will give way. These are important points in our policy toward China, and the result depends on how we carry them out. Can our authorities firmly make up their mind to solve this Chinese question by the actual carrying out of this fundamental principle? If they show irresolution while we have this heaven-conferred chance and merely depend on the good will of the other powers, we shall eventually have greater pressure to be brought against the Far East after the European war is over, when the present equilibrium will be destroyed. That day will then be too late for us to repent of our folly. We are therefore impelled by force of circumstances to urge our authorities to a quicker sense of the situation and to come to a determination.

JAPAN'S ORIGINAL 21 DEMANDS.

Translations of documents handed to the President, Yuan-shih-kai, by Mr. Hioki, the Japanese minister, on January 18, 1915:

GROUP I.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government being desirous of maintaining the general peace in eastern Asia and further strengthening the friendly relations and good neighborhood existing between the two nations agree to the following:

ARTICLE 1. The Chinese Government engages to give full assent to all matters upon which the Japanese Government may hereafter agree with the German Government relating to the disposition of all rights, interests, and concessions which Germany, by virtue of treaties or otherwise, possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

ART. 2. The Chinese Government engages that within the Province of Shantung and along its coast no territory or island will be ceded or leased to a third power under any pretext.

ART. 3. The Chinese Government consents to Japan's building a railway from Chefoo or Lungchow to join the Kiaochow-Tsinanfu Railway.

ART. 4. The Chinese Government engages, in the interest of trade and for the residence of foreigners, to open by herself as soon as possible certain important cities and towns in the Province of Shantung as commercial ports. What places shall be opened are to be jointly decided upon in a separate agreement.

GROUP II.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, since the Chinese Government has always acknowledged the special position enjoyed by Japan in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia, agree to the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. The two contracting parties mutually agree that the term of lease of Port Arthur and Dalny and the term of lease of the South Manchurian Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway shall be extended to the period of 99 years.

ART. 2. Japanese subjects in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia shall have the right to lease or own land required either for erecting suitable buildings for trade and manufacture or for farming.

ART. 3. Japanese subjects shall be free to reside and travel in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia and to engage in business and in manufacture of any kind whatsoever.

ART. 4. The Chinese Government agrees to grant to Japanese subjects the right of opening the mines in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia. As regards what mines are to be opened they shall be decided upon jointly.

ART. 5. The Chinese Government agrees that in respect of the (two) cases mentioned herein below the Japanese Government's consent shall be first obtained before action is taken:

(a) Whenever permission is granted to the subject of a third power to build a railway or to make a loan with a third power for the purpose of building a railway in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia.

(b) Whenever a loan is to be made with a third power pledging the local taxes of south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia as security.

ART. 6. The Chinese Government agrees that if the Chinese Government employs political, financial, or military advisers or instructors in south Manchuria or eastern inner Mongolia, the Japanese Government shall first be consulted.

ART. 7. The Chinese Government agrees that the control and management of the Kirin-Changchun Railway shall be handed over to the Japanese Government for a term of 99 years dating from the signing of this agreement.

GROUP III.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, seeing that Japanese financiers and the Hanyehping Co. have close relations with each other at present and desiring that the common interests of the two nations shall be advanced, agree to the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. The two contracting parties mutually agree that when the opportune moment arrives the Hanyehping Co. shall be made a joint concern of the two nations, and they further agree that without the previous consent of Japan, China shall not by her own act dispose of the rights and property of whatsoever nature of the said company, nor cause the said company to dispose freely of the same.

ART. 2. The Chinese Government agrees that all mines in the neighborhood of those owned by the Hanyehping Co. shall not be permitted, without the consent of the said company, to be worked by other persons outside of the said company; and further agrees that if it is desired to carry out any undertaking which it is apprehended may directly or indirectly affect the interests of the said company, the consent of the said company shall first be obtained.

GROUP IV.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, with the object of effectively preserving the territorial integrity of China, agree to the following special articles:

The Chinese Government engages not to cede or lease to a third power any harbor or bay or island along the coast of China.

GROUP V.

ARTICLE 1. The Chinese Central Government shall employ influential Japanese advisers in political, financial, and military affairs.

ART. 2. Japanese hospitals, churches, and schools in the interior of China shall be granted the right of owning land.

ART. 3. Inasmuch as the Japanese Government and the Chinese Government have had many cases of dispute between Japanese and Chinese police to settle cases which caused no little misunderstanding, it is for this reason necessary that the police departments of important places (in China) shall be jointly administered by Japanese and Chinese, or that the police departments of these places shall employ numerous Japanese, so that they may at the same time help to plan for the improvement of the Chinese police service.

ART. 4. China shall purchase from Japan a fixed amount of munitions of war (say, 50 per cent or more) of what is needed by the Chinese Government, or that there shall be established in China a Sino-Japanese jointly worked arsenal. Japanese technical experts are to be employed and Japanese material to be purchased.

ART. 5. China agrees to grant to Japan the right of constructing a railway connecting Wuchang with Kiukiang and Nanchang, another line between Nanchang and Hanchow, and another between Nanchang and Chaochou.

ART. 6. If China needs foreign capital to work mines, build railways, and construct harbor works (including dockyards) in the Provinces of Fukien, Japan shall be first consulted.

ART. 7. China agrees that Japanese subjects shall have the right of missionary propaganda in China. (Refers to preaching Buddhism.)

[Third document.]

ARTICLE I.

The contracting powers, other than China, agree:

(1) To respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China;

(2) To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government;

(3) To use their influence for the purpose of effectually establishing and maintaining the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations throughout the territory of China;

(4) To refrain from taking advantage of conditions in China in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of subjects or citizens of friendly States, and from countenancing action inimical to the security of such States.

ARTICLE II.

The contracting powers agree not to enter into any treaty, agreement, arrangement, or understanding, either with one another, or individually or collectively, with any power or powers, which would infringe or impair the principles stated in Article I.

ARTICLE III.

With a view to applying more effectually the principles of the open door or equality of opportunity in China for the trade and industry of all nations, the contracting powers, other than China, agree that they will not seek, nor support their respective nationals in seeking—

(a) Any arrangement which might purport to establish in favor of their interests any general superiority of rights with respect to commercial or economic development in any designated region in China;

(b) Any such monopoly or preference as would deprive the nationals of any other power of the right of undertaking any legitimate trade or industry in China, or of participating with the Chinese Government, or with any local authority, in any category of public enterprise, or which by reason of its scope, duration, or geographical extent is calculated to frustrate the practical application of the principle of equal opportunity.

It is understood that the foregoing stipulations of this article are not to be so construed as to prohibit the acquisition of such properties or rights as may be necessary to the conduct of a particular commercial, industrial, or financial undertaking, or to the encouragement of invention and research.

China undertakes to be guided by the principles stated in the foregoing stipulations of this article in dealing with applications for economic rights and privileges from governments and nationals of all foreign countries, whether parties to the present treaty or not.

ARTICLE IV.

The contracting powers agree not to support any agreements by their respective nationals with each other designed to create spheres of influence or to provide for the enjoyment of mutually exclusive opportunities in designated parts of Chinese territory.

ARTICLE V.

China agrees that, throughout the whole of the railways in China, she will not exercise or permit unfair discrimination of any kind. In particular there shall be no discrimination whatever, direct or indirect, in respect of charges or of facilities on the ground of the nationality of passengers or the countries from which or to which they are proceeding, or the origin or ownership of goods or the country from which or to which they are consigned, or the nationality or ownership of the ship or other means of conveying such passengers or goods before or after their transport on the Chinese railways.

The contracting powers, other than China, assume a corresponding obligation in respect of any of the aforesaid railways over which they or their nationals are in a position to exercise any control in virtue of any concession, special agreement, or otherwise.

ARTICLE VI.

The contracting powers, other than China, agree fully to respect China's rights as a neutral in time of war to which China is not a party, and China declares that when she is a neutral she will observe the obligations of neutrality.

ARTICLE VII.

The contracting powers agree that whenever a situation arises which in the opinion of any one of them involves the application of the stipulations of the present treaty, and renders desirable discussion of such application, there shall be full and frank communication between the contracting powers concerned.

ARTICLE VIII.

Powers not signatory to the present treaty which have governments recognized by the signatory powers and which have treaty relations with China shall be invited to adhere to the present treaty. To this end the Government of the United States will make the necessary communications to nonsignatory powers and will inform the contracting powers of the replies received. Adherence by any power shall become effective on receipt of notice thereof by the Government of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If no amendment be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty is in the Senate and open to amendment. If no amendment be proposed, the resolution of ratification will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive P, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, a treaty between the United States, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal relating to principles and policies to be followed in matters concerning China, concluded at Washington, February 6, 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the question will be taken on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. BRANDEGEE's name was called). The Senator from Connecticut is absent on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I am informed that he would vote as I shall vote, and I shall therefore vote. I vote "yea."

I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] is absent on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I understand that if present he would vote as I shall vote on this question. I vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I have been assured that on this question he would vote as in favor of the treaty. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when Mr. POMERENE's name was called). At the request of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I desire to announce that he is absent on official business, and that if he were present he would vote in favor of the ratification of this treaty.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to do, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I understand that that Senator, if present, would vote as I intend to vote. I am therefore at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], with whom I have a general pair, is unavoidably absent; but I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." I am therefore at liberty to vote, and I record my vote in the affirmative.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] are necessarily absent and if present would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] are absent on business of the Senate, and if present would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] are absent on official business. If present, they would all vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. I understand that if present he would vote as I am about to vote, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is absent on business of the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BROUSSARD. My colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] is absent on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who is absent, but I understand that if present he would vote as I have voted, and therefore I allow my vote to stand.

The roll call resulted—yeas 66, nays 0, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this question the yeas are 66, and there are no votes in the negative. Two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in favor of the resolution of ratification, it is agreed to, and the Senate advises and consents to the treaty.

CHINESE CUSTOMS TARIFF TREATY.

Mr. LODGE. I now call up the last treaty, and ask that it be read.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, proceeded to consider Executive Q, a treaty between the United States, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal, relating to the Chinese customs tariff, concluded at Washington, February 6, 1922, which was read as follows:

The United States of America, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal:

With a view to increasing the revenues of the Chinese Government, have resolved to conclude a treaty relating to the revision of the Chinese customs tariff and cognate matters, and to that end have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: Charles Evans Hughes, Henry Cabot Lodge, Oscar W. Underwood, Elihu Root, citizens of the United States;

His Majesty the King of the Belgians: Baron de Cartier de Marchienne, Commander of the Order of Leopold and of the Order of the Crown, His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Washington;

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India: The Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, O. M., M. P., Lord President of His Privy Council; the Right Hon. Baron Lee of Fareham, G. B. E., K. C. B., First Lord of His Admiralty; the Right Hon. Sir Auckland Campbell Geddes, K. C. B., His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America;

And—

For the Dominion of Canada: The Right Hon. Sir Robert Laird Borden, G. C. M. G., K. C.;

For the Commonwealth of Australia: Senator the Right Hon. George Foster Pearce, Minister for Home and Territories;

For the Dominion of New Zealand: The Hon. Sir John William Salmond, K. C., Judge of the Supreme Court of New Zealand;

For the Union of South Africa: The Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, O. M., M. P.;

For India: The Right Hon. Valingman Sankaranarayana Srinivasa Sastri, Member of the Indian Council of State;

The President of the Republic of China: Mr. Sao-Ke Alfred Sze, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington; Mr. V. K. Wellington Koo, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at London; Mr. Chung-Hui Wang, former Minister of Justice;

The President of the French Republic: Mr. Albert Sarraut, Deputy, Minister of the Colonies: Mr. Jules J. Jusserand, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America, Grand Cross of the National Order of the Legion of Honor;

His Majesty the King of Italy: The Hon. Carlo Schanzer, Senator of the Kingdom; the Hon. Vittorio Rolandi Ricci, Senator of the Kingdom, His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Washington; the Hon. Luigi Albertini, Senator of the Kingdom;

Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands: Jonkheer Frans Beelaerts van Blokland, Her Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary; Jonkheer Willem Hendrik de Beaufort, Minister Plenipotentiary, Chargé d'Affaires at Washington.

The President of the Portuguese Republic: Mr. José Francisco de Horta Machado da Franca, Viscount d'Alte, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington; Mr. Ernesto Julio de Carvalho e Vasconcelos, Captain of the Portuguese Navy, Technical Director of the Colonial Office;

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I.

The representatives of the Contracting Powers having adopted on the 4th day of February, 1922, in the city of Washington, a resolution, which is appended as an annex to this article, with respect to the revision of Chinese customs duties, for the purpose of making such duties equivalent to an effective 5 per cent ad valorem, in accordance with existing treaties concluded by China with other nations, the Contracting Powers hereby confirm the said resolution and undertake to accept the tariff rates fixed as a result of such revision. The said tariff rates shall become effective as soon as possible, but not earlier than two months after publication thereof.

ANNEX.

With a view to providing additional revenue to meet the needs of the Chinese Government, the powers represented at this conference, namely, the United States of America, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal, agree:

That the customs schedule of duties on imports into China adopted by the Tariff Revision Commission at Shanghai on December 19, 1918, shall forthwith be revised so that the rates of duty shall be equivalent to 5 per cent effective, as provided for in the several commercial treaties to which China is a party.

A revision commission shall meet at Shanghai, at the earliest practicable date, to effect this revision forthwith and on the general lines of the last revision.

This commission shall be composed of representatives of the powers above named and of representatives of any additional powers having governments at present recognized by the powers represented at this conference, and who have treaties with China providing for a tariff on imports and exports not to exceed 5 per cent ad valorem and who desire to participate therein.

The revision shall proceed as rapidly as possible with a view to its completion within four months from the date of the adoption of this resolution by the Conference on the Limitation of Armament and Pacific and Far Eastern Questions.

The revised tariff shall become effective as soon as possible, but not earlier than two months after its publication by the revision commission.

The Government of the United States, as convener of the present conference, is requested forthwith to communicate the terms of this resolution to the Governments of powers not represented at this conference but who participated in the revision of 1918 aforesaid.

ARTICLE II.

Immediate steps shall be taken, through a special conference, to prepare the way for the speedy abolition of likin and for the fulfillment of the other conditions laid down in Article VIII of the treaty of September 5, 1902, between Great Britain and China; in Articles IV and V of the treaty of October 8, 1903, between the United States and China; and in Article I of the supplementary treaty of October 8, 1903, between Japan and China, with a view to levying the surtaxes provided for in those articles.

The special conference shall be composed of representatives of the signatory powers, and of such other powers as may desire to participate and may adhere to the present treaty, in accordance with the provisions of Article VIII, in sufficient time to allow their representatives to take part. It shall meet in China within three months after the coming into force of the present treaty, on a day and at a place to be designated by the Chinese Government.

ARTICLE III.

The special conference provided for in Article II shall consider the interim provisions to be applied prior to the abolition of likin and the fulfillment of the other conditions laid down in the articles of the treaties mentioned in Article II; and it shall authorize the levying of a surtax on dutiable imports as from such date, for such purposes, and subject to such conditions as it may determine.

The surtax shall be at a uniform rate of 2½ per cent ad valorem, provided, that in case of certain articles of luxury which, in the opinion of the special conference, can bear a greater increase without unduly impeding trade, the total surtax may be increased but may not exceed 5 per cent ad valorem.

ARTICLE IV.

Following the immediate revision of the customs schedule of duties on imports into China, mentioned in Article I, there shall be a further revision thereof to take effect at the expiration of four years following the completion of the aforesaid immediate revision, in order to insure that the customs duties shall correspond to the ad valorem rates fixed by the special conference provided for in Article II.

Following this further revision there shall be, for the same purpose, periodical revision of the customs schedule of duties on imports into China every seven years, in lieu of the decennial revision authorized by existing treaties with China.

In order to prevent delay, any revision made in pursuance of this article shall be effected in accordance with rules to be prescribed by the special conference provided for in Article II.

ARTICLE V.

In all matters relating to customs duties there shall be effective equality of treatment and of opportunity for all the contracting powers.

ARTICLE VI.

The principle of uniformity in the rates of customs duties levied at all the land and maritime frontiers of China is hereby recognized. The special conference provided for in Article II shall make arrangements to give practical effect to this principle; and it is authorized to make equitable adjustments in those cases in which a customs privilege to be abolished was granted in return for some local economic advantage.

In the meantime, any increase in the rates of customs duties resulting from tariff revision, or any surtax hereafter imposed in pursuance of the present treaty, shall be levied at a uniform rate ad valorem at all land and maritime frontiers of China.

ARTICLE VII.

The charge for transit passes shall be at the rate of 2½ per cent ad valorem until the arrangements provided for by Article II come into force.

ARTICLE VIII.

Powers not signatory to the present treaty whose Governments are at present recognized by the signatory powers, and whose present treaties with China provide for a tariff on imports and exports not to exceed 5 per cent ad valorem, shall be invited to adhere to the present treaty.

The Government of the United States undertakes to make the necessary communications for this purpose and to inform the Governments of the contracting powers of the replies received. Adherence by any power shall become effective on receipt of notice thereof by the Government of the United States.

ARTICLE IX.

The provisions of the present treaty shall override all stipulations of treaties between China and the respective contracting powers which are inconsistent therewith, other than stipulations according most favored nation treatment.

ARTICLE X.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the contracting powers in accordance with their respective constitutional methods and shall take effect on the date of the deposit of all the ratifications, which shall take place at Washington as soon as possible. The Government of the United States will transmit to the other contracting powers a certified copy of the procès-verbal of the deposit of ratifications.

The present treaty, of which the French and English texts are both authentic, shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States, and duly certified copies thereof shall be transmitted by that Government to the other contracting powers.

In faith whereof the above-named plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty.

Done at the city of Washington the 6th day of February, 1922.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] whether any explanation of this treaty will be made?

Mr. LODGE. I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. I inquire whether it is the purpose of the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to make any explanation of the pending treaty?

Mr. LODGE. If any explanation is required, the Senator from Alabama, to whose skill and ability we owe this treaty, is the person to make it.

Mr. KING. If I may have read at the desk a resolution explanatory of my views, I shall be glad then to hear from the Senator from Alabama, and if the treaty is in conformity with what I conceive to be the traditional policy of the United States and our proper obligation to China, I shall be glad to support it. May I have the following resolution read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution as requested.

The reading clerk read Senate Resolution 209, submitted by Mr. KING January 16, 1922, as follows:

Whereas it has been the traditional policy of the United States to refrain from interfering with the domestic policy and internal affairs of other nations, and from attempting to direct or to control the exercise of their sovereign national rights; and

Whereas China has for centuries been an independent nation, governing its territories and people, and promoting the peace of the State and the welfare of the people, according to Chinese customs and institutions; and

Whereas it is the sovereign right of every nation to determine its own domestic policy and to conduct its internal affairs, including the laying and collection of taxes, in its own way and according to the national will; and

Whereas at the Conference for the Limitation of Armament, now in session, certain powers, including the United States, have under consideration the adoption of a program which would control the Chinese finances and taxes, and would otherwise abridge the political and fiscal autonomy of China: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the traditional policy of the United States to refrain from interference with the internal affairs of other nations be adhered to, at this time, in all dealings and relations between the United States and China;

Resolved further, That the Senate hereby expresses its disapproval of any policy or program which seeks to abridge the political independence or to restrict the administrative or financial autonomy of China, or which seeks in any manner to limit Chinese national authority with regard to the enactment of such laws or measures as China may deem necessary to the national welfare, provided, of course, that such laws or measures be consistent with international law;

Resolved further, That any attempt to require China, by treaty or otherwise, to fix the tariff duties which she may be permitted to lay and collect upon imports, or to control the internal taxation of China, is in contravention of the settled policy of the United States, and an unwarranted interference with the independent powers and sovereign rights of the Chinese Government, and is in violation of international law, and that international comity which should exist between free and independent States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that I shall be glad to discuss this question in a moment very briefly and to answer any question that he may desire to ask. I would like to have the articles agreed to first and then discuss them as they stand. I ask unanimous consent that the second reading of the articles may be dispensed with, as they have all just been read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for their adoption down to the resolution of ratification.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the articles of the treaty.

The articles were agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty is as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there are no amendments to be proposed as in Committee of the Whole the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty is in the Senate and open to amendment. If there are no amendments to be proposed in the Senate, and without objection, the resolution of ratification will be read and considered.

The resolution of ratification was read, as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive Q, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, a treaty between the United States, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal relating to the Chinese customs tariff concluded at Washington February 6, 1922.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I realize that if there is a sovereign power that exists in a government which is necessary to the life of a government it is the power to raise revenue to support the government, because no government can exist without that power. I recognize fully that the right to control customs revenues in a government is a part of its sovereign power. So the question of the Senator from Utah as to whether the treaty invades the sovereign power of China is a pertinent one. On its face and without explanation I think it might be regarded that the treaty did invade that sovereign power, but we have to understand the history of this case to some extent in order to understand the necessity for the treaty.

Because nations possess sovereign powers, and sometimes sovereign powers that are vital to the life of the nation, it does not at all mean that they do not soemtimes yield a part of those sovereign powers and make concessions of their sovereign powers for their own good and the good of the world. We have done so in some of the treaties we have ratified within the last week. All nations do so. We have made a treaty yielding our sovereign right to control the waters of the St. Lawrence River in order to preserve Niagara. It is a matter of very small moment, and yet we have yielded our sovereign control over the waters of that river. There are many other instances where sovereignty is yielded.

Of course, I realize the power of taxation is a very vital part of sovereignty, but this situation has grown up. It is a condition where we are acting for the benefit of China. I think it was in 1853 that the so-called opium war took place. I shall not go into all the details, but during the progress of the war the American, British, and French consuls took possession of some of the ports of China and administered the customs revenues. There was great confusion in the administration of the customs revenues, and afterwards China yielded to Great Britain a concession that she would not charge on imports coming into the territory of China more than 5 per cent ad valorem. Two years later she made the same concession to the United States——

Mr. WILLIAMS. To France.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought it was the United States second and France third. The Senator from Mississippi may be right. At any rate, in two or three years concessions were made to the United States and France, and then to the other nations, including the eight nations which signed the pending treaty contract, and in addition to those were Spain and Sweden. Those treaties ran along for a number of years and were renewed from time to time until we came down to this question.

Before going into the treaties I wish to answer the question of the Senator from Utah. When the conference met on far eastern questions we found that there were 10 nations in the world with whom China had made treaty contracts surrendering that portion of her sovereignty, and by those contracts had agreed not to charge more than 5 per cent ad valorem or equivalent duties in specific rates against the goods of those countries crossing the Chinese border. That may seem very remarkable. I am not justifying those treaties. They happened long before our time. I wish the Senate to remember that such treaties have not only been made with China, but some years ago, and not so many years ago, under the McKinley tariff, this Government of ours made certain reciprocity treaties with other countries by which we agreed that we would only charge certain tariff rates against certain countries, and in fact under present laws we have made certain concessions in tariff rates, not probably as far as this tariff rate goes, but along the same line. So our own Government from time to time has made concessions to other governments limiting the amount of tariff duties which we would charge.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, can the Senator from Alabama see no distinction between the condition of China, though, and the condition of an independent and powerful country like the United States, which may make a reciprocal bargain with another country and for the reciprocal good of the two countries agree with the other upon tariff rates? Here is the case of a tariff being forced upon China from which China gets no compensating benefit, various countries simply uniting and compelling China to accept an utterly inadequate tariff.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that there is no difference in principle; but I see the point that the Senator makes. Of course, there is no difference between the United States making the concession of a lower tariff or lowering our tariff walls to a South American Republic, as we have done under reciprocal treaties, and the agreement which China makes in this instance. I understand what the Senator means is that he thinks China was forced into this agreement; but I want to assure him that that is far from being the fact. Not one syllable of this treaty was written until China first consented and asked that it be done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was framed on China's initiative, was it not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. I apologize for interrupting the Senator.

I take the Senator's word as to the attitude of the delegates representing the Peking Government, but the Senator certainly must know that there has been profound disappointment expressed by the Chinese people over this treaty; and that the Cantonese government and its representatives—call them revolutionary or not; I express no opinion in regard to that—have denounced this treaty as being hostile to the best interests of China and as having been imposed upon her by a group of nations which are seeking her economic, if not her political, destruction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not responsible for what "hot-air artists" may contend, either in China or elsewhere, I know that some of the leading men in the Cantonese government approve of this treaty. They may not have so announced publicly, but I know it otherwise.

More than that, I know that in every country there is an organization party which supports the government, and there is also an opposition party; and the opposition criticizes anything which the government does. I know that this treaty was not only made at the request of China—I know it because I prepared the treaty, and I spent four weeks in consultation about it—but I know that it met with the approval of the Chinese Government before it ever was reported to the plenary session of the conference.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Alabama may denominate the persons in China who are opposed to the Peking military régime as "hot-air artists"; he may make any criticism he pleases of them; but I venture to state to the Senator that he will discover that the mass of the Chinese people will resent this treaty, and he will find that instead of those persons in China who are opposed to this treaty being "hot-air artists" they constitute a formidable part of the Chinese people.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Senator is entirely wrong.

Mr. KING. Time will tell.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from Utah is entirely wrong, because he does not understand the facts. If the Senator really understood this issue, he would not be wrong about it; but he does not understand China's position.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the real situation. I do not believe the Senator from Utah is a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, but the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is, and therefore he will know what I shall say is correct. Before I come to this particular treaty, however, I wish for a moment to review the history of the matter. Under the original treaty with China, starting in 1853, and coming on down China had agreed to charge a duty of 5 per cent ad valorem on goods coming into China, or specific rates equal to that

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not less?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not more than 5 per cent. The treaties on that subject were renewed from time to time, but for convenience the 5 per cent ad valorem was converted into a specific duty in all instances. For instance, if a suit of clothes worth $10 was imported into China, a 5 per cent ad valorem rate would be 50 cents; but, instead of leaving the duty at 5 per cent ad valorem, to vary with the cost of the clothes, by treaty agreement the ad valorem rates were converted into specific rates, and it was provided that the duty on a suit of clothes should be not 5 per cent but 50 cents. Of course, I am speaking only figuratively, because that was not the actual rate of duty. As time went by the value of goods went up, so that instead of a suit of clothes being worth $10, say, it increased to $15. Then the duty charge of 50 cents did not represent a 5 per cent ad valorem basis, but much less—about 3⅓ per cent. China then asked of the nations that they carry out their treaty with her by making her 5 per cent duty effective; that is, to give her 5 per cent really on the true value of the goods. So the nations agreed to the request, and the rate was changed from time to time. No longer ago than the 26th day of May, 1921, the Senate of the United States ratified a treaty with China which attempted to make that 5 per cent rate effective. That treaty was reported by the Foreign Relations Committee and ratified by the Senate, as I have stated, on the 26th day of May, 1921, approved by the President on October 30, 1921, and finally proclaimed on the 7th day of November, 1921, a few days before the meeting of the Washington conference. That was the most recent attempt by the United States by treaty to make the 5 per cent ad valorem rate effective.

When China came to the conference she said that the 5 per cent duty which, not the conference, not myself, but which the Senate of the United States on the 26th of last May made for her, did not afford sufficient revenue to enable her to run her Government.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the fact that our present existing customs treaty with China was signed at Washington in October, 1920, having been negotiated by Bainbridge Colby and Mr. Wellington Koo, representing China. That treaty was not ratified and did not go into effect until the dates stated by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I wish to say that I very well recall when that treaty was before the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I should most certainly have opposed it and made the best fight I could against it had it not been for the fact that it did slightly better the condition of China.

Mr. LODGE. It certainly did.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I thought then and I said then and I think now that it is a perfect outrage for the great nations of the world, while pretending to recognize the independence of China, to dictate to her as to what her revenues shall be and what tariffs she shall levy.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator in principle entirely as to that, but we have to look at the other side of the picture. Suppose we should not ratify this treaty. In that event China will be bound hand and foot by the old treaty. The pending treaty gives her a very substantial increase in her revenues. If we defeat it, she must continue with the old duties. So far as it being American policy is concerned, I merely mention the fact that we have had customs treaties with China since 1853.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I really think, if the Senator from Alabama will permit me, that we commit a most egregious act of insincerity when in the first article of the treaty just ratified we say—

(1) The contracting powers, other than China, agree to respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China—

And then combine to impose this outrage upon her. I think that is hypocrisy ingrafted onto a treaty. I think if we were going to do that thing we ought to say that we propose to deprive China of that much of her independence and that much of her sovereignty and dictate to her a 5 per cent tariff. I can not view it as anything else than an outrage committed by powerful nations in combination, and it is all the more egregious when we take into account that China, as we all know, is suffering because her national Government can not raise even enough revenue to pay Japan $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 cash to buy the Shantung Railroad, and that railroad has got to remain part in the control of Japan on that account.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. My information as to the Shantung Railroad is that they could raise the cash, although not through the Government but by the people. They do not expect to raise it by the Government.

To come back to this treaty, if the Senator will examine on the record my statement, when I reported the treaty to the committee, on far eastern questions and my statement at the plenary session of the conference, he will note that I called attention there to this very thought and said I hoped the day was not far distant when complete autonomy could be given to China in the control of her tariff rates. I wish to say that, so far as I am concerned, I should be glad to have that done now, but China does not want it now; it would be most inconvenient to China to have it conceded now. I say, however, that it does not lie in the mouth of the Senate of the United States to criticize the work of a commissioner of the President in trying to raise the tariff duties which China could levy when within the year the Senate of the United States has ratified an independent treaty with China confining her tariff rates to 5 per cent effective.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I rise, Mr. President, to inquire of the Senator what nations there are which insist upon imposing these restrictions upon China? I assumed that the American delegates and the American public had every desire to free China from every restriction in relation to her revenues; I assumed that the American delegates did everything they could to attain that end.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is entirely right.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But they could not get everything they wanted for China by reason of the opposition of some other countries which wanted to keep her tied down. So I rose to inquire what other countries there are which want to keep China restricted. But now I learn from the Senator, if I understood him right, that in the judgment of the American delegates they continued to keep China tied down for her own good.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; not the American delegates. The Senator is wrong about that; but he is entirely right about the proposition in general. I represented the American delegation in writing this treaty, and I stated repeatedly what the Senator says.

I did not agree to one word in this treaty until China's representatives agreed to it first. More than that, I stated what Senators on this floor do not seem to be willing to concede, and that is that this is a sovereign right and it is in regard to a trade contract, and that China has the right this hour or this day, if she wants to, to denounce the existing contracts and this contract, and to renew her entire autonomy with reference to writing these tariff rates. I stated that on the floor of the far eastern committee without contradiction; so that when Senators are trying to make it appear here that this is in opposition to the interests of China they are overlooking entirely the fact that this is not one of those treaties that once made can not be revoked. We did it. We made certain concessions in the reciprocity treaties under the McKinley bill to certain Republics in South America and probably some others—I do not recall all, but certainly to the South American Republics—conceding them lower rates of tariff under certain conditions; and then, without rhyme or reason or asking consent, the Government of the United States passed the Dingley bill and revoked every one of those concessions without saying "By your leave" or anything else. It has been repeatedly done, and it can be done in this instance.

The Senator from Massachusetts was in his seat in the committee when I made that announcement in reference to this very matter, and it did not bring about a dispute. It was not denied, and, more than that, it was conceded by some of the ablest delegates there; so that all of this idea that some wrong is being done China by this treaty is a mere imagery. It does not exist. China wants to keep these treaties. She has the right to denounce them. That is a right recognized in international law. There are certain classes of treaties that can not be denounced. The Senate itself passed here, at the instance of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], a joint resolution denouncing a lot of trade contracts in reference to the shipping of this country, and the former President of the United States signed the joint resolution. There was nothing unusual in this. China can denounce these treaties if she wants to, but she does not want to. What China does want in this matter is to get more money, and I, representing the American delegation on that subcommittee, tried to arrange this treaty so as to conform as nearly to her desires as I could.

Of course, I met with some objections. One of the greatest difficulties that I had in arranging this treaty grew out of the fact that notwithstanding the fact that we had a favored-nation treaty with China, she had a number of years ago conceded to Russia first a reduction of duties of one-third for goods crossing the Russian border and then, when France demanded the same right in Indo-China, she made the same concession there, and England demanded it at Hongkong, and she made it there, with the result that although for years we had had a favored-nation-clause treaty with China, and so did some of the other countries, because these demands had been made upon her she had made the concession. I admit that when it was originally made it did not seriously affect us, because the class of goods coming in from Russia were not in competition with the class of goods coming from America, and the rate existing then was only about 3½ per cent, because the 5 per cent was not effective, and a third of it was only about 1 per cent; but if these rates of duty are going to be increased to 12½ per cent, then one-third would be $4 on the hundred, and it would have been a very serious discrimination against the United States if it had been maintained.

I do not care to discuss the difficulties with other countries, because that is not necessary and it is not a wise thing to do; but there were some grave difficulties in securing the concession in this treaty that lets our goods and the goods of all other nations go into China on the same basis, whether by land or by sea.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I will ask the Senator from Alabama if it is not true that in each instance which he has mentioned China yielded to force, and is she not yielding to force now?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; she is not. I can say that of my own knowledge. She did yield to force in the beginning about this, in all probability, but she is not yielding to force now, and I know it because I will tell the Senator from Georgia that at one time in these negotiations I thought they were about to fail, and I told the representative on the committee from China—I was chairman of the committee—that I was ready to report the matter back to the full committee and say that we could go no further, we would have to fail of action; and he earnestly urged me, on behalf of his Government, to do all I could to put this treaty through as we have it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. This treaty is better than those they had, and this was the best that you could get, and they knew it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To be sure; but there are other reasons why they want this treaty now, and I hope the Senator will not ask me to express them on the floor. There are other good reasons why China prefers to have this treaty now. She could denounce the treaty if she wanted to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I intend to vote for this treaty, and that is one of the two reasons why I propose to do so. The other reason is that both the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Massachusetts have expressed the same view of the principles involved in this matter that is held by all of us.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To be sure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KING. If I understand the Senator, the situation in brief is this: China was bound by half a dozen chains. This releases one chain, but still leaves her bound by five chains.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; it releases the whole situation as far as it goes. I will say to the Senator that the Chinese people are very slow ever to repudiate a contract or an obligation. They have the right to denounce a trade obligation. We have done it. Other nations have done it. China has the right to do it, but she is very slow to denounce any obligation that she has made. She much prefers to make a new obligation to carry out what is necessary for her conditions, and she preferred to enter into this new obligation, giving her greater revenue, improving the conditions of her tariff revenue, and not disturbing its present administration. That is the important thing to her right now—its present administration. Under its present administration all the revenues collected, even in the Provinces of Canton that are said to be in rebellion, go to Peking. The military mandarins in the Provinces do not get this revenue, as they take the internal revenue that comes out of the Provinces, that no longer goes to Peking and formerly went there. So the Government of China does not desire at this time to have this condition disturbed, although her representatives and delegates have repeatedly said that they hoped the day was not far distant when complete autonomy in the management of their own revenues might be in their hands, and in that statement I have repeatedly agreed with them. I agree with them now. They do not want it now.

Of course, as far as our Government is concerned, it is entirely within the power of our Government to ratify this treaty and allow China to get the increased revenue that she desires under it, and then, if we want to, to pass a separate resolution notifying China that we no longer hold her to this contract, and that she can charge our merchandise going into China as much as she pleases; but I do not think that would be the wise thing to do. We must be just to China, but we must also be just to ourselves. We have a very large trade in China, a developing trade; and if we want to be just to our own people, why should we say that we will tear down the wall and allow China—I do not think China would take advantage of it, if you want to ask my opinion about that; I think she would be fair—but why should we allow China to impose a limited rate on the imports coming from other countries into China and allow her to put an increased and a higher rate on the merchandise coming out of America? Is that what we want to do to protect American trade and American citizens and American rights? We have some rights in this matter; but I think the thing to do is to enter into this treaty that China wants us to ratify. It is the best that we can make.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, do I understand that we have ratified a treaty of this kind before?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Within the year—the Senator from North Carolina ratified it—one that gave her only 5 per cent effective, and I am trying to give her 12 per cent. Here it is. It is on my desk if the Senator wants to see it—a treaty setting out the specific rates on each article.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, of course it is fair to say that the reason why that treaty was ratified without any objection was that it took the place of a treaty that was worse. It gave China some relief.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, to be sure; the Senator is right about that; but this treaty does the same thing. It gives China this much more relief.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not want to be too critical of this particular item in the treaty, because I think there are some provisions in the treaty that are desirable; but I should like to ask the Senator, if he is at liberty to answer the question, what nation objected to relaxing that rule against China and giving China more latitude in fixing her tariff duties?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Objections were made. I hope the Senator will not ask me that question. Those objections were made not so much in open session as they were in private conversation, because a representative at a session could merely say, "I refuse assent," and those who were dealing with him had to work it out. I think it is far better for international intercourse to assume that the objections were made, and not to attempt to place the responsibility here. I think it is better for our country, it is better for China, and I hope the Senator will not push the inquiry.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not any desire to pry into any objectionable matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Objections were made; but I want to say that the objections that were made were not to giving China entire autonomy in the control of her tariff, because she never asked it. Her delegates said they hoped it would be granted at some other date, and they would ask it, but in this convention they have never asked it, and we recognized that at this time it was not desirable for them to get it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator permit me to put another question, in this form? Did the delegates in negotiating this treaty have before them the figures showing the average tariffs levied by the countries of the world?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, yes; all that was referred to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What reason was there for compelling China to adopt a tariff lower than the other countries?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I said, this was practically what China asked at this time. Of course, when you come to change tariff rates you very seriously affect commerce. The commerce of some of these countries in that section of the world was very much tied up in the Chinese trade. They said that if these rates were unduly increased suddenly it would produce a reaction on their home Governments, because, in hard and difficult times like this, it would likely destroy business enterprise in their countries, and that radical, sudden changes should not be made at this time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that was a very reasonable objection; but why, then, was it not proposed to create a commission composed of representatives of these interested powers, so that the tariff might be changed from time to time, in the contingencies, and it would have an elastic character?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is a commission provided for in this treaty, except that there is a limit on the rate. The rate is still limited, but the commission has been created. It will not be a very difficult proposition in the future. If China says she needs more tariff rates, this raises the limit, so to speak, and authorizes a commission to operate. The commission is provided for in this treaty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. However, the commission is given no power to increase the maximum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not to go in the first instance above 7½ per cent, and when the McKaye class of treaties is agreed to, not to go above 12½ per cent; but to that extent the commission can operate, and that has not been done before. This is a very much more liberal proposition, both in rate and in power, than the treaty which was ratified by the Senate last May; and, more than that, this treaty leads; it is on the way to complete autonomy for China in the control of their tariff rates, whereas the treaty which was ratified last spring by the Senate had nothing of that kind in it.

I want to say to the Senate that I would be glad, so far as I am concerned, to give China complete autonomy to-morrow in the control of her tariff rates. I want to see China as independent and as sovereign a nation as possible. I want to say to my colleagues here that I did my utmost to aid China in accomplishing what she wanted in reference to the tariff, and if this treaty were defeated it would not help China. It would throw her back on the treaty which was ratified last May, holding her down to 5 per cent effective, giving her no commission, and at the same time you would leave the discrimination on the Russian and the Indo-China border against the merchandise of your own country.

Mr. OVERMAN. What, if anything, have we to do with collecting the revenue?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The collection of China's revenue is primarily under the control of the Chinese Government, but under an understanding which China arrived at a long time ago a British subject is the head of that revenue system. I can not recall the exact figures now, but the larger proportion, probably three-fourths, of the employees in the Chinese customs system are Chinese. Of the balance of the employees the larger percentage are British, although there are some Americans, some Japanese, and some French. But it is conceded by all—China, Japan, France, everybody—that the administration of the Chinese customs laws has been admirable. It has been honest, it has been fair, it has been efficient, and there is no complaint against the administration. The disturbed conditions of China to-day afford one reason why China wants this treaty ratified instead of insisting on complete autonomy in the control of her tariff system at this time. That is the real situation.

If there are any further questions about the matter, I will be glad to answer them.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think I understand the treaty, but I want to be sure that I do understand it. I have had some little doubts about this treaty. If I understand the Senator's statement this is about the situation: China has treaties with a number of nations fixing the tariff duties to be imposed upon the exports to those foreign countries. Those rates vary; they are not uniform. One of the objects of this treaty, probably the chief object, as I understand the Senator, is to make those rates uniform as between all the nations signatory to this compact.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; that is one of the objects. It is the one most vital to us.

Mr. SIMMONS. The second object is to supersede those treaties which allow a much lower rate than China finds it necessary to impose in order to meet her present obligations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator means under the old treaties?

Mr. SIMMONS. Under the old treaties.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; and this increases her rates of duty so that she will get considerably more revenue.

Mr. SIMMONS. Again, I understand the Senator to say that under the present arrangement a British subject is at the head of the customs system.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He is not directly at the head, but he is the next man to the head, and he really runs the system.

Mr. SIMMONS. And that China, for reasons which need not be stated here, is satisfied with that condition and wishes to have it continue.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because of the disturbed conditions at home.

Mr. SIMMONS. Those are the three reasons why the Senator thinks this treaty should be ratified?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They are.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I listened with interest to the statement made by the Senator from Alabama and his defense of the pending treaty. At the outset of his remarks he conceded intellectual integrity to me in opposing the treaty, but assumed that my opposition to it resulted from my ignorance of the facts. I willingly pay tribute to the Senator because of his great knowledge upon tariff matters as well as upon public questions generally, but I beg to assure him that I have given some attention to the questions involved in this treaty, and he has submitted nothing that has added to the information which I already possess.

I think the statement made a moment ago by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], that this treaty is an "outrage," appropriately describes it. China came to the Washington conference seeking justice and hoping to be freed from oppressive chains which had been fastened upon her by a number of nations. The pacific character of the Chinese people led them to submit to unjust exactions which were made by European and other powers and subjected them to indignities against which every self-respecting people should protest. No one can justify the actions of Great Britain, France, and other nations in their infringements upon the territorial integrity and sovereignty of China and in subjecting her to economic, if not, in a measure, to political bondage. Sitting at the peace table were nations protesting their sincere friendship for China and avowing their purpose to respect her territorial integrity and her political independence and to treat her as an independent and sovereign nation. This treaty is not in consonance with the solemn protestations made. It is an infringement upon the rights of China and is violative of her sovereign authority. It is not sufficient answer to say that wrongs have been perpetrated and chains have been forged and therefore they shall be continued with but one of the chains removed. And yet, as I understand the position of the Senator from Alabama, he defends this treaty because it relieves China to a slight extent from burdens which have been placed upon her by the United States and other nations. He recites what all Senators knew—the fact that various treaties were imposed upon China, most of them by European nations, which denied to her fiscal autonomy or the sovereign right to determine the tariff duties which she would lay upon imports.

No nation is sovereign, in all that that term implies, if it may not establish its own system of taxation and determine the manner in which it will treat imports. And it is no reply to this statement to say that the United States has at various times negotiated reciprocity treaties with various nations. It is the assertion of a sovereign power if a nation contracts with another nation for the exchange of commodities on a certain basis. Certainly the sovereign powers of the United States were not infringed when it authorized the President of the United States to admit free of duty, or with a reduction in the tariff rates, of certain commodities from other nations, conditioned upon such other nations permitting similar or other commodities produced in the United States to be introduced into their territory under similar conditions.

The only justification urged by the Senator for this treaty is that it is somewhat better than existing treaties. In the past, while China was helpless and was terrorized by powerful nations she yielded to their demands and permitted them to fix tariff rates. Not only that, but she was forced to submit to control, more or less effective, by representatives of a foreign nation. The treaties which created this situation were an infringement upon the sovereignty of China. They can not be defended in international law or upon those principles of comity which should govern the relation between free and independent States.

When I read in the press, during the course of the conference, that it was proposed to formulate a treaty which would fix tariff duties China would be permitted to lay and collect upon imports, I felt that the conference was not respecting the sovereignty of China and was proposing a plan which was in contravention of the settled policy of the United States. Accordingly, on the 16th of January of this year I offered in the Senate the resolution which has just been read to the Senate. I hoped that the resolution might have some effect upon the conference and deter the delegates from adopting a policy which would abridge the political independence or restrict the administrative or fiscal autonomy of China, or which would in any manner limit China's national authority with regard to the enactment of such laws or measures as she regarded necessary for her national welfare.

It seemed to me that the United States had an opportunity at the conference to exhibit in no uncertain manner its friendship for China and her people. It was known that China was torn with internal dissentions, and it was believed by many that those who represented her at the conference did not entirely represent the views of the Chinese people. Whether that be true or not, it was an opportunity for our Government to give renewed assurances of its profound interest in the welfare of the Chinese people.

In view of the altruistic professions toward China of the nations participating in the conference, every act, in so far as it affected China, should have been in consonance with such professions. In my opinion, the nations who had imposed unfair tariff measures upon China should have promptly proclaimed the abrogation of all treaties respecting the same. They should have announced to China her entire freedom to determine her own domestic affairs and to execute such national policies as she deemed for her best interest. All the treaties fixing tariff duties should have been denounced and the Chinese Government left to pursue such course as her people desired to be followed.

The Senator has referred to the high sense of honor which the Chinese people have and their respect for treaties. That very fact should have prompted our Nation, as well as the other nations at the conference, to have released China from all binding and oppressive treaties—treaties which interfered with her sovereignty and were against her honor and dignity. The Senator, as I understood his position, contended that a course of this character would have led to administrative chaos, or at least would have resulted in some immediate disadvantage to China. Doubtless the Peking Government was anxious to have some control, as she now has, of the administration of her tariff laws and regulations. It seems to me, however, that if the treaties now existing were abrogated, the Peking Government could have, by proper law or decree, perpetuated the present rates imposed upon imports and continued to utilize existing administrative machinery. However, conceding what the Senator says to be true, the treaty negotiated should have gone no further than to fix tariff rates for a limited period until China provided an administrative system and fixed such other tariff duties as met the national will.

Those representing China at the Washington conference, as everybody knows, were under more or less restraint. They did not feel that they could break with the past or ignore existing conditions and international obligations, no matter how those obligations were incurred.

The Senator doubtless possesses many sources of information as to the wishes of the Chinese people, but I venture to declare that this treaty will not meet with the approval of the great mass of the inhabitants of China. Senators are familiar with the attitude of the southern Provinces of China. Representatives of those Provinces have denounced this treaty and have felt that it was an infringement upon the sovereign rights of the Chinese Nation. I believe that there will be a growing feeling of resentment upon the part of the Chinese people toward this treaty and that it will not be long before it will be denounced by a responsible Chinese Government.

Mr. President, I have been desirous of supporting this treaty as well as all treaties formulated at the Washington conference, but I can not bring my conscience to support it. Conceding that it is an improvement over existing treaties, I believe that it is unwise for the United States to join with other nations in imposing upon China this treaty which has no limit as to time and which so clearly is an unwarranted interference with the independent powers and sovereign rights of the Chinese Government and of that international comity which should exist between free and independent States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. It will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution of ratification, as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive Q, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, a treaty between the United States, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal relating to the Chinese customs tariff concluded at Washington February 6, 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll will be called on agreeing to the resolution of ratification.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. BRANDEGEE's name was called). The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I understand that if present he would vote as I am about to vote, and I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. ERNST (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], who is unavoidably absent. I am advised that he would vote as I am about to on this question, and therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I am informed that on this question he would vote as I shall vote, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DIAL (when Mr. SMITH's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on business of the Senate. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If that Senator were present he would vote as I shall vote, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. He is absent, but I understand he would vote as I expect to vote on this measure, and therefore I am free to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when the name of Mr. WATSON of Indiana was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WATSON of Indiana] is absent on account of illness. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Reiterating the statement made when I last voted, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. DU PONT] is absent on account of illness. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer the general pair which I have with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] and vote "yea."

Mr. CARAWAY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I am about to vote, and therefore I shall vote. I vote "yea."

I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] is absent on official business, and if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. BROUSSARD. My colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] is absent on official business. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is unavoidably absent and asked me to announce for him that if he were present he would vote for this treaty.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably absent. Were he present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] are necessarily absent. If present, these Senators would all vote "yea."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are absent on business of the Senate, and if present they would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are absent on business of the Senate. If present, these Senators would vote "yea."

The roll call resulted—yeas 58, nays 1, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this question the yeas are 58, the nays 1. Two-thirds of the Senators present and voting having voted in the affirmative, the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate return to legislative session in order to dispose of the conference report on the Department of the Interior appropriation bill. When that is disposed of, it is my intention, if I am present, or it may be done by the Senator in charge of the conference report, to move to adjourn until Monday at 12 o'clock, after having a secret executive session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to return to legislative session.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the Senate shall resume the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation conference report.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, on yesterday I stated that I should refuse to give unanimous consent to the consideration of the report until I had an opportunity to examine it. Therefore it went over until to-day. I find on page 54 of the bill an item numbered 52. This was an amendment to the bill which was presented by the Senate committee. As I understand it, the amendment was introduced at the suggestion or request of the Department of the Interior. I have letters in my possession from the Interior Department approving the amendment.

The amendment was suggested by the Interior Department to enable that department to carry out a compromise of a dispute with regard to the Newlands project that had been threatening litigation for several years. It seems that in the Newlands irrigation project, as in many other projects in the West, the engineering department originally made a great many errors with regard to the amount of land in some cases that was irrigable under the project, and in other cases with regard to the amount of water that could be supplied to the land under the project.

In the Newlands project there were mistakes made. According to a letter by Mr. Newell, dated December 5, 1916, which I shall place in the RECORD later on, he estimated that the Newlands project could irrigate 375,000 acres of land.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. There was so much disturbance in the Chamber at the time the Senator from Nevada started to speak that I did not hear what he said. Will he kindly give me the number of the amendment to which he is addressing himself?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is amendment No. 52, found on page 54 of the bill.

Later on, however, and about the time that water was about to be furnished under the project, the engineers determined that there was sufficient water to irrigate 187,000 acres, and on that basis they estimated the cost per acre for the construction of the project.

Under the reclamation act the total cost of construction is divided among the total acres of irrigable land within the project. Then the payments originally were divided over a period of 10 years, but since extended. In addition to the construction charges, there are charges known as operating charges and maintenance charges. These are charges for operating the project during the irrigation season and otherwise, and for maintaining the ditches, dams, and diversions. According to the plan of the irrigation department, under the law, those costs were to be divided among the total number of irrigable acres of land; in other words, the cost of operation and maintenance was to be divided among 187,000 acres of land. As a matter of fact, there have only been 70,000 acres of land made available for irrigation under the Newlands project.

What was the result? The result was that the amount which was fixed at the time homesteaders entered on this project of $2.20 an acre for construction charges and 40 cents an acre for operation and maintenance charges was not enough to pay for the operation and maintenance, because there were only 70,000 acres paying the charges instead of 187,000 acres.

Then what was done? A deficit was carried every year until that deficit reached the sum of $191,000. The department has been trying to make the homesteaders who took up the 70,000 acres of land pay this deficit, because there is no one else to pay, although the Government contracted with the entrymen on the 70,000 acres that they were only to pay their proportionate part of the cost of operation and maintenance on 187,000 acres of land.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator from Nevada again indicate to what item of the bill he is calling attention?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir. I am discussing amendment numbered 52, on page 54.

Along in 1906, when this project was just about finished and water was ready to be distributed, in accordance with the law, the Department of the Interior issued a circular fixing the charges for construction, operation, and maintenance at $2.60 an acre per year. Now they are insisting that the men who went there under that contract shall pay nearly twice as much, solely by reason of the fact that the departments themselves made mistakes.

The directors of the irrigation district have authorized their attorneys to institute injunction proceedings against the collection of any part of this deficit, amounting to $191,000, and the department is afraid the injunction will be granted. I wish to say that the question involved here does not affect only this one irrigation district, but similar conditions exist in practically every irrigation district in the United States. The settlement that has been reached between the Interior Department and the representatives of the irrigation district is now up for ratification by a vote of the district, and unless amendment numbered 52 is kept in the pending bill then the whole proposition may fall, because the provisions contained in the amendment were part of the compromise agreement between the Interior Department and the irrigation district.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator from Nevada yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Do I understand that the Senator from Nevada is in favor of the amendment which was added by the Senate to the bill as it came from the other House?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McNARY. It has been agreed to, has it not, by the conferees on the bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. No. Unfortunately, the conferees on the part of the Senate have receded from their insistence upon the amendment, and that recession means the defeat of the compromise which has been reached between the Government and the district after a controversy which has existed for five years.

Let me tell the Senate why. I hold in my hand the preliminary proposal of settlement, which I will read. This is signed by Mr. Morris Bien, on behalf of the Reclamation Service. It reads:

PROPOSED ADJUSTMENT OF NEWLANDS PROJECT—OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE DEFICIT.

The operation and maintenance deficit since the passage of the reclamation extension act is about $55,000, and we see no legal basis for recommending any relief from payment of this sum and recommend the payment to be made in equal annual installments over a period of 10 years.

In regard to the operation and maintenance deficit prior to the extension act, amounting to about $135,000, we are willing to recommend that the same be charged against the entire area of the project, 187,000 acres, the district lands being charged with about one-third of $135,000, amounting to $45,000, the same to be payable by continued installments after the 20-year period until fully paid.

MORRIS BIEN.

That was the first proposal of settlement by the Government and was made during February last. That was not accepted by the representatives of the irrigation district, but it was the basis of the settlement which was reached. That settlement rejected the amount of $55,000 and accepted the amount of $45,000 out of the $135,000.

But that was not all of the settlement finally agreed upon. The district had just adopted resolutions providing for the drainage of the whole project. That drainage was to cost about $700,000.

In the middle of that project are 4,887 acres which are occupied by the Paiute Indians, being in the nature of a reservation under an Indian agent. There is no way by which the district can compel those Indian lands to pay their proportionate part of the cost of drainage. The Department of the Interior, however, recognized the fact that the drainage system was just as much of a benefit to the Indians as it was to the settlers on the project, and therefore the department proposed the amendment which I will in a moment read. Mind you, Mr. President, a part of the proposition was that the Indians should pay, or rather the Government should pay on their behalf, their proportionate share of the drainage cost, and unless the Indians shall pay their proportionate part of the drainage cost, amounting to $49,603.05, the whole settlement which it has taken five years to arrive at may fall through if this proposition fails, because it will throw a burden of $49,603.05 on the settlers which they should not be called upon to pay. I shall now read the amendment, which is as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, by agreement or otherwise, to bring 4,887 acres of Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the provisions and benefits of a drainage district, organized pursuant to the laws of said State, for the purpose of draining the lands within the Newlands irrigation project; and there is hereby appropriated the sum of $2,500 for the purpose of paying the first installment assessable against said Indian lands: Provided, That the total amount of the charges assessed against said Indian lands shall not exceed $49,603.05, and shall be payable in 20 annual installments: Provided further, That the Indian lands so drained by said district shall not be amenable to any lien which is subject to foreclosure created by the laws of said State for failure to pay charges when due: And provided further, That the money herein appropriated shall be reimbursed in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

Mr. President, I now desire to read a letter with regard to this very amendment addressed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs by Mr. Morris Bien, Acting Director of the United States Reclamation Service. The letter is dated December 3, 1920, and reads:

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

MY DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: There is inclosed copy of a resolution of the board of directors of the Truckee-Carson irrigation district, Newlands project, Nevada, relative to the amount of benefits they think should be apportioned to the Indian lands adjacent to and outside the boundaries of the district.

As I understand the proposition, 4,077 acres of these lands have a water right and 840 acres of public domain were added by departmental order of November 21, 1917, of which 810 are irrigable, making a total of 4,887 acres irrigable area, and that all these lands are allotted to Paiute Indians. We feel—

This is the Acting Director of the Reclamation Service speaking—

We feel that the Indian lands should pay on the basis of benefits received, the same as lands within the irrigation district, and if you agree with this view, I suggest that you attempt to have an item included in the Indian appropriation bill for the next fiscal year sufficient to pay this charge based on an area of 4,887 acres at $10.15 per acre, which is believed to be a proper charge, and amounts to $49,603.05; and we believe that if an appropriation is asked it should be requested in lump sum instead of in partial payments extending over a period of 20 years. I suggest, therefore, an item in the Indian appropriation bill in the following or in similar language:

"For cooperation by the United States Reclamation Service in providing a drainage system for certain lands allotted to Paiute Indians within the Newlands reclamation project, Nevada, the sum of $49,603.05, to be transferred to the reclamation fund."

Very truly yours,

MORRIS BIEN, Acting Director.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield I should like to inquire what is the date of that letter?

Mr. PITTMAN. The letter was addressed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs by the Assistant Director of the Reclamation Service on December 3, 1920. That was the view of the Reclamation Service at the time this question arose. I have commenced at the beginning. At that time there were bills pending having to do with the question, and since that time it has been a matter of constant consideration by the Department of the Interior, which in February, when this whole matter of the Newlands project came up for settlement, took into consideration this very item. I now read a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 9, 1922.

Hon. H. P. SNYDER,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SNYDER: Further reference is made to your letter of February 3, 1922, inclosing for report a copy of H. R. 10211, providing for the inclusion of certain Paiute Indian lands in a drainage district in Nevada and for the payment of the proportionate cost of draining such land.

A recent report has been received from the field based on an investigation made by the assistant engineer of the Indian irrigation service which shows that practically all lands of the Newlands irrigation project, except the Indian lands, are included in a drainage district created under the State laws of Nevada, for the purpose of draining the lands under the Newlands project. The Paiute Indian lands, for which water rights have been acquired under this project, consist of approximately 4,047 acres. Of this area approximately 1,200 acres are now waterlogged and are unfit for cultivation, which condition indicates the necessity of drainage for these lands. The drainage district has not included the Indian lands in the project because of the fact that it would require specific action from Congress authorizing their inclusion.

It is my understanding that the proposed drainage project is estimated to cost $700,000. Dividing the acreage, including the Indian lands, into this cost will place the per acre assessment at $10.15.

The records show that the charge for acquiring water rights for the Paiute Indian lands was $97,848, and that $47,293.20 has been expended on account of maintenance and operation. The construction cost on a per acre basis is about $20 and the annual operation and maintenance assessment for a 10-year period about $1 per acre. Both these charges, as compared with similar charges on other projects, are quite reasonable. In view of these facts, the Indian lands can readily stand an additional charge of $10.15 per acre for drainage purposes.

In view of this situation and of the fact that the Indian lands will of necessity have to be drained, the only reasonable deduction is that provision should be made to include them within the State drainage district and make provision for the payment of their proportionate part of the expense entailed.

The bill as introduced provides for the drainage of 4,887 acres. This area is in excess of the actual amount for which water rights have been acquired. The irrigable area of Indian lands, as above set forth, is 4,047 acres. This reduction of the area naturally reduces the total proportionate share of the cost of the drainage. The total amount for this work appearing in line 5 should be, therefore, changed to $41,077.05, and the annual installment should be reduced to $2,100 instead of $2,500 as appears in line 6. The area appearing at the end of line 8 should also be changed to 4,047 acres instead of 4,887. With these changes I shall be pleased to see the bill enacted into law, providing it meets with the approval of your committee and the Congress.

Sincerely,

E. C. FINNEY, Acting Secretary.

As I have said before, this dispute between the homesteaders in this district and the Government has been going on for several years. I have stated the cause of it. To go further in the matter, I am going to ask leave to place in the RECORD the resolutions passed by the board of directors of the irrigation district touching this matter, as they explain it further.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The president [of irrigation district] then stated that there were 5,480 acres of land allotted to Indians, lying a short distance outside of the boundaries of the district and that a great portion of said land would receive a material benefit from the construction of the proposed drainage system, pursuant to the proposed contract with the United States Government, and that it would be advisable for the board to advise the Secretary of the Interior of the amount of benefits that said Indian land would receive from the construction of the proposed general drainage system.

After a discussion of the amount of benefits that the Indian land would receive from the construction of the drainage system, it was moved by Mr. Vencill and seconded by Mr. Holmes that the following resolution be adopted and a copy forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior:

"That whereas all of the following described lands: All of sections 9, 10, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, and 22, and the SE. ¼ of section 8, and the SE. ¼ of section 3, and the NW. ¼ NW. ¼ of section 23, all in township 19 N. range 30 E., containing 5,480 acres of land, are situate in close proximity to the boundaries of this irrigation district, and that all of said lands will receive a direct and an indirect benefit from the construction of a general drainage system as voted upon by the electors of this district at a special election held in the district on April 6, 1920, pursuant to the proposed contract for such construction by the United States Government; and

"Whereas the board of directors of this district have examined the above-described lands for the purpose of determining what benefits said lands will receive from the construction of such drainage system and for the purpose of advising the Department of the Interior, in order that the necessary steps may be taken to secure an appropriation for the payment of the proportion of benefits that will accrue to said lands upon the proposed contract for the construction of a general drainage system by the United States Government: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That it is the opinion and judgment of this board of directors that the said lands will be benefited at the rate of $9.05 per acre, and that the total benefits that should be apportioned to said lands in the judgment of this board is the sum of $49,594; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior at Washington, D. C., in order that he may take such steps as are advisable to secure the payment of the sum of $49,594 to the United States Government in the same manner and at the times as provided in that certain proposed contract to be entered into with the United States Government for the construction of a general drainage system in this district."

The resolution was carried by a unanimous vote.

Mr. PITTMAN. The situation is simply this: The Department of the Interior recognized the fact that they had no right to charge this deficit of $182,000 to the homesteaders on about one-third of the land in the project. They recognized that; and in the proposal I have just read, which was made in February, they agreed to charge only one-third of that, or approximately one-third, to the district, collecting the other two-thirds from new entrymen on the project as they come on later, in the form of a construction charge. As to the $55,000 of deferred maintenance and operation charges, they first sought to charge them the whole $55,000, but they have now reduced that down to about $30,000; but in addition to that they agreed at that time that the department would undertake, mind you, to get authority from Congress to pay this $49,603.05 on behalf of the Indians to the irrigation district for this drainage of the Indian lands.

Unless this amendment becomes law there is no authority to make this payment on behalf of the Indian lands; and if the payment is not made on behalf of the Indian lands, then it must be charged to the settlers on the 70,000 acres of land, and that was not the agreement. The whole proposition falls. The Department of the Interior is just as anxious to get this question settled as are the entrymen on that land. There has been a threat of litigation for several years.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, of course I do not want to take the Senator's time——

Mr. PITTMAN. That is all right; I am trying to be clear on the matter.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is very clear about it, and the conferees have done the best they could; but these are the circumstances:

In the first place, the matter was not submitted, I think, by the Indian Affairs Bureau. It was not estimated for. As I remember it, on the floor the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations consented to let it go in and go to conference, hoping that it might be taken care of. The committee has done its very best to care for it; but, as the Senator knows, it is legislation, and it is appropriating for something that has not yet been legislated for. The consequence is that we could not maintain it when it came to the final pull. I shall be glad to cooperate with the Senator in any way that will bring about what he wants, but probably it will have to be done in some separate legislation under the rules of both House and Senate. We can not take care of it in the present measure. It has already been agreed upon in conference, and the Senate was compelled to recede.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have just read the preliminary proposition; and I will have here by Monday the proof that this item was included in the settlement, and that it has met with the approval of the Department of the Interior and the Reclamation Service.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator is basing his ideas of appropriation on anything that the Interior Department or the Reclamation Service may ask for, I will say that if that were the criterion we would appropriate a great deal more than we do. I am very glad to have their approval of these matters, and I was very glad to undertake to do what I could with this matter; but I think it is entirely idle to attempt now to force it through on an appropriation bill, certainly on the measure that is now before us.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, it is true that this is an appropriation bill, and usually these matters have come before the Indian Affairs Committee, where they used to make these appropriations; but the new system we have now, which has practically destroyed all except one appropriations committee, is so confusing, so obstructive of any intelligent consideration of a proposition by anybody except the Committee on Appropriations, that it is very difficult to tell what is going on until the matter is thrown right here on the floor of the Senate. The poor old Indian Affairs Committee is just as dead as all the rest of these committees are. I do not even know exactly where the room is that they occupy.

Mr. WARREN. I may say to the Senator that the present chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee and the ex-chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee and others had this bill under consideration and acted upon it, so that what the Senator wishes to throw on the change in the Appropriations Committee falls to the ground.

Mr. PITTMAN. Perhaps it does. I have already apologized for my criticism by saying that I can not understand it yet, but I believe my criticism is fair.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon an interruption——

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. While the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is diligent in the performance of his duties, it may be remarked that there is not an Indian to be taken care of in his State, and the same condition exists in the House. The chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs is Mr. SNYDER, of the State of New York. There are some Mohawks up there, I believe.

The chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee of the Senate is from the State of Missouri, and has no Indians at all in his State. So I am not sure that the Senator from Nevada ought to object to taking the consideration of that matter away from the Indian Affairs Committee and giving it to the care of the Senator from Wyoming, who has some immediate concern in the future of the Indians.

Mr. WARREN. I may say to the Senator from Montana that the ex-chairman of the Senate Indian Affairs Committee, who was one of the members of this conference committee, and who has sat not only through the consideration of the bill but in conference, is the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]; and there is probably no man living, outside of those living entirely with the Indians, who knows more about Indian bills that have been taken care of heretofore in the Senate than does the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. OVERMAN. And, Mr. President, Mr. CARTER, a Member of the House, who was on this conference committee, was chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee over there, as I understand.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. CARTER is another member of the conference committee. Men could hardly be selected to serve on a conference committee who knew more about it than those that were selected.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to subscribe to everything the Senator has said in commendation of the ability and the sympathy of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with all Indian problems. I was referring to the fact that we must trust now to the representative of the Indian Affairs Committee upon the general Committee on Appropriations, the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee, who has not any Indians in his State at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no doubt that the Senator from Kansas would support every proposition of benefit to the Indians, as he always has; and if this matter had been brought before the Indian Affairs Committee and there discussed, and he had become familiar with it, I have no doubt that he would have supported it more actively in conference. When, however, we used to do business for Indians through the Indian Affairs Committee, instead of through men from New York and Missouri, there were quite a number of men on the Indian Affairs Committee who were from States where they have Indians. In fact, I think two-thirds of the members of the Indian Affairs Committee were from States where they look after Indians. I do not know exactly how many members of the Appropriations Committee are from States where they look after Indians, but I venture to say that not one-fifth of them are from States that have any material work to do with Indians.

This amendment was put in the bill in the committee, and, not being a member of the Appropriations Committee, I do not know exactly who put it in the bill. I do not know whether the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] put it in or not, but it was in the bill when it came to the Senate, and it takes care of the agreement made by the Department of the Interior with this irrigation district. I assume that an amendment of that kind was not put in the bill unless it was considered by the committee that put it in. The amendment was unanimously adopted by the Senate.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. ODDIE. I wish to say that I offered this amendment on the floor of the Senate on January 11. It was included in this bill as it passed the Senate. I am in complete accord with the views expressed by my colleague on this matter, and I hope the Senate will insist on this amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course the Senator from Wyoming does not desire his bill held up on this matter. That is perfectly natural. I know well enough that if the Senate Committee on Appropriations had been the only committee that had to do with this matter this amendment would have stayed there, because they put it there; but when our Senate Committee on Appropriations, which has a few western men on it, has to go over and agree with an Appropriation Committee of the House, consisting of 33 members, only 2 of whom are from arid land States, and then we have to recede because it is a matter that affects only one little section of one State, we are dropping into a policy that eventually is going to affect practically all of these reclamation projects and Indian lands out in the West. It is going further than that. When we get the agricultural appropriation bill before conferees consisting of members of the Appropriations Committee of the House, we are going to find the same arbitrary disposition manifested on the part of the conferees there. They will not care for any little appropriation attempting to protect cotton from the boll weevil in the South, because four-fifths of the members of the Appropriations Committee of the House do not know anything about that subject. They will not care anything about protecting against hog cholera, because they do not have much hog cholera in New York City. They will not be at all interested in the destruction of predatory animals throughout the West, or the destruction of coyotes that are running rabid through the State of Washington now by the thousands. That is away out in the State of Washington. It is too far away for consideration by conferees who live in the State of New York and the other Eastern States. That is what we are drifting to, and we might as well recognize it. We should repeal the new rule that turns over all appropriations to one committee.

I know that the Senator from Wyoming is doing the best he can, and it is our duty to help him. I do not see any way in which we are ever going to help him in this matter except by standing by the amendments of the Senate and letting him go back over there and say: "Now, here, if we are going to have legislation you will have to be a little more reasonable in the matter, and you can not expect us to recede from everything that is done over there." We might just as well have an issue in regard to it now as later. If this body is to be informed, every time we have to recede, that it is by reason of the arbitrary rules of the House, it seems to me it is time for us to say that such rules of the House will have to be amended or we must stop trying to do business with them.

We have heard, time and time again, that the reason our conferees have such great difficulty in agreeing with the conferees of the House is that under their rules the conferees can not agree.

This amendment is not a small matter. It is a matter of great importance. There is no doubt about that. It is a matter which affects one of the greatest irrigation districts in this country, which was one of the first established. It is named after the late Senator Newlands, who was the real father of the irrigation law, the man who fought for it for 10 years in the House of Representatives, who fought for it under the most bitter criticism, and frequently under bitter ridicule. The men who have gone on that project have been mistreated from the very day they entered, and the Government now recognizes that fact. The Reclamation Service has been attempting for several years to force these men to pay $182,000, which they now admit they do not owe. The service proposes to accept about half that amount.

A written proposition from the Secretary of the Interior has gone to the directors of that irrigation district, agreeing to accept half of that amount, and agreeing also to have the Indians of that district pay their proportionate part of the cost of the drainage of that district, and this amendment was put in for the purpose of enabling them to carry out this settlement they have had with that district. The proposition is about to be submitted to a vote of the district in accordance with the laws of the State of Nevada, and then, after all that trouble is gone to, after this litigation has lasted several years, after the people in that district have prepared to call their election, for the Congress of the United States to refuse to make an initial appropriation of $2,500 to allow them to carry out their agreement with the entrymen of that district is too unreasonable to require much further argument.

The whole thing about the matter is simply this, the conferees on behalf of the House know nothing on earth about irrigation or about Indians, and they do not care anything about them. They have simply dismissed it from their minds by saying, "We will not agree to it. It is an amendment from the Senate."

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator to say that I think the RECORD will show that this amendment was offered on the floor by the Senator's colleague [Mr. ODDIE], although, of course, I may be mistaken. I think it will show that I stated at the time that it was legislation, but that it could go in by unanimous consent, and we would try to protect it. If I erred at all, I erred in letting it go in, because I knew it was legislation; but I erred because of my wish to do what the Senator wants—to have this legislation passed. We have faithfully performed our duty, and we have been compelled to recede. It seems to me that the better plan for the Senator is to pursue the course which has already been started, with a special bill. We can make the appropriation, even in a deficiency bill, if we can get it through in season, and thus accomplish what the Senator wants.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. ODDIE] offered his bill before this bill came out of the committee. The committee had my colleague's bill before it at the time they considered this appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. It was against the rule to put it in.

Mr. PITTMAN. This amendment is not in the exact words of my colleague's bill. The committee must have considered it, because it is not in the exact words of that bill. The amendment was not put in on the floor of the Senate. It was put in by the committee and was passed by the Senate without comment. It is not subject to objection.

Mr. WARREN. I have said to the Senator that it was offered on the floor and accepted without any consideration whatever by any member of the committee, except that the chairman was willing to let it go in for further consideration. This is my remembrance of it. However, the action was taken a long time ago.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know what the RECORD shows about it, one way or the other, but I do know that the amendment was the one authorized by the Department of the Interior, and I know that it is the one which is embraced in their agreement, an agreement signed by the Secretary of the Interior with the irrigation district under the Newlands project, and I know that if that amendment is not retained in this bill, the whole understanding will fall, and litigation will proceed in that district. I will examine and read the RECORD to the Senate in a few minutes.

I think that if this matter were presented to the House conferees, as it may be presented, the House conferees would realize that they were doing an injustice, not alone to the homesteaders out on that project, but that they were doing an injustice to the Department of the Interior; that they were forcing both those homesteaders and the Government itself into litigation which they have both been trying their best to avoid. In other words, unless this amendment is adopted, this agreement will fall, and if that agreement falls, the Department of the Interior, under the existing law, will attempt to collect from those on the 70,000 acres this entire amount. They have started collecting it, and attorneys for the irrigation district have been authorized to start suits for injunction. Everyone has been trying his best to arrive at an agreement which would prevent that litigation, and after months and months of action on the matter, in which agents have come on here representing the directors of this district, in which the representatives of the State have participated for weeks in trying to bring this settlement about we brought it about. Now, when the authorization of law has been passed by the United States Senate, the Senate conferees are willing to let it go like this, without any further effort with the conferees of the House.

I do not believe that the conferees of the House really understand the necessity which caused the introduction of that amendment. If they did, I do not think they would hesitate a moment to agree to it, and I think they ought to have a chance to understand it and work on it.

I ask leave, Mr. President, to place in the RECORD two or three letters from the irrigation district and from the department bearing on this subject. I will not try to get them out of the file at the present time, but there are two or three of them I want to put in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to correct the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in connection with an error into which he fell.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds, if he will allow me to interrupt him, he is privileged, of course, to make the correction, but I should have made it myself had he not intended doing so. The amendment of which he has spoken, I find, was put on the bill by the subcommittee and not on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is, the amendment which I have been discussing was put on the bill in the committee?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. I have refreshed my memory. The truth is that the Senator, though not intentionally, has helped my memory to become somewhat confused by delaying the conference report for several days. I thought I was stating the fact in reference to the amendment, but I now wish to make the correction.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am not surprised that the Senator is confused, as all of us are, in view of the rather unusual character of the proceedings of late; but I did not remember the amendment being offered on the floor, and in looking the matter up I find that it was adopted as one of the committee amendments and not as one offered on the floor.

Mr. President, I will be compelled to oppose the adoption of this partial conference report, for the reasons I have stated. Under the rules the amendment can not be acted upon separately. Therefore, the report should be sent back to the conference committee. I think we are entitled to support in this matter from every Western Senator.

APPENDIX.

CHARGES ON TRUCKEE-CARSON PROJECT.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., December 5, 1906.

Mr. L. H. TAYLOR,
Salt Lake City.

DEAR SIR: My letter of December 3 in reply to yours of November 18 concerning the charges on the Truckee-Carson project referred to your statement that the $26 fixed as the cost of the project per acre included maintenance.

On July 16, 1904, in a report signed by A. P. Davis, Geo. Y. Wisner, W. H. Sanders, J. H. Quinton, and yourself, the statement was made that "the irrigation of 375,000 acres under the project, including maintenance for 10 years, is estimated at $9,375,000, or $25 per acre."

In our letter of July 27, 1904, asking the Secretary of the Interior to issue a public notice as to the charges, I increased the total cost to $26 per acre and refrained from referring to the question of maintenance as it did not seem advisable to commit ourselves upon this point, upon the estimates made in advance of the completion in any important part of the work.

The report of the board estimated the cost of the work at $8,000,000 and the operation and maintenance for 10 years at $1,375,000. The accuracy of the estimate of cost made at that time can not now be fully verified as to the work already completed with the data at hand in this office.

I suggest that at your earliest convenience you consider this matter and make report also on recommending a definite cost in two items, namely, building charge and operation and maintenance charge, for use in connection with the notice to be issued this winter as to water-right applications for the lands to which water can be furnished next spring.

It is desired that these figures be such as to secure the return to the reclamation fund of the amount expended, due consideration being given to the probable cost of the remainder of the work necessary for the complete project.

Very truly, yours, (Signed) F. H. NEWELL,
Chief Engineer.

FARM UNITS AND IRRIGABLE AREAS.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1907.

Mr. L. H. TAYLOR,
Fallon, Nev.

DEAR SIR: In view of the near approach of the opening of the irrigating season and the possible delay in obtaining formal announcement required by the reclamation act in regard to farm units and irrigable areas, you are instructed to give general notice that you will be ready to furnish water at the beginning of the irrigation season for all lands on the farm unit plats now submitted, limited by beneficial use, and not exceeding the amount to be fixed in the water-right application of acre-feet per acre per annum.

The first installment of the charges for building the works ($2.20) per acre will be due and payable at the local land office December 1, 1907, for all lands shown on these farm unit plats for both private land and land subject to the provisions of the reclamation act, whether or not water is used thereon. Water should be furnished to all such lands if desired by the entrymen or owners at the opening of the irrigation season; but after 30 days from the issuance of public notice by the Secretary of the Interior, no water will be furnished to any land unless the owner or entryman has filed in the local land office an application for a water right.

The operation and maintenance charges will be fixed as soon after the end of the irrigation season as practicable, and due notice of the charges and date of payment will be given. A minimum charge of 40 cents per acre per annum for operation and maintenance charges will be payable for all lands shown on the farm unit plats whether water be used thereon or not.

You will give this notice as great publicity as possible, and it is desired that you send individual notices to this effect to all entrymen and owners of lands to be irrigated and shown on the farm unit plats to be now subject to water-right applications.

Very truly yours,

A. P. DAVIS,
Acting Chief Engineer.

JANUARY 11, 1922.

Hon. E. C. FINNEY,
First Assistant Secretary,
Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are in receipt of yours of December 24 and have delayed replying thereto until such time as the board of directors of the Truckee-Carson irrigation district could meet and take up the matters contained in your communication.

The board of directors held an adjourned regular meeting on Monday, the 9th instant, and after a lengthy discussion of the matters contained in your letter have by resolution authorized us, as the district's attorneys, to take such steps as we deem advisable to prevent the United States Reclamation Service from crediting the sum of approximately $15,600 to the operation and maintenance deficit that accrued between the years 1906 and 1917, both inclusive, instead of crediting such sum to the operation and maintenance cost that will be incurred during the irrigation season of 1922. This sum of approximately $15,600 is the difference between the 1921 collections and accruals, which amount to approxmately the sum of $122,700, and the actual cost of operation and maintenance of the system of works in the season of 1921, amounting to the approxmate sum of $107,100.

Please do not construe the action of the board of directors of the district in authorizing us to take such steps as we deem advisable to prevent arbitrary action by the United States Reclamation Service in crediting the said sum to the operation and maintenance deficit that accrued prior to the year 1917, notwithstanding the plain and, we think, positive provisions of section 5 of the extension act, which in part provides:

"If the total amount of operation and maintenance charges and penalties collected for any one irrigation season on any project shall exceed the cost of operation and maintenance of the project during that irrigation season, the balance shall be applied to a reduction of the charge on the project for the next irrigation season, and any deficit incurred may likewise be added to the charge for the next irrigation season"— as being a determination to disregard any opportunity to amicably adjust the matter, but merely to insure the holding of the excess collections and accruals of the season 1921 in abeyance until the water users and the board of directors are convinced that the Reclamation Service will not enter into an equitable adjustment of the collections of the operation and maintenance deficit.

It is not the desire nor sentiment of the board of directors or of the water users of the Truckee-Carson irrigation district to avoid or quibble over the payment of any liability that they have incurred through the United States Reclamation Service and which they have received the benefits of. The sentiment of the board of directors is, however, that the operation and maintenance deficit was incurred for the benefit of not only some 5,000 acres of Government Indian lands now in the project, but also for the benefit of hundreds or thousands of other prospective and contemplated settlers in the Newlands reclamation project and if, as we are informed, the total cultivated area is now approximately 70,000 acres in the district as against a contemplated 206,000 acres to be brought into the project, an attempt to place the collection of the entire sum upon the holders of the 70,000 acres in the irrigation district and excluding the Indian lands and public lands to be hereafter settled seems unreasonable and unjust.

Referring to that portion of your said letter wherein you state that you will be pleased to hear from us with an expression of the views of the Truckee-Carson irrigation district and ourselves as to the possibility of making a satisfactory agreement embodying—

(1) The payment of the entire operation and maintenance deficit at the end of the 20 years by the district;

(2) The question of the return of the money to be expended for tunnel repairs on the Truckee Canal;

(3) The payment by the landowners of the Truckee-Carson irrigation district of an equitable share of the cost of construction of the Spanish Springs Reservoir, should it be found possible to construct the same;

(4) The assumption by the district of operation and maintenance and construction payments in order to remove the present liens upon the lands and to enable farm loans to be secured; and

(5) An adjustment of the cost of Fernley drainage along the lines recommended by the Fortier and Bixby report on the Newlands project of August, 1921.

We have to say that—

(1) The board of directors of the Truckee-Carson irrigation district does not feel that the operation and maintenance deficit should be paid by the Truckee-Carson irrigation district or the water users included therein, but believe that the same should be repaid to the reclamation fund through the collection of the same as a construction charge placed against lands contemplated to be settled upon in the Newlands reclamation project when ample storage facilities have been acquired to replace the original storage contemplated in Lake Tahoe. Or if such proposition does not meet with the approval of your department the board of directors and the water users of the district will be very glad to hear from you relative to the spreading of the operation and maintenance proportionately over all of the entered and unentered lands of the Newlands reclamation project as it will exist 20 years from now, the time that you suggest that the payment of the operation and maintenance deficit commence.

(2) and (3) Referring to the embodying in the agreement the return of cost of repairs on the tunnel on deferred payments, we understand that the character of work to be done has not as yet been decided upon and until such information is available, together with the estimated cost of the work and whether or not it constitutes repairs or construction, it seems premature to discuss the same, and we think that the same situation exists relative to the return of any portion of the cost of construction of the Spanish Springs reservoir.

(4) As to the assumption by the irrigation district of the operation and maintenance and construction payments, we refer you to our letter dated September 27, 1920, to Mr. John F. Richardson, project manager, and the letter of Director A. P. Davis, dated November 2, 1920, addressed to us in reply thereto, wherein Mr. Davis stated that it would be better for the district to wait a few years until the reclamation service had had a chance to settle, if possible, the storage situation, construct at least a part of the much needed drainage channels, and secure settlement of a larger part of the lands than are now under cultivation. It is our understanding that the board of directors and the water users of the district are still desirous of taking over the operation of the operation and maintenance and would be glad to hear from you relative to the present attitude of the United States Reclamation Service in that respect, and also as to taking over the collection of the construction cost, so that the matter can be discussed and put to a vote of the landowners of the district.

(5) As to an adjustment of the cost of Fernley drainage along the lines recommended by the Fortier and Bixby report, we do not have a copy of the report at hand. This matter seems to be one which should be adjusted between the local water users and we are not in a position to advise you at this writing of the desires of the board relative thereto, as we believe the matter has not been called to our attention and has not, we believe, been discussed. Such an adjustment would, of course, be subject to the will of the voters of the district.

We heartily indorse and adopt, and believe that the board of directors of the Truckee-Carson irrigation district and the water users would likewise indorse and adopt your statement that the ensuing five years will be very critical ones in the project's history, and that it is important that all cooperate intensely and harmoniously in order to fully realize the plans which both the district and the United States desire to accomplish for the advancement of the Newlands project, and believe that the first step in securing such cooperation and harmony is a fair and just settlement of issues that seem to have reached a crisis. The work of the United States Government in making it possible to reclaim, settle, and cultivate the vast areas of land in the Newlands reclamation project is fully realized and appreciated, we believe, by each and every individual living in the Newlands reclamation project, and hence it is the earnest desire of the board of directors, as representatives of all of these settlers, homesteaders, and landowners, to reach an amicable adjustment of the operation and maintenance deficit and other problems that now and will hereafter arise, and to this end we earnestly urge that you authorize and direct that the excess accruals of the year 1921, aggregating approximately the sum of $15,600, be held in abeyance for a period of 90 days in order that full consideration may be given by the Secretary of the Interior to the equities of the request of an adjustment along the lines contained in this letter or in our letter addressed to Mr. John F. Richardson, project manager at Fallon, under date of November 16, 1921, and arrangements be made for a thorough discussion of all of the phases of the situation with the Nevada Senators and Congressman in Washington, D. C., and such others as may be desired.

As hereinbefore stated, the homesteaders, settlers, and landowners of the irrigation district do not desire to have this matter litigated for numerous reasons which affect both the district and the United States Reclamation Service, and we assure you that such litigation will only be resorted to when the prospects of an amicable adjustment of the operation and maintenance deficit is beyond possibility.

We call your attention to a letter addressed to us under date October 25, 1920, from Director A. P. Davis, wherein it is stated:

"You are advised that the Reclamation Service is not at present attempting to collect from the Truckee-Carson irrigation district any deficit in the operation and maintenance account which arose prior to the passage of the extension act of August 13, 1914 (38 Stat. 686), and that any future arrangement made for that purpose will be preceded by appropriate notice to the district so that it may have full opportunity to take such action in the matter as it may consider advisable."

And ask if you will go a step farther and give us assurance by wire that a disposition of the excess accruals over actual cost of operation and maintenance for 1921 will be held in complete abeyance for a period of 90 days in order that an adjustment may be made to the satisfaction of the United States Government and to the landowners and settlers in the Truckee-Carson irrigation district, and that the reclamation fund may be repaid through such adjustment as provided by law.

We are forwarding a copy of this letter to the project manager at Fallon, Nev., for his information, and likewise a copy to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of this State in Washington.

Respectfully,

COOKE, FRENCH & STODDARD.
By ROY W. STODDARD.

Mr. WARREN. I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator will yield for just one question, I want to submit a matter to him. The bill as it passed the Senate appropriated, on page 93, $100,000 for the continued investigation of the feasibility of water storage on the lower Colorado River for irrigation, and other purposes, and related problems. The Senate receded from that amendment and accepted an amendment of the House in the following language:

For the continued investigation of the feasibility of irrigation, water storage, and related problems on the Colorado River and investigation of water sources of said river, $100,000.

There is an addition to the language as found in the bill as passed by the Senate. It goes beyond the idea of discovering, if possible, sources of storage for irrigation, and goes into the investigation of the water sources of the river. I wondered why the amendment was changed to include that language.

Mr. WARREN. Those who considered that the matter was larger than the "lower Colorado" struck out the word "lower" and added the words which the Senator has repeated, so that the whole subject of the sources and storage of the water of the Colorado would be considered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am constrained to oppose the adoption of this partial report of the conference committee, and I may say in this connection that I do not see any very good reason for acceding to the partial report. We make no progress on the matter at all.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is mistaken about that. As I have tried to explain to him and others, the House rule requires that anything that is considered obnoxious to it, even though put on in the Senate, has to go back to the House for indorsement. We had agreed upon perhaps twenty-odd items which are required to go back to the House for acceptance, and those, of course, can be reported to the House and adopted, and it will bring it down to the matters actually in disagreement. There is progress being made, and it is the usual way. It has always been the practice ever since I have been in the Senate that where there can not be a full agreement on appropriation bills and where we are trying on the part of the Senate to maintain those things which we have put in, this action is required. If we could immediately concede everything the House asked for, we could get a full report at once and not have a partial report.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask a question of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is it not true that by the process which the Senator from Wyoming has just described, where the Senate puts in what may be called legislation, or what the House might interpret to be legislation, but which the Senate, for reasons sufficient to itself, adopts as a part of the bill, and it goes back to the House, the result of the procedure which the Senator describes is to deny the Senate a conference upon those matters?

Mr. WARREN. Not exactly as the Senator puts it. It would if it were abused. I have objected to that system, and I object to it now, and I expect we shall get some change; but it will require action on the part of both Houses perhaps to get a change. The proposition is this: That when my colleagues and I go into conference with a bill we simply say, "Is this to be a full and free conference?" The House conferees say, "Yes; except that we may have to go back and get the approval of the House as to some items, but we will move en bloc for these recessions, and they will be made." That has been the practice so far, as far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned. There is always a chance of some one item or two being held up, but aside from that, never since the change in the House rules has there been anything further on the part of the Committee on Appropriations than one or two amendments.

Mr. POINDEXTER. To put it in a different form, the position of the House conferees is that under the House rules they have no authority to agree to these matters at all in conference. They have to take them back and get the immediate, direct action of the House. It seems to me that is a complete denial of the principle of a conference.

Mr. WARREN. In a way, yes; but there have been tentative agreements, and we have thought it better for the present, until matters get straightened out on the other side, to go on in that form, and so far we have been very successful in getting agreements.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As I understand the Senator, he expects that some different system will have to be worked out?

Mr. WARREN. I think so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, I can understand perfectly well that if this could be cut up into three or four different subjects, reducing the number of oppositions each time, it would be much more easily possible to get an eventual agreement. That is the only advantage I can see in dividing a thing up and considering it piecemeal.

Of course, opposition to reports of this kind always comes from somebody who is dissatisfied with the action with respect to some particular item. My dissatisfaction arises particularly with reference to the item of the bill for the continuance of the work of construction of what is known as the transmountain road in the Glacier National Park. Notwithstanding the fact that for years an effort was made to secure recognition for this most desirable highway, which will be the most scenic highway in America when completed, if not in the world, it was put off until finally, after repeated recommendations from the Park Service, an appropriation of $100,000 was made last year, and the work is under way. A recommendation was made by the Budget Committee, after every effort to pare down to the bone, for a similar appropriation for this very worthy project, but the House of Representatives, pursuant to a policy of economy, with reference to which I shall have something additional to say presently, notwithstanding the fact that the work was under way and that which had been done would suffer more or less by reason of the fact that it was not continued, made an appropriation of $50,000 only. The Senate very promptly and very commendably raised it to the amount recommended in the Budget, $100,000. I have no doubt that the Senate conferees have done the very best they can to secure the acquiescence of the House in the Senate amendment, but it is cut to $65,500, a reduction of something over 33⅓ per cent.

With it, Mr. President, is an appropriation of a similar character with similar results in the Mount Rainier National Park, in Washington. Concerning the origin of this work, I am not fully advised, but in that connection an amendment for an appropriation of $45,000 for the completion of widening 3 miles of the Nisqually Glacier to Paradise Valley Road was made by the Senate. This was cut to $21,800.

Mr. President, I desire to remark that last night there came in my mail an advertisement by the American Bar Association of the forthcoming meeting of that association at San Francisco. With it is presented a schedule of rates which will be offered by the railroad companies, and, as is usual in such cases, inducements are made to take trips to places of interest.

The circular advises those who desire to make the trip that they will have an opportunity to return by way of the Canadian Pacific, affording them an opportunity to view the scenery of the Canadian Rockies, and particularly to stop off at the celebrated Lake Louise.

In the summer of 1920 we went to San Francisco to attend the Democratic National Convention, and my recollection is that there were some half dozen members of this body who, thus induced by advertisement and other means, returned to the East by way of the Canadian Rockies, and enjoyed the scenery that was afforded by that trip.

No one knows anything about the Mount Rainier National Park or the Glacier National Park, or at least the great bulk of the people of this country know practically nothing about those parks, and yet the Glacier National Park is separated from the Canadian Rockies by nothing except the arbitrary international boundary line. The country is exactly the same. The attractions are exactly the same. The glaciers are there in as great abundance upon our side of the line as they are upon the other side of the line. The lakes are as beautiful south of the line as they are north of the line. The forests are just as attractive, both with respect to magnitude and with respect to variety. In other words, Mr. President, the conditions are substantially the same, as, indeed, they are in the Mount Rainier National Park. The only difficulty about the matter is that Canada spends money in order to build roads in these parks and to advertise their beauties, and thus attract to her parks on the other side of the line the tourist travel which ought to be confined to our own country.

Mr. President, this is a matter that is of national concern. It is not a local matter at all. We are endeavoring every year to divert to this country of ours the tourist travel from European countries, endeavoring to urge the people to "see America first." But what is the use of doing all that kind of thing unless we can offer them the same attractions, unless we can open up these parks by roads and trails, so as to make them available?

Who was it over in the other branch of the Congress, I should like to inquire, who knows so much about this matter as to justify the reduction in the estimates, in the first instance, from $100,000 to $50,000, and then afterwards to stand upon the amount that was finally agreed upon, $65,000, and in the case of road construction in the Mount Rainier National Park to reduce it from $45,000 to $21,800? I am advised by the Park Service that all this was done against their earnest protest. They used every persuasion they could to hold these figures. What reason is there, what reason can be assigned for this action? We must act some way or other on some substantial evidence.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, is the Senator addressing his questions to me?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not intend them to be directed personally to the Senator, but I shall be glad to have him answer them.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, the Senator knows that there are Members of Congress who are supposed to look after these things. The bill came to us, as the Senator has seen it, appropriating $50,000 for this item. We had the regular estimates, and, without going any further, the Senate committee increased the amount up to the full estimates in every case as to Government parks, including the one in which the Senator is particularly interested. We were met by strong resistance on the part of the conferees from the House, one gentleman from Idaho, one gentleman from Oklahoma, and one gentleman from Michigan. They were not disposed to relent at all, but after three days' wrestling with them we compromised by cutting two hundred and some odd thousand dollars, which we had added to all of the park items, down to $115,000, and agreed to leave it to the director, Mr. Mathers, of the National Park System, or his assistant, to see that we might get even-handed, unprejudiced justice as far as we could do so, and the Senator now has the result before him.

Of course, I am sorry to see it done, but it was the only way we had any hope of arriving at an agreement. Therefore there was $12,500 added to the item to which the Senator has referred. The fact that there was a certain amount appropriated last year and the year before that does not mean anything except that the House has attempted to reduce the entire bill. We had about 115 or 120 disagreements, and I think every one of them, with the possible exception of two or three, are in the matter of amount, where we seek to get more and they seek to hold us down to less.

The Senator, of course, must concede that conferences are instituted for the reconcilement of differences, and we find it impossible, as I think the Senator will find it impossible in a conference, to have one side claim all of the amounts which they have put in or to maintain their position against all of the amounts which they are resisting. I am aware of these criticisms, and I never flinch under them, because they are part of the game; but I am determined always, when any item is placed on a bill in the Senate, to defend it to the last possible point where I can succeed in obtaining anything.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will understand perfectly well that nothing I have said and nothing that I shall say is in any wise criticism of the Senator from Wyoming, representing the Senate or otherwise.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am calling attention to the fact that this was the best the Senate conferees could do, and I am very glad that we have now from the distinguished chairman of the conference committee what I supposed was the situation. There was apparently no reason urged for these cuts. The total amount, the House conferees said, must come down. They did not care about any particular items at all, or about the merits of any of the particular items, but the whole thing must come down.

Let me call attention to some more of this policy of economy of which the newspapers have told us not a little. Most of the items to which I now desire to call attention are still in abeyance, and I trust that when the report is finally made we shall have no cause to complain.

For instance, we are deeply interested in the matter, of course, all over the West in the public-land surveys. Years elapse often before the man who, before the survey is made, goes away out on the frontier and settles is able to get title to his land simply because the surveys have not been made. The Budget Committee recommended an appropriation of $700,000 for making public-land surveys. The House thought they had better cut it down, that that was a good place to pare, and so they cut it down to $600,000, and the Senate committee promptly put it back to $700,000.

The matter of classifying lands by the Geological Survey, so that entries may be made under the mineral homestead act, is a very important work, a work of special importance in the intermountain States. The Budget Committee recommended, as I understand, an appropriation of $300,000 for that purpose, and the House cut it in two and made the appropriation $150,000. The Senate committee put it back to the amount recommended for that purpose—$300,000—and has been obliged to submit to a cut of $75,000, so that we now have $225,000 reported.

Now, it will be observed that that is just a splitting of the difference between the House amount and the Senate amount. There is no reason for it at all. It is just arbitrarily, apparently, that they cut the amount in two; not that it would do, that it would satisfy, that it would be enough to accomplish the work, but arbitrarily they split the difference.

More important, perhaps, than any of these to the people of my State are the appropriations for irrigation. I wish to invite attention to one or two of those items. The Milk River project, in the State of Montana, was one of the first projects undertaken under the reclamation act; indeed, Mr. President, the work was prosecuted by the Geological Survey even before the passage of the reclamation act in 1892. Unfortunately, after the work was entered upon, a long controversy arose with Canada concerning the distribution of the waters of the streams which were to be utilized in the irrigation of the lands to be reclaimed. That went on for many years, and eventually resulted in the negotiation of a treaty; but after the negotiation of the treaty a controversy arose concerning its construction, which has been pending for nearly 10 years, and only lately was determined by the International Joint Commission. So the work has been delayed and the overhead has been accumulating and accumulating upon those people until the amount is running up to such a sum as that fears are entertained that the land, although rich and valuable, will not be able to bear the burden which is imposed upon it.

In that situation of affairs the department recommended an appropriation of $890,000 for the prosecution of that work, which the House of Representatives proceeded to cut down to $340,000, some $600,000 less than the amount recommended. The Senate committee and the Senate promptly put it back to the amount recommended. The amendment is now pending in the committee, but the policy of economy seems to prevail over there, I am afraid, and will deny us the opportunity to get a substantial appropriation for the completion of this work.

The North Platte project in Nebraska and Wyoming is in exactly the same situation. The Senate was obliged to increase the House appropriation from $1,440,000 to $1,690,000. The appropriation for the Rio Grande project in New Mexico was raised $100,000 in the Senate in order to conform to the estimate. The North Dakota pumping project was raised $30,000 in the Senate in order, likewise, to make it conform to the estimate. The Belle Fourche project in South Dakota was raised $30,000. The Senator from Wyoming suffers in exactly the same way, for the appropriation for the Riverton project in his State, which was recommended to be $1,075,000, which was practically cut in two, and $675,000 was appropriated by the other House. These items are still in conference. So I call attention to the fact that the vital interests of the West, in practically every feature with which this bill deals, are involved in his conference report and in such other reports as may be made with reference to the bill. It is a question as to whether the Senate is going to be obliged to yield with reference to all of these thus vitally important matters. I understand there is a policy of economy, but I want the public to know, at least in the section of the country from which I come, exactly what that policy means for us.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish also to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming in connection with irrigation appropriations that, as a matter of fact, there is no real economy in retaining the House figures, because the appropriations are simply allotments of moneys in the reclamation fund. That fund is not subject to other appropriations, and the estimates, as I understand, of the Budget Bureau are based on the amount of money that will come into that fund and be available for the next fiscal year. So there is not really any economy in a recession from the amendments which the Senate has adopted. The Senate simply placed in the bill the amounts which the Budget Bureau estimated should be allotted from the reclamation fund under these various projects. If the money is there, and it is not appropriated for these purposes, it will not be used at all. If it is not in the fund, of course, it will not be taken out of the General Treasury.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is quite right about that; but, of course, when the statement goes out that the appropriations are cut by so much, it does not make any difference where the appropriations come from.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to correct the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in connection with an error into which he fell.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds, if he will allow me to interrupt him, he is privileged, of course, to make the correction, but I should have made it myself had he not intended doing so. The amendment of which he has spoken, I find, was put on the bill by the subcommittee and not on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is, the amendment which I have been discussing was put on the bill in the subcommittee?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. I have refreshed my memory. The truth is that the Senator, though not intentionally, has helped my memory to become somewhat confused by delaying the conference report for several days. I thought I was stating the fact in reference to the amendment, but I now wish to make the correction.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am not surprised that the Senator is confused, as all of us are, in view of the rather unusual character of the proceedings of late; but I did not remember the amendment being offered on the floor, and in looking the matter up

I find that it was adopted as one of the committee amendments and not as one offered on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the report.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator want a division, or does he desire the yeas and nays? However, I do not object. The Senator may call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], and vote "yea."

Mr. HALE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], and vote "yea."

Mr. COLT. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and vote "nay."

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I find that my pair, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], has not voted, and is not present. I therefore transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 9, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum of the Senate has not voted.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that there may be a call for a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Frelinghuysen	Moses	Shortridge
Broussard	Gerry	Myers	Smoot
Bursum	Gooding	Oddie	Spencer
Calder	Hale	Overman	Sterling
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sutherland
Capper	King	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.

Cummins	Lodge	Poindexter	Warren
Curtis	McCumber	Rawson	Willis
Ernst	McNary	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the conference report that we have before us is one that stalls our business on the part of the Appropriations Committee, and has done so for the last week. If it is the desire of certain Members of the Senate to do that, of course I can not help it. There was a desire on the part of a good many Senators to complete the consideration of this conference report to-night, so that we might take the conference matter up again to-morrow with the House, and, if possible, adjourn the Senate over Friday and Saturday, or at least over Saturday. It seems to be the opinion of some Senators, however, that we ought to remain in session the balance of the week. So I now move that the Senate adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 6 o'clock and 39 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 31, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 30, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We desire to thank Thee, blessed Lord, that with this day there come so much of hope, promise, and good cheer. We are grateful that there is strength for our weakness, wisdom for our ignorance, food for our hunger, and sunshine for our sorrow. By Thy power we are preserved in reason and in intelligence to appreciate the bounties of our heavenly Father. In us may there be a deep desire to know Thy laws and the spirit to accept and obey them. Continue to let us feel the sweet attraction and blessedness of Thy love and mercy and keep us good and happy all the way, through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to propound a unanimous-consent request. A few days ago I secured permission of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD. My purpose in doing so was not solely that I might embalm my words of wisdom in an historical mausoleum but that if occasion arose I might send them forth to a waiting world. I discovered later that unless I obtained special permission those remarks would be printed in type so small that I would have to send out with them magnifying glasses in order that the people might read them. At the present price of magnifying lenses and the present state of my finances that would be rather inconvenient. I therefore ask that those remarks may be printed in the usual 8-point RECORD type.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the remarks referred to may be printed in 8-point type. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted by the House, I here insert some remarks made by me on the occasion of the fiftieth birthday anniversary of Charles W. Hoyt, of New York, head of the large advertising business known as Hoyt's Service, Inc.

The address is as follows:

PENDING TARIFF LEGISLATION.

An address by Hon. JOHN Q. TILSON, Representative in Congress from Connecticut, delivered at the Hotel Ambassador, New York City, March 24, 1922, on the fiftieth birthday anniversary of Charles W. Hoyt.

Mr. Toastmaster, guest of honor, and friends of the guest of honor: I am delighted to join in this splendid and well-deserved tribute of esteem and admiration to my long-time friend, fellow townsman, and fellow Yale man, Charles W. Hoyt. If it had not been forbidden by the committee in charge of this occasion, I should be tempted to refer to some of the sterling qualities the possession of which have placed our friend at the early age of 50 in the very forefront of a great business profession. Others, however, are to have this pleasing privilege, so far as it is to be permitted at all. I have been requested to talk to this gathering of business men on the subject of tariff legislation and its effect on business.

A tariff speech at a birthday celebration might appear to some about as inappropriate to the occasion as the speech of the old-fashioned political campaigner at a funeral held in the fall of 1896. This particular funeral preceded the election, so that no reference is here made to the funeral that followed. A goodly number of friends having arrived somewhat early the old campaigner—the ruling passion strong even in death—arose and solemnly said:

"Friends and fellow citizens, while awaiting the arrival of other friends of the deceased, I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to make a few remarks on the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the God-given ratio of 16 to 1."

There are a number of points of difference, however, between that occasion and this one. The guest of honor is about the most alive man I know, and unlike Mark Anthony we have come to praise him, not to bury him. Then the tariff question is far from being as dead as Julius Cæsar or free silver, for issues may come and issues may go, but the tariff goes on forever, and will continue so long as we are an industrial Nation with standards of living for working people higher than those of other countries.

At first glance there may not appear to be a very close relationship between tariff legislation and the advertising and publishing business, but the connection is actually close and vital. It has been charged that the publishing business or, to be more exact, that the great daily newspapers of the country are hostile to a protective tariff on the ground that such legislation restricts imports and that the restriction of imports injuriously affects advertising. The unreasoning attitude of so many of the metropolitan dailies on the subject of the tariff lends color to this charge. If true, it is a short-sighted policy on the part of those responsible for it. In the end the publishing and advertising business and all other business, except importing, will be better and greater if a condition of universal prosperity prevails, which can not prevail so long as foreign competitors hold sway in the domestic market.

It has long been my contention that the tariff is neither a local nor a party issue, and it should not be made so. It should be considered and discussed when no political campaign is imminent, so that it may be considered calmly, dispassionately, and with a view to ascertaining the possible economic effect rather than its effect on the next election.

Naturally, I can approach the subject only from the standpoint of a protectionist, for that is what I am. As this is not a partisan gathering, I think that I ought to say this, so that you may be advised and be ready to make such discount of what I am about to say as you may judge to be necessary.

From my viewpoint, the question of whether we have an adequately protective tariff resolves itself very largely into the question whether we shall continue to produce here in America such of the articles we use and consume as we can produce with reasonable economy and efficiency. In other words, shall we produce what we need or purchase it from some one else? We should not attempt to force, by means of protection, the growing of tropical fruits in the steam-heated greenhouses of New York and New England; and by the same token other industries, which by the nature of things belong in the "hothouse" category, have no place in the protective system. On the other hand, where an industry has heretofore thrived or can be made to do so by imposing a duty sufficient to equalize labor costs it is clearly within the protective principle and should have consideration.

It is not my purpose, however, to enter upon a discussion of protective principles, but rather to refer briefly to the present tariff situation, its effect upon business, and what the prospects for the immediate future are in this direction.

Our present tariff law went into effect October 3, 1913, and therefore had been in force less than 10 months when the war broke out in Europe. In these few brief months it was clearly demonstrated that the duties provided by it were altogether inadequate in a great number of industries. Destructive foreign competition had already begun its deadly work. Then came the great World War, enacting and putting into full force the highest protective tariff ever known, being altogether prohibitive in a great number of cases. The prosperity that ensued under such abnormal conditions was itself abnormal, and brought some very unfortunate results, such as extravagance and high cost of living, in its train.

Peace came at last, but the train of consequences once set in motion could not be so readily halted as the hostile armies. Great industrial disturbances had occurred in almost every country in the world and financial chaos reigned supreme in some of them. Financial confusion emphasized and increased the industrial confusion and still disturbs industrial conditions. In this chaotic condition the resumption of the importation of foreign goods was somewhat slow and far from uniform, wherein lies one serious element of difficulty for us.

It was the autumn of 1920 before we began to feel the effect of serious foreign competition, and then at first only in a comparatively few industries. In the early months of 1921 it was being felt more keenly and in an ever-widening circle of industries, but still so unequally that although many were seriously injured many others appeared to be affected not at all. It was at this stage that the Committee on Ways and Means began the preparation of the general tariff bill now in the Senate. It was not an easy task under the conditions then existing. It was difficult to secure information that was not liable to become misinformation overnight and without notice to the holder. One fact, however, stood out conspicuously and became more clear with each passing month, and that was that more and more industries were suffering and were suffering more keenly from foreign competition. These industries appealed for relief to the only source from which relief in such matters can come, and Congress, or at least the House of Representatives, took up the task.

Some of those producers who had not yet felt the pressure of unequal competition joined in the cry that "we have now become a creditor Nation," as if that fact ought to cause us to enjoy standing helpless while the foreigner metaphorically cuts our throats. It may give voice to a grand and glorious feeling to boast that we are now a "creditor Nation," but if the only large factory in a small mill town is compelled to close its doors because its foreign competitor is underselling it in the American market you will have hard work showing the people who are out of work where they gain anything by it. Yes; we have become a creditor Nation, and I sincerely hope that we get paid, but not at the price of seeing our own mills closed and our own labor and capital thrown out of employment.

During the year 1921, especially while the tariff bill was in committee and in the House, business was what we might call "spotty." There were some bright spots here and there, and, as we all too well recall, some very dark ones. There were so many conflicting elements and cross currents that it was not easy to fully diagnose the trouble. I would not contend that the severe industrial depression caused all the trouble or that the lack of adequate protection caused all the depression in industry, but after a somewhat prolonged investigation I am convinced that no other one element had more to do in causing and prolonging the slump in business; and I am just as fully convinced that the cause must be removed before it will be possible for business to fully recover.

If any of you took the trouble to examine carefully the goods you bought or examined during the last Christmas holidays, for instance, I warrant that you found a large percentage of the articles then offered for sale to be of foreign origin, and that condition continues to this day. My friend and fellow townsman, sitting here at my left, A. C. Gilbert, makes, or is equipped to make, all kinds of wonderful toys. My friend sitting over there, Harry Ives, of Bridgeport, specializes in toy trains, and produces the best that can be made. Having children of my own of toy age, I have visited a number of toy places in New Haven, New York, and Washington, and have there found more toys made in Germany than I found made in New Haven, Bridgeport, and all the other toy towns combined. The company over which Walter Camp, the friend of all of us, presides makes clocks in New Haven—that is, when there is a market for them. There have not been very many made during the past year. One of the former workmen of this company, while unable to find another job, had some leisure on his hands, so it occurred to him to investigate where the clocks were coming from that were being sold in New Haven. He found that there, under the shadow of the smokeless stacks of the New Haven Clock Co., there were more German clocks being offered for sale than of all the different American clock makers combined.

A few months ago I was in Kansas City, and while there I spent more than an hour one day in a large sporting goods store that would do credit to Fifth Avenue. A large proportion of the goods carried in the store were of the kind for the manufacture of which the States of Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey are particularly noted. It was a matter of deep regret to me to find American articles, one after another, being replaced by foreign articles, and that this was being done very rapidly in this class of merchandise. The reason given was that German goods can be bought so cheaply that the profit in selling them is too large and too tempting to be resisted. I inquired as to whether these goods were sold to the consumer at a price much below that of the comparable American article, and was informed that this was not at all necessary. On account of the much smaller profit on the American articles, I was told that few were sold except when specially asked for by a customer.

The resultant effect of a large number of instances like the ones referred to is forcibly illustrated in a letter received by me yesterday from a large manufacturer of cutlery, scissors, and surgical instruments in New Jersey. A part of the letter reads as follows:

Here are some interesting facts regarding these nippers. Since last January, when I met with your committee in Washington, we have not produced a single pair, although our business prior to that time on this item was very large. The reason, I hardly need explain, is that the German goods have driven us from the market, and this department of our plant is shut down.

This is also true of our manufacture of solid steel scissors. I think I am safe in saying that since January, 1921, there has not been a single pair of steel scissors completely manufactured in the city of Newark. There have been possibly some very small quantities completed from stock which were on hand, but to take a piece of steel and start from the beginning to make scissors, I am very certain has not been done since the date above mentioned.

There were in this city approximately 3,000 men employed in grinding and finishing, and the manufacture of cutlery, especially of scissors, was rapidly growing. To-day these men are walking the streets in search of employment or have drifted into other trades.

How can we expect to have our national business prosperous if this condition exists in the various manufacturing industries in the country? I am not interested in the German manufacturer or in the German importer, who is rapidly growing rich at the expense of American manufacturers and American working people. I have tried very hard to explain to a great many of our workmen who come back to us seeking employment that it is impossible for us to make these goods and compete with Germany. They can not understand why the German factories should be running overtime and the German goods selling in this market while they have to seek work of any kind in order to live.

I have referred to these specific instances as illustrations only. Multiply by 1,000 and you will have begun to figure out one of the reasons why business has tarried so long in the slough of despond. Business has been and still is sick in the industrial sections of the country. The best medicine I know for the disease is a good stiff dose of the good old protective-tariff remedy.

In my illustrations I have referred to Germany, so you may wonder how it is that Germany, so recently and so completely overwhelmed by her enemies, can so quickly rise again and become an effective competitor. Remember that Germany was not devastated and that her industrial equipment was in many respects increased rather than diminished during the war. The facilities are there and some of the cheapest and best labor in the world. Necessity furnishes the spur, and a most effective competition is the result. I have said cheap labor. It is made so in part by necessity and by reason of the exchange situation. Labor is high when measured in marks at their former value, but at the present price of marks German labor is so cheap as to make it impossible for an American manufacturer to pay our wage scale and successfully compete.

It was to meet the German situation as much as for any other reason that the American valuation plan was first brought forward and finally written into the House tariff bill. The plan is not entirely free from difficulties. Neither is any other plan, except the impossible plan now being followed of permitting the exporter to fix the valuation of his goods for duty purposes. What would you think of a plan where every taxpayer in a town is permitted to finally determine the valuation of the property on which he is to be taxed? Can not you imagine how rapidly and how much the grand list of that town would shrink? Are foreigners any more honest than our home taxpayers? It is also much easier for the foreigner to accomplish his purpose, for he is far away and outside the jurisdiction of our courts. He can and does invoice the goods to his agent here, who pays the duty on the invoice value whatever the foreigner chooses to make it. The agent then proceeds to sell the goods for what he can get for them here, which is the real American value. Is it wrong to make the foreigner pay the duty on a fair valuation of his goods? And can there be any fairer value than that for which the goods will sell in the market where they are offered for sale?

American valuation does not necessarily mean higher rates of duty, for the method of valuation is, of course, taken into account in fixing the rate. If the rate is high enough and the valuation is fairly made, it should not matter materially which method is employed; but herein lies the difficulty. Foreign valuation has not been heretofore fairly and honestly administered, and it is well-nigh impossible that it should be. Under this plan our Government has lost millions of revenue and our domestic producers have lost a large share of the protection to which they are entitled under the law. Under present conditions our producers can not endure much longer this unfortunate, one-sided plan. They must have relief from an intolerable situation, and American valuation is the most hopeful thing in sight.

Before I close you would naturally expect me to give you some definite idea as to when tariff relief may be expected to materialize. Unfortunately I can not do so. In my opinion the tariff bill should have become a law more than six months ago. As I have said, it is perfectly clear to my mind that we can not fully recover from the depression through which we have been struggling so long until proper tariff legislation has been enacted. Therefore every week's delay in finally settling the matter is an unnecessary prolongation of conditions from which men of thought and action, like those before me to-night, have been working so hard trying to extricate us.

On July 21, 1921, the House of Representatives passed a tariff bill, since which time the responsibility has rested upon the other branch of Congress. Yet, I would not judge harshly the Senate of the United States. The problem to be worked out is difficult, complex, and complicated. My own judgment is that quick action would have been far better, even if need be at the expense of thoroughness, trusting to further revision at a later date, if found necessary, to correct errors based on faulty information. The Senators, however, sharing equal responsibility, have taken a different view, and I would not impugn their motives nor unduly criticize, although I fail to agree with, their judgment. I hope that our captains of industry will have the patience and the resources—and it will call for much of both—to hold out a little longer, and that our working people will be enabled to live through the depression with as little hardship as possible. Even though unduly delayed, relief will surely come, and when it comes I believe that it will be of such a character that under it industry will soon resume its normal condition and then go forward and upward to new levels of prosperity heretofore unknown.

POINT OF NO QUORUM.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the bill under consideration (H. R. 10864), I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order that there is no quorum. It is clear there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their name:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and six Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

ADDITIONAL HOSPITAL FACILITIES FOR EX-SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10864, the hospital bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10864, with Mr. GREEN of Iowa in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10864, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10864) to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the House is about to take up for consideration under a unanimous-consent agreement entered into at my suggestion some days ago the bill (H. R. 10864) to authorize appropriations to the extent of $17,000,000 to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for veterans of the World War. I assume there will be very little, if any, opposition to the enactment of this legislation, at least to the provisions for additional hospital facilities. There may be grounds for difference of opinion as to some of the details of the legislation, but so far as the necessity, the wisdom, and the advisability of making abundant and liberal provision for the disabled veterans of the World War there is no ground for difference of opinion, and there is, I assume, no difference of opinion on either side of the House. Mr. Chairman, in view of this unanimous sentiment favorable to the essential features of this legislation, I think it is not necessary for me to discuss it at length. I shall take advantage of the opportunity afforded me to discuss some other matters which, I think, are of considerable interest just at this time.

Mr. Chairman, various newspapers and newspaper writers seem to be engaged in a systematic attempt to create the impression that the Congress, and particularly the House of Representatives, is not working in harmony with the President. A recent statement characteristic of this attempt is to the effect that "the President is at loggerheads with the Republican leaders in Congress, particularly in the House of Representatives, on practically all matters of domestic and foreign policy."

This class of statement is so ridiculously and absurdly untrue, and here in Washington is so well known to be untrue, that one might very properly ignore it were it not for the fact that such statements printed in papers of wide circulation are certain to create a false impression in the country.

The fact is that instead of the President and the Congress being at loggerheads, as these writers and journals would have the country believe, there has never been a time in my quarter of a century of experience in Congress when the relations between the President and the Congress, particularly the House of Representatives, were more pleasant, cordial, sympathetic, and harmonious than at the present time. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I prefer not to be interrupted just at this point. I desire, however, to say that while what I have just said relates primarily to the majority, it is also true, as you all know, in the main with regard to the minority. [Applause.]

Anyone who will take the trouble to read the recommendations made by President Harding to this Congress from time to time and to examine the record of the Congress will find that practically all of these recommendations have either been written into law or are in process of enactment, and this applies particularly to the record of the House of Representatives.

I invite comparison with any period of American history and challenge anyone to find a record of finer relations or more harmonious cooperation between the President and the Congress. I do not mean that the Congress has halted in the performance of its duty to inquire the Executive view as to every detail of its program; that would neither be practical nor in accordance with the spirit of our institutions, and President Harding would be the last to suggest or approve such a procedure. [Applause.]

Neither do I wish to convey the impression that the action of the Congress, or of either body, has at every moment of time and in all of the stages of legislation been exactly or precisely to the breadth of a gnat's eyelash just what the President would have preferred. Such a condition would not be desirable, because it could not be possible unless we all became identical mollycoddles. Nevertheless, there has been a general and substantial accord between the President and Congress, not only in matters of primary importance but in the consideration of many questions of policy and detail. There has been an unbroken practice and habit of consultation, a spirit of mutual cooperation, and a larger measure of accord than I can recall in all my service. [Applause.]

This all being true, and known to all men who care to know the truth, why this constant reiteration on the part of certain writers and certain newspapers that Congress and the President are at loggerheads, accompanied on the part of a portion of the press with the suggestion that the President must proceed to assume a dictatorship over Congress or all will be lost, including honor?

There are two general reasons—one professional political, and representing a variety of impulses; the other very practical, though also divisible into various lines of thought and purpose.

Of the professional political phases of the attempt to create the impression that Congress and the President are at loggerheads, one, at least, has had no particularly sinister motive. It grows out of the hankering for excitement, the irksomeness of quietude, a desire to have something snappy to write about. Certain gentlemen of the pen and of the press would have a distressing time of it if all went smoothly and there was an effective statute against stringing the public and drawing the long bow. There just must be something doing; and if the fields of fact afford no excitement, it must be found in the realms of fancy and imagination.

The motives back of some of this misrepresentation of the relations between the Executive and the Congress are not so innocent and inoffensive as those I have just mentioned. They find their inspiration in the exigencies of personal and party politics, largely the former. Since the beginnings of organized government there has been a certain class of people who have imagined that the way to personal favor and preferment at the hands of those in position of authority was to arouse distrust, to magnify differences, to create friction, to pose as special friends and champions by bearing false witness, by fomenting trouble. The English language has a number of uncomplimentary titles for gentlemen of this ilk which it is not necessary for me to quote.

Then, of course, there are always the exigencies, the impulses, and the temptations of party politics. Nothing would serve the purposes of a political campaign better than to create the impression of a lack of party harmony, cooperation, and solidarity. There is always the hope that sufficient reiteration may be accepted as proof and that constant hammering may tend to create at least a semblance of the friction proclaimed as existing.

So much for the professional political influences behind the effort to make it appear that the President is at loggerheads with the Congress. Even more important, because better organized, and infinitely better provisioned and provided, are those forces and influences which endeavor to create this impression because they are opposed to legislation or policies approved by the Congress and particularly by the House. There are those who fondly hope, by an anvil chorus of persistent reiteration, to create, in a limited degree, at least, the lack of cooperation and the difference of opinion which they persistently insist already exists. While these influences have a variety of differences with the Congress, the present mainsprings of this croaking chorus are those who disagree with the view of the House of Representatives touching the soldiers' bonus and relative to the Army and the Navy.

The antibonus campaign of certain metropolitan papers has given us the finest example we have yet had as to the length to which some people are willing to go in a campaign of misrepresentation. They advised the House to turn its back on pledges that had been solemnly made by a large majority of the Members, or on their behalf by their party associates, in harmony with the expressed view of the people. They assumed, without leave or authority, to declare Executive views on a measure relative to which the President very properly refrained from committing himself one way or the other. The vote in the House, whereby approximately four-fifths of those present gave their approval to the measure, ought to be quite sufficient answer to these journals, unless they are prepared, as I presume some of them are, to indict the Congress, at least the House, as a whole.

And then there is that comparatively small but very active, very positive, and very persistent class who may always be found advocating the largest establishments and appropriations for military and naval purposes that anybody may suggest. They have not approved the House appropriations for the Military Establishment, and therefore we are told, frantically or solemnly, as the case may be, that the President does not approve what we have done.

I leave to these folks a monopoly of assuming to report the President's position on these matters, but I venture the assertion that the President's view with regard to the Military Establishment is much more nearly in harmony with the action which has been taken by the House than it is with the attitude of the majority of the newspapers and newspaper writers who have assumed to know and to promulgate his views.

We are soon to take up the naval bill, and again we shall hear the anvil chorus of assertion that we are proposing to wreck the Navy and that we are entirely out of harmony with the President in what we are proposing to do. The committee in framing this bill, after very considerable consultation with those in the House who have experience and responsibility, has had two major objectives: First and foremost, that of maintaining in fighting trim and in condition for prompt action a Navy on the seas of the size and strength we are authorized and justified in maintaining under the terms of our agreement relative to the limitation of naval armaments. Second, the committee has had in mind the fact that as we proposed and become a party to an agreement limiting armaments and intended and expected to reduce naval expenditure it is our duty and our obligation to uphold the hand of the President and of the administration and emphasize the splendid work that has been accomplished by giving visible and practical evidence of at least a portion of this great accomplishment through a very substantial reduction of the cost of the Naval Establishment. [Applause.]

Unfortunately, through the pressure of selfish local interests, which have been operating for many years but which had a riotous carnival of extravagant influence during the war, a large part of our Navy is ashore. It is a lamentably backward and unassuming village along our coast line that has not its naval base or station, that has not its grappling hooks on the National Treasury through the naval bill. There may be some question as to the relative size of navies afloat, but there is no manner of question about the size of navies ashore. We far outrank and outclass them all.

Of course, every community wants to keep its navy yard and its naval base, its dry docks, its shops and its anchorages, its snug harbors, and its placid shore stations for the naval personnel not essential to the ships at sea, but we can not yield to these persuasive influences if we are to do our duty to the people in reducing expenditures or to the administration in reflecting their splendid work in the practical terms of appropriations. [Applause.]

The committee believes it has provided an adequate force in men and officers. I am inclined to the opinion that it has made sufficient provision in men, and am quite certain that it has provided liberally for officers. Let this not be forgotten: That those who are insisting upon very material increases above those provided in this bill are, if they are informed, doing so, not to provide adequate forces at sea or adequate reserves but in order to maintain unnecessary forces and establishments on land, a dry and well anchored navy.

No, Mr. Chairman; the President and Congress are not at loggerheads. There is a spirit and a purpose of cooperation; frequent consultations are the order of the day. The President's recommendations and the party program have been carried out or are in process of accomplishment. It has met with presidential approval so far as completed, and I have no doubt will continue to as perfected. Both the military and naval bills will, I have no doubt, receive presidential approval as they shall be agreed upon between the two Houses. Congress will see to it that, while preserving a thoroughly efficient and adequate Navy, there shall be no failure to reflect in the naval bill the splendid work of the administration in the Conference on Limitation of Armament.

In the closing days of the session, as we shall wind up and perfect the program, these assertions and prophesies of lack of party harmony and cooperation will prove silly enough. I am only referring to them briefly now, in the midst of the active work of the session, in order to reassure those good folks at home who may have been misled or disturbed and who have not understood the influences that have spread abroad the disturbing misinformation with regard to the relations between the President and the Congress. I assure them that all goes well; that the Congress and the President are cooperating in the spirit of accommodation, adjusting differing views, if any develop, and working in harmony to the completion of the program which we confidently expect will serve the best interests of the American people and meet with their approval. [Applause, the Republican Members rising.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its chief clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9979) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs."

ADDITIONAL HOSPITAL FACILITIES FOR EX-SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is sweet to see brethren dwell together in unity [applause], and I have taken these few moments in order to contribute my mite toward the harmony of the majority party, or rather to emphasize the harmony which exists between the Executive and Republican majority in the legislative branches. [Laughter.] In order to find the beginnings of this harmony we need go no further back than the passage of the Army bill in the last Congress, when the Congress insisted upon adhering to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], reducing the Army to 150,000 men, and the President signed the bill although he had fought the Byrnes amendment, but sent us word that he had no doubt that a little later he would come back and ask Congress to increase the number. Of course, he did not come, because he had proceeded upon a false basis. He had an idea that they could not get the soldiers out of the Army.

Another evidence of that harmony is to be found in the President's annual message delivered to Congress at the beginning of this session, in December last, in which, turning to the Republican side of the Chamber, he emphasized his belief in party Government and party responsibility and in a very delicate but notwithstanding very feeling manner indicated what he thought of those who had joined with the Democrats and voted as they did on the surtax proposition. [Laughter and applause.] Now, of course, until the gentleman from Wyoming spoke, the whole country believed and had the right to believe that there were very sharp differences between the majority party of the Congress and the Executive on the present Army bill. If there is no difference between the President and the Congress, then there is a very woeful and distressing difference between the President and his own Secretary of War. If there does not exist difference of sentiment, a pronounced and marked difference of sentiment, between the President and the majority party of the Congress on the naval program, then there is a distressing difference, such as would ordinarily break up a Cabinet, existing between the President and his own Secretary of the Navy. Do you mean to tell me that with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, in their demands for a larger Army than Congress has indicated it would give, and a larger Navy than it seems disposed to give—do you mean to tell me that the President is standing with the Congress and not his own Cabinet officers? I do not believe it, Mr. Chairman.

The President made another recommendation in an unofficial way. He said that if you want to pass a bonus bill, put a sales tax in. What became of that proposition, and why? [Applause.] Was there no difference between the President and the Republican Members of Congress on that?

The President in his annual message, in December, recommended on the tariff that they give him substantially the power to make it. What has become of that? What has become of the tariff, anyhow? [Applause.] That was one of the first things we started on here when this Congress began.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. GARNER. I wonder if it is because of some of the matters he speaks of that the President authorizes the statement that he does not propose to defend this Congress at the coming election? [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is undoubtedly true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Gentlemen, to all reasoning men there would seem to be no other conclusion to be drawn except that drawn by my friend from Texas. The gentleman from Wyoming, however, is a reasoning man, and I do not know whether he cares to state any opinion about that or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONTAGUE. In line with the harmonious hostilities just discussed by the gentleman from Wyoming, may I ask the gentleman from Tennessee what he thinks of the statement of General Pershing, Chief of Staff, which appears in the papers this morning, as to the personnel of the Army, wherein the number fixed by the House and by the Chief of Staff widely differ? What does the gentleman think of the press, largely composed of Republican papers, declaring that the President is popular but the Congress is very unpopular with the country?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As to the statement of General Pershing about the matter, I would assume that General Pershing would not issue any statement that did not have the approval of the Secretary of War, and I certainly should regard it as a very remarkable thing if the Secretary of War, a member of the President's Cabinet, were urging a proposition that the President himself was opposed to.

Of course, the other suggestion as to what the press is carrying about the President being popular and the Congress not popular, that is very delicate ground for me to tread upon. [Laughter.] There is so much jealousy and envy and enmity on the majority side about that matter that I hesitate to trench upon it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does the gentleman recall a delicate intimation by the President of his opinion of the farm bloc, that is working for the agricultural interests?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As contained in the message by the President delivered here last December? Yes; I remember the soft and gentle way in which the President proceeded to take the hide off of those gentlemen who had voted right on the surtax matter. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems very remarkable that the majority leader should feel it his bounden duty on one day to lecture the House—which proceeded very promptly to show him what they thought of his lecture—on the matter of maintaining the Budget [laughter], and then on the following or the next day feel it necessary to lecture the Republican press of the country [applause] because of the fact that the press is publishing the news of the day. [Laughter.] There are certain papers surely that do not misrepresent the attitude of the President of the United States. I can not believe, for instance, that the Washington Post under any circumstances would misrepresent the attitude of the President of the United States or his feeling toward the Congress, or that it would permit anything to get into its columns which did not reflect the President's views, and you will recall just about two or three weeks ago there came to the Washington Post from the houseboat owned by the owner of the Post, down in Florida, upon which boat the President was a guest——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. One more minute.

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There came to the Post a message which, in substance, advised that the President had gotten extremely tired of a number of things that were going on among the Republicans in Congress, and evidently in answer to the suggestion that there was going to be an effort to pursue him down there by some of the members of the majority party and have a conference with him on the bonus bill, he sent the message back through the Washington Post that he did not want anything to do with them. [Applause, the Democratic Members rising.]

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be notified at the expiration of 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I regret exceedingly that to-day, with this bill pending before the House, the majority leader [Mr. MONDELL] saw fit to take up the time of the House with a political speech. In my judgment, this measure is nearer to the hearts of the American people than any other piece of legislation which has been brought into this Congress. [Applause.] As a member of the committee I would not waste my time during the consideration of a measure of this character by discussing politics. There is no politics in this bill. It has a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The legislation is written for the purpose of taking care of the disabled veterans who followed the victorious American Army in the World War. [Applause.] I do not believe there is a man or a woman in the United States who, if permitted to make a choice of any piece of legislation for speedy and favorable action by this House, would not say that the first duty of the American Congress is to take every care possible of the disabled and wounded soldiers in the American Army. [Applause.] And that is the purpose of this bill. I recommend it for passage, as has done every member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds who has given thorough consideration to the provisions in this bill.

I do not believe there will be any objection to the passage of the measure. It is true that in the bill there is a change of policy as to the construction of the hospitals provided for in the bill. I believe that change of policy is wise and to the best interests of the country and to the best interests of the disabled veterans, because under the policy of concentrating all the power of construction and alteration and repair of the hospitals in the Veterans' Bureau I believe a better system of hospitals will be more speedily built up for the care of these men than under the present law. It has been shown by the hearings before the committee that there is immediate need for the construction of many hospitals to take care of the disabled men. The applications that have come in from all parts of the country for hospital treatment have been in excess of all the estimates that were made by the Public Health Service and by the other departments of the Government. A great many of our former service men are broken in health. Their nerves are shattered; in many cases their minds have been affected, where there is an especial need for immediate hospitals to care for them; and it is the purpose of this bill—the committee acting upon the advice of the Veterans' Bureau, the Public Health Service, the officers of the American Legion, and all those who are familiar with the condition of the ex-service men the country over—this bill is drawn for the purpose of meeting those conditions and giving immediate aid to those veterans of the World War. God knows there is need of it. Let us pass this bill and put immediately on foot the construction of those hospitals, so that these men can have the immediate treatment that they deserve.

There is an authorization of an appropriation of $17,000,000 carried in this bill. The committee after careful hearings is of the opinion that this $17,000,000 is actually needed now. Those who came before the committee asked for a little larger amount than the $17,000,000, but the committee finds that a great many of these hospitals in some parts of the country can be built on Government land, and that it will not be necessary to make appropriations to buy the land, and consequently the committee is of opinion that the $17,000,000 will meet every requirement that is now pending before the Government to take care of the disabled men.

So far as I can see, there is not a single objection that can be raised against the bill. No man or woman in the country, as I said before, will deny to the disabled service men the full protection of the Government. It is the Government's first duty to care for the disabled soldier who lost his health and his strength in defense of our flag, and the sum of money authorized in this bill, only $17,000,000, is indeed a paltry sum when compared to the hundreds of millions that the Congress almost daily appropriates for the other activities of the Government.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question, for information?

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAZARO. While these hospitals are under construction will the Government make ample provision to take care of these disabled men in private hospitals, so that they will not lack treatment?

Mr. CANTRILL. I will say to the gentleman that if he will read the report he will find in it the statement that there are 9,000 disabled men who are now in private contract hospitals, and that situation, to speak candidly and frankly, is a disgrace to the American Government, that we have to contract out our disabled veterans, to be at the mercy of the greed of those who run private hospitals. That is the purpose of this bill, to do away with private hospitals and to have Government hospitals where the United States Government can give the very best that can be had in the land, and give it early, to every disabled soldier in the American Army. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. I will further say to the gentleman that I fully agree with him and am heartily in favor of the bill. Two years ago I spoke on the floor of this House and told the Congress then that we were not making sufficient provision for these disabled men. But what I am interested in at the present time is this: I would like to see these men taken care of properly in private hospitals until these new hospitals are constructed.

Mr. CANTRILL. I will say to the gentleman that I have no doubt the Veterans' Bureau will do everything it can to take care of them under present conditions, but under the present conditions the Veterans' Bureau can not properly take care of them because the Government does not own the hospital facilities that it needs and desires.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. As a matter of fact, in the beginning does not the gentleman think that these cases, many of which are due to nervous disturbance, could have been very much better taken care of if there had been a general hospitalization distributed among the States, so that the soldier boys of Delaware, for instance, could have been cared for among their own people, and the soldier boys of California could have been cared for among their own people?

Mr. CANTRILL. I will say to the gentleman from Delaware that that is probably true, but those things are in the past. Congress to-day is considering only this bill which is before the House, which, in the judgment of the committee, is the best bill that could be drawn to meet present conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CANTRILL. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the bill will unanimously pass the House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] is recognized.

Mr. LOWREY. Before the gentleman from Kentucky begins, will he yield for a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. LOWREY. Of course, we are all in favor of providing liberally for the veterans, but I think the last report we had from the bureau was to the effect that there were about 7,000 beds not in use and available at that time. Were they in the contract hospitals, or where were they? I want to get into the RECORD an explanation of that.

Mr. LANGLEY. As I recall it, some of them were in the contract hospitals and some in other institutions, like soldiers' homes; but the trouble about that has always been that the beds referred to were not the kind of beds needed for the particular class of patients who are most in need of treatment at this time; that is, to tubercular and nervous and mental cases.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. The beds which were available were for medical and surgical cases mainly, and the cases that most urgently require hospitalization are nervous and tubercular.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is correct. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be notified when I have used 10 minutes, after answering these questions.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question, in view of his statement as to the need being for hospitals for tubercular patients.

Mr. LANGLEY. And nervous and mental cases.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Is it not a fact that the appropriation made a year ago carried $18,600,000 for hospitals for tubercular patients?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; not for these alone.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. And that the tubercular hospital facilities which should have been provided under that bill have not been provided yet; and not only that, but not even the location, at least for the one in New York, has been agreed upon up to this time?

Mr. LANGLEY. Most of that money has been expended. The question as to the wisdom of all of the expenditures is a subject that I would prefer not to discuss, because other gentlemen have indicated to me that they desire to discuss it, and I have promised to yield time to them.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I am heartily in favor of the bill or of any provision that will tend to the benefit of these ex-soldiers.

Mr. LANGLEY. I heartily concur in the statement made by my colleague who preceded me [Mr. CANTRILL] that the first consideration should be given to our disabled soldiers. That is our highest duty, and that is why I said the other day that I regretted that under the arrangement we could not pass the hospital bill before we passed the bonus bill.

Reference has already been made to the necessity for additional money. It was originally estimated that it would take $85,000,000 to complete the hospital-building program. That was the estimate of the Public Health Service. If this bill is passed it will total a little less than $42,000,000, or less than half of the amount that was originally estimated by the Public Health Service as necessary.

In the hearings something was said about divided jurisdiction, and it will probably bob up again before this debate is over. One of the great troubles we have had in the administration of the affairs of our Government has been that there has been too much duplication of work. It will be contended that we are creating two building jurisdictions. It is true that the Supervising Architect has control of the plans and specifications and construction of post-office buildings, which I hope we will be erecting in the very near future. [Applause.] But he does not draw plans or supervise the construction of all of the buildings for some of the departments. He does not draw the plans and specifications for the buildings for the Army and Navy and some of the buildings for the Interior and State Departments. I am not questioning his capacity. No one can. That is not the point. This is a new situation with which we are now confronted, created largely by the Sweet Act. I think if there is any foundation for the idea that this bill will create a divided building jurisdiction, I wish to say that I would rather see a divided building jurisdiction than a divided hospital jurisdiction. [Applause.] That is what has been the trouble we have had all along. At one time I think we found five or more jurisdictions acting more or less independently of one another in finding hospitals for these sick soldiers. There were State institutions, contract institutions, institutions under the Public Health Service, institutions under the War Risk, soldiers' home institutions, St. Elizabeth Asylum, and so forth.

To repeat somewhat, your Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I have the honor to be the chairman, has held numerous exhaustive investigations of this whole hospitalization situation. The Public Health Service during the last Congress thoroughly considered the matter and advised the committee that it would require $85,000,000 to complete the hospitalization program which they had mapped out. Of course, that was a sum too enormous to be considered at that time in view of existing conditions, although I introduced a bill for the purpose of bringing about a full discussion of the situation. After many hearings, in which the American Legion, Public Health Service, the War Risk Insurance Bureau, and many other high public officials were heard, it was decided that the sum of $18,600,000 would be sufficient to meet the immediate needs for hospitalization purposes. A bill reported by the committee which, as amended, carried that amount of money was reported and passed. This money was placed under a hospitalization board headed by Doctor White. I have no criticism to make on the distribution of that fund, but, having talked frequently with the President of the United States on the subject, I know that it is his most earnest desire that the hospitalization of the boys in serious condition should be hastened as much as possible, and he thought that a number of existing institutions could be prepared and enlarged and made available for hospitalization within a very short time, while to build new hospitals it would take a much longer time, as you gentlemen know. That experiment was tried. In some respects it was successful; in other respects it was not. A good many of these buildings were nonfireproof and unsuited to the hospitalization of certain classes of cases. The President, as you gentlemen will remember, first appointed the Dawes Commission to ascertain from an executive standpoint exactly what the situation was. This commission made its recommendations.

The President later on appointed the White Commission, as heretofore indicated, to administer the fund carried in our bill of the last Congress. Recently he appointed another commission, and that commission approved unanimously the bill which I recently introduced, providing that this additional sum authorized by the bill now under consideration should be controlled by the Director of the Veterans' Bureau under the President's direct supervision. I will insert in the RECORD a copy of that resolution of the commission, which was personally approved by the President. I will also insert a letter which I have received within the past few days from the President heartily agreeing in the phraseology of that bill and urging its speedy enactment. I think that the controlling factor in the mind of the President, as well as the last commission, headed by General Sawyer, in reaching the conclusion that these functions should all be consolidated under the director of the bureau, subject to the President's supervision, was the provisions of section 9 of the Sweet Act, which confer absolutely upon the Director of the Veterans' Bureau the duty of hospitalizing all of our disabled ex-service men, and that greater expedition could be accomplished by this consolidation than by having a divided jurisdiction between an independent bureau, responsible directly to the President, and another department in the matter of drawing plans and specifications and building. In other words, that it would be much more expeditious to have a divided building jurisdiction than it would be to have a divided hospitalization jurisdiction.

Of course, as you gentlemen well know, the hospital situation is growing worse all the time, and more so than was at first anticipated. There were on the 1st of last month in hospitals of various classes 30,879 patients. The analysis of different classes of patients in these hospitals and nature of the hospitals was set forth fully in the committee's report, and I need not go into detail in this matter at present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the Sweet bill, known as the Veterans' Bureau act, it is provided that the President may transfer certain hospitals from the Public Health Service to the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. But that the personnel and officers transferred shall retain their rank, grade, and all the rights they now have under the Public Health Service.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. How is that situation affected by the provisions of this bill?

Mr. LANGLEY. Section 9 of the Sweet bill transfers the whole hospitalization question to the Veterans' Bureau and directs the director of that bureau to have entire control and jurisdiction of it, and that is one reason why——

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman is a little mistaken in interpreting that act. It provides that the Veterans' Bureau shall be responsible for the hospitalization——

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; that is the same thing, in substance.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the hospitals thus far have been under the jurisdiction and control of the Public Health Service, and the Public Health Service physicians are now in charge. They have requested the President to transfer some 60 of these hospitals to the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am coming to that in a moment. I am glad the gentleman brought it up.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to know what effect will the passage of this bill have on the Sweet bill, which gave authority for the officers to hold their rank and grade under the Public Health Service?

Mr. LANGLEY. That is an administrative matter, but I feel authorized in saying that an Executive order will shortly be promulgated by the President transferring these 60 hospitals under the Public Health Service to the Veterans' Bureau, and I do not think it will affect the status of these officers at all.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. For a brief question.

Mr. DENISON. I would like for the chairman of the committee to tell the House where this money is needed and where it is going to be spent and what for.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman will read the bill——

Mr. DENISON. I have read the bill, but it is in general terms, and I want to know the facts.

Mr. LANGLEY. It is left with the President and the head of the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. DENISON. I know that; but is not the House entitled to information as to where the money will be needed and where it is going to be spent?

Mr. LANGLEY. The hearings show that, and a bulletin has been issued giving the zones or districts. I can not in a 10-minute speech give gentlemen all that information, and besides I can not tell in advance what an executive authority is going to do pursuant to a discretionary power conferred by an act of Congress not yet passed.

Mr. DENISON. But the gentleman is asking us to pass this bill, and I am going to vote for it, but I think the House is entitled to know where the work is going to be done and where the money is going to be spent.

Mr. LANGLEY. In various sections of the country. I can not tell the names of the places where the hospitals will be located, but I could tell you where I think they should be located. It is to be left to the discretion of the director of the bureau subject to the supervision of the President. We must lodge responsibility somewhere, and I am in favor of eliminating any doubt as to where that responsibility is. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. Is it going to be used in building new hospitals or in repairing old ones?

Mr. LANGLEY. Under the terms of the bill it covers both. If there is any doubt about that I am perfectly willing to amend it so that it does cover both.

Mr. DENISON. What is going to be done?

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman will have to ask the director and the President of the United States.

Mr. DENISON. I am sorry that the chairman has no information to give the House.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not think that statement is quite justified. I have given a lot of information, even if gentlemen do fail to see it. That is not my fault.

I have here a letter from the President containing but a few lines, and before I have it read I wish to say that the President appointed a hospitalization board, which was the third, the first being the Dawes Commission and then the White Commission and then this third board, and this third board unanimously recommended the bill which is now before you.

On this 11th day of February, 1922, at a meeting of the Federal Board of Hospitalization, House bill 10864 was carefully considered and the following recommendations, expressed in the form of resolutions, were unanimously adopted:

Be it resolved, That it is the sense of this board and that it recommends to Congress immediate legislation authorizing an appropriation of $17,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, the amount to be in addition to appropriations now available or heretofore made under authorization contained in the act approved March 4, 1921, entitled "An act providing additional hospital facilities for patients of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Division of Rehabilitation, and for other purposes," to be expended in accordance with and for the purposes authorized by said act, except that the money expended and the work to be done as provided in said act be under the direction and supervision of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board, and it so recommends, that all hospitals hereafter erected shall be constructed of fireproof type, and that the location and nature thereof, whether for the treatment of tuberculous, neuropsychiatric, or general medical and surgical cases, shall be determined by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board, and it so recommends, that in the construction of new hospitals or dispensaries, or in the alteration, remodeling, or repair of all hospitals or dispensaries heretofore or hereafter constructed, the President may determine the manner in which such construction, alteration, remodeling, or repairing may be done, and he is authorized to require the architectural, engineering, constructing, or other forces of any of the departments of the Government to do or assist in such work.

Unanimously adopted.

Present: C. E. Sawyer, C. R. Forbes, M. W. Ireland, E. R. Stitt, C. C. Pierce, for Public Health Service; Wm. A. White, Chas. H. Burke.

Approved:

WARREN G. HARDING.

The President approved of it. Somebody suggested that the President had signed it without knowing what it was, and some even suggested that they did not know whether it was his signature, but let that go for what it is worth. I went, in company with Senator FERNALD, chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to see the President to discuss this matter, and he heartily concurred in the provisions of this bill. At his request I sent him a copy of the bill and report, and I will ask the Clerk to read in my time the letter I received from the President. He does not attempt to dictate to the House what it shall do, but this is his reply when we asked him directly whether the bill was in the shape he wanted it.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 22, 1922.

Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN LANGLEY: I had yours of yesterday inclosing copy of H. R. 10864, together with a copy of the report of your committee to the House. Apparently the bill is acceptable as drawn and provides the agencies for promptly carrying out the purposes of the bill. I quite agree about the desirability of its early enactment.

Very truly yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will.

Mr. SWING. I agree with the gentleman in all that he says about the duplication of organization. I want the gentleman's opinion as chairman as to the duplication of hospitals. Under the first appropriation made by Congress of $18,600,000 a hospital was located in Palo Alto in California. Now, it is intended, according to the information I have, to locate, if this bill passes, another hospital within 30 miles of the hospital at Palo Alto at Livermore. So there will be two hospitals in the northern part of California 30 miles apart and none in Lower California, 600 miles long, where there ought to be a tubercular hospital.

Mr. LANGLEY. Let me say that I never heard of it until the gentleman mentioned it. It is not the intention of the committee to do anything of that kind. In the bill of the last Congress, of which I was the author, we fixed the zones; but it was stricken out in the Senate. We thought then and think now there ought to be a tubercular hospital in southern California, and I shall help the gentleman in any way I can to bring it about.

Gentlemen of the House, this bill has been carefully considered. We have spent a great deal of time on it. It is a unanimous report of the committee. The American Legion indorses it, and so does the administration, and I hope you will help pass it without any amendment changing the material purposes of the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has occupied 17 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I can not enter upon a discussion of the merits of this bill without first expressing my own thanks and that of all ex-service men to the committee for reporting out this measure. In the time allotted to me I am going to discuss the situation as it exists in the State of New York.

Last year here Congress passed an appropriation for $18,600,000. That money was to be expended for tubercular, neuropsychiatric, and surgical hospitals, to be built by the White committee under the Treasury Department. Several Members of the House from New York went to the White committee and pointed out that an emergency existed there for the care and treatment of tuberculars and neuropsychiatrics. That was over one year ago, and up to the present time the White committee has not even purchased the ground for a tubercular hospital in the State of New York. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. They admitted a year ago that the emergency existed and they set aside $1,000,000 to build a tubercular hospital. That amount of money is still on hand for that purpose, but the ground has not even been bought and we are no nearer relief for the tubercular veterans than we were 12 months ago. I want to be fair and just in all my remarks concerning what the White committee have done and what they have failed to do, but it is obvious that they have been guilty of criminal negligence in the State of New York in failing to act promptly or at all. During all this time our tuberculars have been kept at Fox Hill and in other hospitals not fit to take care of that disease; hundreds of them are there to-day, and many have died from tuberculosis due to the fact that this committee has failed to provide a proper hospital for them.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. KINDRED. Is it not true that, according to a recent authoritative report from Colonel Wickersham, the chief of the hospitalization committee of the American Legion, there are at present in the State of New York, farmed out, over 2,000 neuropsychiatric and tubercular cases?

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman has his figures somewhat too high.

Mr. KINDRED. Those are the figures given me by Colonel Wickersham.

Mr. FISH. Colonel Wickersham is not always accurate in his statements, nor is he chairman of the hospitalization committee of the American Legion. He is one of the members of that committee. I regret very much to inform the gentleman that it is often the case that men who hold responsible positions in the Legion in their enthusiasm make statements that are inaccurate, and even go to lengths that are absolutely unwarranted in making out that Congress is not liberal toward the disabled soldiers.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What is the reason that the White committee, which has all of the money on hand, has failed to act for this length of time when there is a need for them to act?

Mr. FISH. The White committee unfortunately meets only from time to time. It was an emergency committee, but they have failed to function as such; and, as I said before, the proof is that they have not got one single hospital ready for occupancy by the veterans of the World War. There are 80 beds in one hospital, but that is all. Other hospitals have been promised, but are not ready for occupancy by ex-service men, and they do not occupy those beds in spite of the fact that the White committee writes the word "conpleted" opposite the names of these hospitals. It is due to the failure of the White committee that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds turned over to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau the power to select the new sites and to build the new hospitals, hoping that they would be constructed as an emergency proposition and contracted for by large builders and constructed within eight months instead of being passed out by degrees under the purchase-and-hire system and not completed when promised. The whole record of the White committee is a record of broken promises—of promises made and then broken and then extended to be broken again. [Applause.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] referred to a member of the Legion, and I think it is only fair to Congress to say that there is a great amount of misrepresentation to the public as to what Congress has done for the disabled men. I understand that the gentleman whose name the gentleman from New York mentioned persuaded the superintendent of schools in New York to get all of the school children in that city to write to their Congressmen here protesting that they had not fulfilled their duty and obligations to the disabled men. An act of that kind is worse than any sort of Bolshevism, because it undermines the faith and the confidence of the younger generation, and especially of aliens, in the gratitude and liberality of Congress toward the disabled veterans. Congress has appropriated more funds for our veterans than any other nation, and they are to-day receiving bigger compensation and better treatment than that afforded by any nation in the World War. Every request made for the disabled has been met willingly and gladly. We have appropriated approximately one billion and a half for our disabled and we are paying out daily a million and a quarter. It is the duty of Democrats and Republicans alike to go home and tell the people that Congress at no time has failed to look after the disabled, nor will they fail to look after them liberally in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. KINDRED. Does not the gentleman know that the consultants on hospitalization in the Treasury Department through the statement of one of its officials to me personally made the statement that they are negotiating on behalf of tubercular patients for the Levi P. Morton farm at sea level on the Hudson River, when within 15 miles from it there is an ideal location at an altitude of 2,000 feet in the Catskill Mountains?

Mr. FISH. I will say to the gentleman that although that is in my district the proposition has been turned down, and quite properly so. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes an authorization for an appropriation of $17,000,000. The bill previously passed carried an appropriation of $18,600,000. Prior to that the act of March 3, 1919, carried something like $9,000,000. When this committee in the last Congress began the investigation of the hospital question the appropriation of $9,000,000 was already available for use. Under the recommendation of the committee, at a later date, the bill for $18,600,000 was passed. That money has been allocated. I need not take the time now to mention the locations or the method of its distribution. In the bill brought from the committee to the House and passed unanimously by the House we recommended a zoning plan, with certain kinds of hospitals in the different portions of the country. That provision was removed from the bill in the Senate and the matter was left entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, who under his committee of consultants decided upon the location and the amount for each hospital. They decided whether the building should be a new hospital or should be some existing hospital remodeled or a building purchased for that purpose.

This bill as it stands now proposes a $17,000,000 authorization but leaves the determination of the kind of hospital, whether new or old, practically at the unrestricted discretion of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. Of course, it says under the direction of the President, but we all know full well that the President would not have the time or opportunity to go into all the details and he would act largely upon the recommendation of the director of the bureau in this particular.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. So to make clear the purpose of the bill and in response to the query of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], I say that this bill places the question of the kind of building, the location of the building, substantially at the discretion of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. Now I will yield to the gentleman very gladly.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I thank the gentleman for his patience.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I want to ask the gentleman a question relative to the construction of the language on the first page, beginning with the fourth line therein, "is hereby authorized to provide additional hospitals," and so forth, "by construction on sites now owned by the Government," and so forth. Now, is the money authorized here limited to the construction of new buildings, or can you, under the language of this bill, buy buildings suitable for hospital purposes which are in existence?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I think you can do either. You can accept gifts also, and under the terms of section 2 the matter of buildings constructed will be practically under the control of the director of the bureau, with the President giving the direction. Of course, the director will approve the plans and submit the proposition.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Is the gentleman sure this language permits the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, with the approval of the President, to purchase buildings in existence? It seems to me the language here limits the use of money for the construction of buildings.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I leave that to the chairman of the committee; but I will say it was the understanding that the director had practically unlimited discretion.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is, to use the money for the construction of buildings or to use the money to buy buildings already constructed?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If the gentleman will read section 2, I think he will find that question quite fully answered.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman will permit me a second, that question has been raised before with me and also before the committee, and I have talked with the Director of the Veterans' Bureau regarding it, and there is not any doubt that he has the power under this bill that covers what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Is it the purpose of the committee to give the director power to use some of this money to buy buildings already constructed?

Mr. LANGLEY. If suitable for hospitals——

Mr. RAMSEYER. I doubt whether the language of this bill would permit the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to use the money authorized to purchase buildings already constructed.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to ask the gentleman for some information, because I am sure he has given this hospital proposition a great deal of study, perhaps as much as any man in the House. Is it the gentleman's idea that the Director of the Bureau under this bill, either section 1 or section 2, has the right to expend some of this money for the enlargement of existing hospitals?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I think so.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Under section 2 it says:

That the construction of new hospitals or dispensaries or the alteration, remodeling, or repair.

Does the gentleman think under the word "alteration" there the director would have the right to enlarge existing hospitals?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That is the understanding of the committee.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The reason I ask that, and I am sure the gentleman will agree with me, is that in view of the need of these hospitals the quickest way to get the hospitals for these boys is to enlarge the existing hospitals, and I was anxious to know about that proposition.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That is the view the committee took of this proposition, as I understand it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. In regard to the $18,000,000 of which the gentleman spoke, in the allocation of that was there any for the enlargement of existing hospitals?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will say to the gentleman personally——

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] has a tabulation of the allocation of that allotment which would explain better to the gentleman at a glance and answer the question fully.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman knows from a study of the hospitals, but take the question of the hospital at Dawsonsprings, where the hospital has been completed at a cost of $2,250,000. Now, the overhead charges have been taken care of and every dollar expended there would be for additional beds, and all they would have to do would be to connect up the plumbing and lights and other things, and you have the beds ready.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I must decline to yield except for a brief question.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does this statement show the number of beds that have been made available under this appropriation of $18,000,000?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. It does at a glance, and I would be very glad to have the gentleman look at it.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman intend to put it in the RECORD?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I might get unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD. If there is no objection I would be glad to insert in the RECORD this statement for the information of members of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

This leaves the balance as a reserve in case we are not able to build within the allotment that we have made so that all institutions shall be completed within provisions of 384.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I must now complete the statement I have in mind, because my time is passing very swiftly. Let me say this: There was not the slightest disagreement among the members of the committee as to the appropriation of the amount of $17,000,000 in full. Just a word as to the need. We have been told by the Committee on Appropriations, and we learn from official reports, that there are now something over 7,000 vacant beds available for the use of disabled soldiers.

In the hearings that question was brought out; the director was asked why he needed this additional appropriation with that number of vacant beds available. He desires, he said, to vacate the places now held in contract hospitals; he desires to remove men so far as possible from private hospitals where they are now located and place them, as largely as possible, in hospitals owned, controlled, and operated by the Government itself. Now, when these additional buildings are constructed and ready for use, many of those soldiers in the contract hospitals or in private hospitals will be transferred to the Government hospitals, under the direction and control of the Veterans' Bureau.

Now, let me invite your attention to section 2 for a moment, because I think the language of that section as it stands here will lead to a conclusion that the committee does not desire to reach. Let me read the language as it stands:

SEC. 2. That the construction of new hospitals or dispensaries, or the alteration, remodeling, or repair of all hospitals or dispensaries heretofore or hereafter constructed, shall be done in such manner as the President may determine, and he is authorized to require the architectural, engineering, constructing, or other forces of any of the departments of the Government to do or assist in such work.

That language, I believe, would bring under the control of this act all Government hospitals of every description. I do not think the committee intended to do that. I think the committee intends that the hospitals under the Veterans' Bureau shall be designated alone by the terms of this section, and hence I would suggest that a modification of the language in this form might cure that difficulty, namely, "That the construction of new hospitals or dispensaries for the treatment of the patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau, or the alteration, remodeling, or repair of all such hospitals or dispensaries heretofore constructed or hereafter constructed under this act." Then there will be no question about it. We will have removed that doubt, and I believe that at the proper time it would be wise for us to make some such modification as this.

Now, with reference to the matter of the business principle involved. There were differences of opinion as to the building operations. Some thought that the use of existing building facilities through the Treasury Department should be utilized instead of practically creating a new agency for building operations. Let the hospital board and the director decide what kind of hospitals should be built, where they should be built, and then let the Secretary of the Treasury build them accordingly. By that plan we would avoid all waste and duplication. The funds could then be accounted for through regular channels with efficiency and economy in the highest degree.

Upon this point there were some differences of opinion. But the committee, regardless of differences of opinion upon this or any other point, stands for the enactment of the bill in suitable form as speedily as possible in order that increased hospital facilities may be provided promptly.

At present hospitalization for disabled veterans is the urgent demand. In the near future, however, the necessities will rapidly increase with respect to the need of many of these veterans for homelike accommodations.

As we plan for hospitalization now as the urgent need of the hour, we should also incorporate in our plans wise provisions for future demands. The Federal and State homes for soldiers of the various wars will be needed in the near future, and we should plan accordingly. We can do much now in the line of economy by taking this fact into consideration. As we plan for the present, therefore, we should also plan for the future.

The Director of the Veterans' Bureau is required under the law to carry tremendous responsibilities. He will meet untold complications in providing suitably for the veterans under his charge.

Our work should simplify matters as far as possible and gradually develop the facilities that will be needed in the future. During the past two years your committee has sought to apply this principle, and during that time it has effected economies approximating $50,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER]. [Applause.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as this bill vitally affects my disabled comrades of the World War I have scrutinized it very carefully, because I believe it is a measure which will have a very far-reaching effect in the solution of the great problem before the country in connection with taking care of these disabled soldiers—men to whom the country owes a lasting debt of gratitude. I think the bill as a whole is extremely well drawn. [Applause.] There was in my mind at first thought some slight objection or likelihood of objection to section 2, but after giving the matter very thorough consideration and discussing it with many who have given it a very close study, I have decided that is the most important and most meritorious clause in the entire bill.

The secret of success in this work is centralization. This hospitalization work must be placed under the care of the Veterans' Bureau, which is charged with the entire program of hospitalization in order to give effect to the desires of the Congress and carry out the program with the least possible friction. Of course, I do not desire at this time to do more than to merely touch upon one particular phase of this bill, which I believe is of vital importance, particularly to my section of California. We are not, out in southern California, from where I come, going to say that any particular location should or ought to be considered in preference to any other for a hospital, but I do want it to go into the RECORD that 65 per cent of all tubercular and neuropyschiatric cases in the State coming under the Veterans' Bureau exist or are situated in southern California. The last appropriation was spent, and I think quite properly, in Palo Alto, which is in the so-called San Francisco Bay section. In southern California at this time there are three contending locations for one of these new hospitals, and I want them to have full opportunity to present their claims before those whose duty it shall be to decide upon locations before any decisions are reached.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman mean to say that 65 per cent of all the tubercular patients under the jurisdiction of the bureau, or simply of those in California?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Only those that are in California, but on account of our salubrious climate there we have a higher percentage of disabled ex-service men than any other section of the country. I am glad that my colleague directed that inquiry to me.

The locations to which I refer are located in southern California. One is at Monrovia in my district, the other is at the National Soldiers Home, at Sawtelle, and the third is at Arrowhead Springs, near San Bernardino.

Now, not only in my own section, but throughout the country, there will likely be a disposition—in localities seeking the location of these hospitals, to contribute the land, and that will mean a great reduction in the expense of putting into operation these plants. Free locations or sites should not alone be the determining factor. There are also many locations like that at the National Soldiers' Home, at Sawtelle, where the land is owned by the Government, or at Arrowhead, where it is leased under very favorable conditions to the Government. Any new hospital built in California should be located in the south, where the majority of the patients are located, where facilities are now lacking, and where the climate can not be equaled, especially for tubercular cases. The city of Monrovia has peculiar advantages in this respect.

This is a very liberal bill, and it is going, in my mind, to largely solve this great problem. These men to-day who are located in private hospitals are not receiving the attention which they should receive. The Government is being in many cases charged exorbitant rates for very inferior service, and it will be impossible to remedy these conditions until the Government embarks upon a thoroughly considered scheme of hospitalization. I am very glad indeed that the bill has been drafted in the manner in which it has. It is extremely simple. I, therefore, feel that every Member of this House should, and will, give it his united support. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], a member of the committee.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall want five minutes. I shall take only a minute. I am glad this bill is before the House for consideration to-day. I am one of those who thought this bill ought to have been taken up before the bonus bill—that mongrel that I voted for, and I want to say that I am not at all proud of the vote that I cast for it. This pending bill has afforded me more personal pleasure than any bill that I have ever participated in framing since I have been a Member of this House.

Congress has been abused and criticized for its alleged lack of attention to those of our boys who came back from across the seas disabled. I am very glad to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], himself an ex-service man with a splendid record, defend the Congress from these accusations. Congress has been liberal, or it attempted to be liberal, in its appropriations for the care of the sick and afflicted soldiers. This bill will go very far toward relieving the condition that will stress upon the country for many years to come.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. What would the gentleman think about the advisability of expending this money for the future needs of the soldier, as well as at the present time, in building these hospitals in such a way that they could be used as soldiers' homes in 10 or 15 or 20 years from to-day?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, when this Government builds these magnificent hospitals I think they will be available for use for many years to come, and I think they will be suitable and so constructed that they be used for the purpose the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Let me suggest that a hospital like a hospital for the insane, which is the class of hospitals that is very much needed now, would not be adaptable for a soldiers' home.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, I can not say as to that, but they can be utilized in some way permanently.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time, expressing the hope that this bill will receive, as I believe it ought to receive, the unanimous support of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, yesterday I made a few remarks in which I incidentally, merely as a matter of jest, referred to a story which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] related to me concerning a trip made by himself and Mr. TINCHER to Pennsylvania in hunt of prosperity. My remarks were merely a jest. I did not incorporate them in my revised remarks. But it seems the distinguished and important statesman from Kansas became very much offended at those remarks and proceeded to make a speech upon the floor of this House in which he stated that I had introduced a bill in aid of an impending strike in this country; and he even went so far as to say that I ought not to be allowed the postal facilities of this Government.

That bill does not contain a single reference to any strike. The bill simply provides for an appropriation of $600,000 to relieve suffering humanity among the miners wherever it is needed, or so much of that sum as may be required for that purpose, and the distribution of that fund, as provided by the bill, is to be under the direction of the President of the United States. It seems that the gentleman from Kansas is not willing to trust his own President with the distribution of funds to relieve want and distress.

Why, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] did not become offended at my remarks. He has too much sense to do so. [Laughter.] And, besides, Mr. WILLIAMS is a gentleman. Sometimes I have thought—I hope it is not true, and I do not charge it—that it is now the closed season in some districts in Kansas for sending gentlemen to Congress. [Laughter.]

Why should not those mining people be relieved of suffering as well as foreigners? I have never advocated a strike in my life, and his statements to that effect are absolutely and unqualifiedly false. I do not believe in strikes where they can possibly be avoided, and I have never advocated violence in any strike, but believe disputes should be settled by conference and conciliation if possible. And yet because I introduced a bill to relieve starving children and hungry women, and requested in writing the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for a hearing upon that bill, and thought possibly the chairman did not receive the first communication, if the postal facilities in this country are in the condition as described by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS], under the administration of Mr. Hays, and to make sure that the chairman received my request, I registered the letter and asked for a receipt, which I received. Because of this offense the distinguished gentleman from Kansas says that I am not even entitled to a receipt, and should be denied the postal facilities of this Government.

No doubt the gentleman from Kansas probably believes he is the greatest statesman ever sent to Congress from that State. No doubt the gentleman will admit it, for he really looks wiser than Solomon in all his glory. [Laughter.] The gentleman is obsessed with the idea that he is a great and important statesman; but he evidently mistakes corpulence and noise for statesmanship. [Laughter.]

Now, personally I like the gentleman. [Laughter.] You know, it is said, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." [Laughter.] I do not think that he ought to have made such remarks about me as he did. I am willing to prod Republicans, and I do it. If I can, I will romp upon them with hobnail shoes. But I am not going to wantonly and knowingly insult a man on the floor of this House because I do not happen to agree with his peculiar ideas.

Why, the Republicans are now holding an investigation of the mining situation before the Republican Committee on Labor. I presume that the gentleman from Kansas will next arise in his seat and charge that the Committee on Labor is in favor of a strike because it is investigating the condition of the suffering coal miners. That would be about as sensible as the charge that the gentleman made against me. The gentleman from Kansas is one of these agriculturalists who makes his money in town and spends it on the farm, and is in great love with the farmers of Kansas. Why, I believe it would be a sight for the gods and men to see him making a campaign for reelection on a Kansas sway-back pony, wearing a broad-brimmed hat—Mr. TINCHER, not the pony [laughter]—and telling the farmers how much he admires them. If I were to be as uncharitable as he is, I suppose, because he has advocated bills for the relief of farmers, with which, with all deference to the distinguished gentleman I agree, it would be as fair to charge the gentleman with being in the position of trying to organize a strike among the farmers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], a member of the committee.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, if congressional thought and action were always so in accord and agreement with the sentiment of the people as in the case of the present desire for proper provision for adequate hospitalization of disabled ex-service men, I think it would be well for the country. There has been some unjust and ill-advised criticism of Congress in this regard. Generally speaking, there has been congressional ardor rather than congressional apathy.

It seems likely that we should have made much better progress in this matter if the advice given to Congress in a communication from the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. GLASS, on December 5, 1919, had been heeded. He evidently anticipated some of the delay which has occurred, and realized also the length of time required to prepare for proper care of the disabled soldiers. He recommended an appropriation of $85,000,000 for this purpose. I mention this merely as a part of the history of proposed legislation of this character.

At present we have before us a bill providing for $17,000,000, and I feel that there will be little, if any, opposition to the main purpose of this measure.

In the consideration of this particular bill and the one of last year providing for $18,600,000, a commendable spirit and a desire for prompt action have been reflected in the deliberations of the committee from which this measure emanates. There have been no legislative Gordian knots of red tape to be cut. These two measures, dealing with this important subject of governmental endeavor, have been brought to the floor of the House with dispatch and quickly considered. Such delays as may have occurred have been administrative and not legislative.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. LANHAM. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Is it not true that the committee might have brought in the bill quite a while ago if executive officers had found it possible to report to the committee with such information as we desired from them?

Mr. LANHAM. The statement of my colleague on the committee is quite correct, and whenever there has been delay of any kind in the committee it has been attributable to the request from those in charge of administration that they might give further data for consideration concerning desirable features which they wished to suggest.

Before this bill was introduced, as stated by the gentleman from Nebraska, we appropriated approximately $27,000,000 for this laudable purpose. This is indicative of the spirit which has animated both the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Congress itself. It seems, however, that, due perhaps to that interdepartmental jealousy which sometimes exists here at the Capital in the administration of congressional acts, there has been some delay.

The bill which we formerly passed, carrying $18,600,000 for hospital purposes, authorized the expenditures thereunder to be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. We placed in his hands the proper authority in order that the power of action might be concentrated and results quickly obtained.

There have been also some interdepartmental jealousies with reference to this particular bill, as manifested in the hearings which many of you have read. The Treasury Department, having an authorized agency of the Government in matters of construction, has felt that perhaps its authority was being impaired and its usefulness questioned by the effort to transfer this responsibility to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. And there has been a controversy also in the testimony of witnesses before us with reference to the relative merits of a contract system and one of purchase and hire. But I think there has been in the minds of those gentlemen also, as in the minds of the members of the committee, the desire for expeditious action toward proper hospitalization.

Why has the committee suggested the transfer of this authority to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau? In the first place, I want to call your attention to two recommendations which were made in this regard. Mr. Hanford MacNider, the national commander of the American Legion, appeared in person before the committee, and I quote the following from his testimony:

The American Legion hopes that if and when Congress acts upon H. R. 8791, a bill to appropriate $16,000,000 for further hospital construction, that the appropriation will be made to the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau. This for the reason that he is solely responsible to-day for the hospital care and treatment of beneficiaries of the United States Veterans' Bureau. He receives all the criticism, but lacks authority and funds to properly equip the United States Veterans' Bureau to carry on this work. This is not necessarily an indictment of the Treasury Department, nor is it intended to convey the impression that the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is better able to build hospitals, but made only in a spirit of fairness and equity for the reason, as stated above, that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau is responsible, therefore he should have the opportunity to carry on his work unhampered by divided authority and endless red tape.

The amount mentioned, $16,000,000, was increased to $17,000,000 in the bill as finally reported.

We had before us also the resolutions which were adopted by the Federal Board of Hospitalization at its meeting on February 11, 1922, from which I quote the following:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board and that it recommends to Congress immediate legislation authorizing an appropriation of $16,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, the amount to be in addition to appropriations now available or heretofore made under authorization contained in the act approved March 4, 1921, entitled "An act providing additional hospital facilities for patients of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Division of Rehabilitation, and for other purposes," to be expended in accordance with and for the purposes authorized by said act, except that the money expended and the work to be done as provided in said act be under the direction and supervision of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board, and it so recommends, that all hospitals hereafter erected shall be constructed of fireproof type, and that the location and nature thereof, whether for the treatment of tuberculous, neuropsychiatric, or general medical and surgical cases, shall be determined by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President.

And this report has the approval of the President. As stated by the commander of the American Legion, I do not take it that the approval of this suggestion by the President is intended as any criticism of the Secretary of the Treasury in his administration of the funds which were placed at his disposal.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Briefly, yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am interested to know the attitude of the gentleman and the members of the committee relative to whether or not the Veterans' Bureau has a suitable force for constructive purposes?

Mr. LANHAM. I was just coming to that.

Mr. TREADWAY. Thank you.

Mr. LANHAM. I want to say, gentlemen, that despite these two recommendations I have some doubt of the wisdom of this suggestion.

We are all inspired by the same commendable impulse, but all subject in our zeal to the possibility of erroneous judgment. As intimated by the query of the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Veterans' Bureau has no suitable force for construction purposes. Certainly it is the desire of all of us to avoid whenever possible and practical the additional expense of a duplication of functions. This is one prime consideration which prompted the Budget legislation. Of course, we are interested primarily in results and in some action that will lead to them effectively and expeditiously, and I feel sure that each of us is willing to make some sacrifice of individual opinion if necessary to bring about such a consummation. The report of the Federal Board of Hospitalization from which I have quoted contains this additional expression:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board, and it so recommends, that in the construction of new hospitals or dispensaries, or in the alteration, remodeling, or repair of all hospitals or dispensaries heretofore or hereafter constructed, the President may determine the manner in which such construction, alteration, remodeling, or repairing may be done, and he is authorized to require the architectural, engineering, constructing, or other forces of any of the departments of the Government to do or assist in such work.

So, believing that in the Treasury Department we have organized in the Government at the present time an agency whose business it is to construct buildings, the original proposal of section 2 of this bill was modified to read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the construction of new hospitals or dispensaries, or the alteration, remodeling, or repair of all hospitals or dispensaries heretofore or hereafter constructed shall be done in such manner as the President may determine, and he is authorized to require the architectural, engineering, constructing, or other forces of any of the departments of the Government to do or assist in such work.

It seems to me that under the terms of this section, and in order to avoid duplication, both of effort and expenditure, and to prevent the unnecessary establishment of further agencies for constructing buildings, it is a reasonable inference that the President will avail himself of the means already at hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

By unanimous consent Mr. HAYDEN and Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen may have the privilege of extending remarks in the RECORD on this bill for the next 10 days.

Mr. MANN. That can not be done in committee.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman is correct. In the stress of the moment I overlooked that point.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am a member of the committee that reported out this bill providing additional hospitalization for our disabled soldiers. I enthusiastically supported the bill in the committee, and I am just as enthusiastic for its passage. The disabled soldiers of the Republic are the Nation's wards and are entitled to the most tender solicitude and most generous support of the Nation. The most illustrious pages of our country's history are those which record the care and liberality which our Nation has shown its brave defenders in times of stress and storm. In my opinion, the thing that has inspired the American soldier to perform such brilliant feats of valor in every war in our country's history has been the consciousness that if harm befall him in his country's service a grateful Government will provide for him and his dependents.

Mr. Chairman, we have always been generous to our soldiers, and that fact is the chief asset and glory of the Republic. Whenever, if ever, we change our policy of caring for our soldiers and their dependents, we will violate the spirit of patriotism and destroy the bulwark that has rendered our country secure to itself and invincible to its enemies. [Applause.] I not only favor generous provisions for the disabled soldiers of the World War and their dependents but I favor it for the disabled veterans and their dependents of all our wars.

In an editorial in a recent issue of the National Tribune our attention was called to the painful fact that the veterans of the Civil War are passing to the great beyond at the appalling rate of more than 2,000 per month, so that in a few brief years none of these old battle-scarred heroes will remain to testify "in the flesh" to the greatest crisis in our Nation's history. During the short month of February, according to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, 2,164 Civil War veterans passed away and 1,922 widows, making a total of 4,068, or more than 50,000 for the calendar year 1922. As a result of age and infirmity not one of these veterans is able to perform manual or other labor, and they should not be required so to do. Every one of them should now be on the pension roll at a rate of at least $75 per month, and their widows at the rate of $50 per month; and the Invalid Pensions Committee and this Congress will be derelict in the performance of their duties if this session is permitted to adjourn without such action. Any less amount will not be sufficient to provide the comforts to which they are entitled.

The last Congress properly gave to the soldiers of the Spanish-American War a pensionable status. I favor increasing their rate also as their age advances and their disabilities require.

Despite administrative handicaps, and the ramifications of red tape, the United States spent over a billion and a half dollars in relief for veterans of the World War from October 6, 1917, to February 1, 1922. In a report issued by Director Forbes, of the Veterans' Bureau, this amount was applied as follows: Vocational training, $226,293,259.70; insurance, $294,621,689.83; compensation, $310,149,892.17; allotments, $300,947,327.60; allowance, $282,107,540.78; medical and hospital services, $105,655,210.91; administrative, $47,561,869.53; total, $1,567,336,790.52.

The bonus bill, which has just passed the House, contemplates in its various processes an expenditure of $4,000,000,000. In addition to this contemplated expenditure the Government is now spending approximately one million a day for relief purposes for the veterans of the World War. For the next fiscal year a sum has already been authorized for this purpose which will approximate four hundred million. The figures to which I have just referred do not include assumed liabilities of the Government to owners of war-risk insurance policies which amounts to $860,154,493. Neither do they include the $60 bonus paid to our ex-service men upon their discharge, which totaled $256,239,900. The $18,600,000 authorized by Congress for the construction of additional hospitals is also not included in the figures just given. The report of Director Forbes shows conclusively that the United States has been far the most generous of all the nations in the treatment of its ex-service men. For total permanent disability Great Britain paid her ex-service men annually per capita $376.48; Canada, $540; France, $314; Italy, $55.44; whereas the United States has paid its soldiers annually per capita $1,200, or $100 per month. In addition to this, Uncle Sam was more generous than any of the other nations to the families and dependents of soldiers while they were absent in the military or naval service. France allowed the dependents of her soldiers during the war period $50.15 per year; Great Britain, $202.36; Italy, $11.24; while the United States allowed $360, or $30 per month. The United States has approved for vocational training 303,276 and 104,923 are still in training. England, under the labor ministry's scheme, has approved 58,000 ex-service men for training, and only 24,000 are still in training. In the language of Director Forbes—

the United States has spent as much as both France and Great Britain combined for benefits in favor of disabled ex-service men, despite the fact that the casualties of France and Great Britain were far greater.

And in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to say that no patriotic American regrets a single solitary dollar that has been expended for our disabled ex-service men; on the contrary, we are proud of the magnificent showing we have made. And the great concern of the entire citizenship of this Nation to-day is that the dependents of those who made the supreme sacrifice in the military and naval service and those who are handicapped as a result of disabilities incurred in such service shall have the very best that the Nation affords. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED].

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I first want to join with my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], himself a distinguished ex-service man, in expressing my utter condemnation and contempt of any propaganda which would try to place Congress in a false light in making the slightest suggestion that Congress had not at all times been willing to liberally appropriate a sufficient sum for the alleviation of the suffering of the sick and disabled veterans of the World War.

A brief survey of some of the facts and statistics with reference to the hospitalization system and conditions since the middle of the World War up to the present time will convince every Member of the House of the urgency of the appropriation proposed by the pending bill.

I want to say in perfect good faith and with no intention of criticizing the principle of the bill that the appropriations provided herein do not go half far enough. I believe I shall be able to prove this by a survey of the facts respecting the number of ex-service men who will be, according to all reliable actuaries of the Government, in need, in urgent need, of treatment during the next four to six years.

In the first place, we are all made aware by the intelligent report accompanying the pending bill that the number of ex-service men and women under treatment as of date February 23, 1922, was approximately 30,800. Of this total number—and this is a pertinent fact to which I now invite special attention—4,200 neuropsychiatric cases, including all classifications of nervous and insane persons, are unable to secure hospital treatment in Government-owned and Government-controlled hospitals. I am not going into any arraignment of the improper and unscientific way in which these unfortunate ex-service men have been treated. There are, however, many well-founded proofs of the fact that there has accompanied this system of "farming out" some of the vilest commercialism that was ever known in the treatment of human beings. That constitutes one of the facts that would suggest urgency here.

The same general proposition applies to a large number of tubercular cases. In other words, there are over 9,000 tubercular and neuropsychiatric cases which are unable to be accommodated in Government-owned and Government-controlled hospitals, there being 4,200 neuropsychiatric cases and over 4,800 medical and surgical and tubercular cases.

There has been a misleading statement put out by well-meaning men to the effect that there are several thousand vacant beds owned and controlled by the Government. If that be true, and I accept it as being true, those beds are vacant in that class of hospitals which treat medical and surgical cases, but, as has been pointed out, our main and urgent need is for hospitals for the treatment of 9,000 neuropsychiatric and tubercular cases, nearly one-third of the total that are disabled and sick among the ex-service men. According to a letter addressed to me very recently by Colonel Forbes, the Director of the Veterans' Bureau—and I desire here to make that letter and some other letters bearing on the subject a matter of record—he points out that there will be in the near future 36,000 cases of all classifications which will need hospitalization. The appropriation—$18,600,000—which the Sixty-sixth Congress made over one year ago provided for approximately 6,000 beds. It is the delay, the inexcusable delay, upon the part of the consultants on hospitalization of the Treasury Department which has brought criticism upon the motives of the American people and the motives of this Congress. They have delayed inexcusably and incompetently. I have already said something with reference to that, with no personal feeling toward any one of the consultants of the hospital committee, but from a knowledge of the facts which are set forth by the records which they show in their own department. Reference has been made by my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], to the fact that although $1,000,000 was appropriated for the specific purpose in the State of New York to provide a tubercular hospital, the so-called progress report—indeed, a misnomer—of the consultants on hospitalization of the Treasury Department indicates a blank under the heading of "Remarks" with regard to the $1,000,000 appropriation for the metropolitan district of New York. They record a perfect blank under the heading "Remarks." They say as to the condition of the plans that "preliminary studies are under way" more than one year since the $18,600,000 became available.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York, Doctor KINDRED, five minutes.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in conclusion I wish to say that there will be required to properly and humanely care for our ex-service men and women, veterans of the World War, not only 6,200 beds as is proposed in the program of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to which I have referred, but there will be also required in the next four to six years a sufficient number of hospital beds to take the place of from ten to eleven thousand hospital beds which will have to be abandoned because of the disgraceful conditions of the old hospital buildings in which ten to eleven thousand ex-service men and women are now quartered. In addition to those ten or eleven thousand hospital beds which would be required in the near future—that is, within about four to six years—there will be required, in addition to the program of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau for 6,200 beds, about 10,000 beds in order to care for the increase in the number of tubercular and neuropsychiatric cases. These two classes of cases have increased during the last year and a half at the rate of 25 per cent every 18 months. There are now about 10,000 of these two classifications who most urgently need hospitalization, and, therefore, if they increase in the next year or in the next year and a half in the same ratio as they have increased during the last year and a half, we will require additional hospital facilities for 10,000 more of those classifications.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINDRED. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. What about the cure of these neuropsychiatric cases. Are they curable?

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman has asked an important and a pertinent question. The answer to that question bears upon the essential conditions involved in providing quickly proper hospital facilities, because it is a well-known medical fact that if mental and nervous cases, and the same applies to tubercular cases, are not treated intensively during the first year or two after the inception of their disease they are hopeless and have no chance for cure. Therefore it is all the more sad, from a humane and scientific and economic point of view, that we should not be able to give these two classes of patients as rapidly as possible the proper hospital conditions under which they can be cured.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. The gentleman made the statement that the peak of the load had not yet been reached.

Mr. KINDRED. The peak of the load with reference to certain classifications, namely, in the classification of epilepsy, which constitutes a large number of the neuropsychiatric cases, will not be reached for 25 years, because the epilepsy has been brought about by injuries to the skull and to the brain, and in the process of repair of a broken skull there may not be any symptoms of epilepsy for 20 to 25 years.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINDRED. Yes.

Mr. SIEGEL. The gentleman is making these statements as an expert and not as a Member of Congress?

Mr. KINDRED. I am making them in both capacities.

Mr. SIEGEL. The reason I ask that question is that I would like the Members of the House to understand the gentleman is personally familiar with the statements that he is making.

Mr. KINDRED. That is very courteous of the gentleman. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have always been in favor of some constructive, efficient hospital system. We are providing here a mere driblet which will tide us over temporarily. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, Dr. H. S. Cumming, recommended to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. CARTER GLASS, who transmitted the recommendation to the Sixty-sixth Congress, that there should be appropriated $85,000,000 to properly develop the hospital system which we shall need for our ex-service men. We are appropriating now, very properly, $17,000,000, and in perfect good faith I am going to suggest an amendment at the proper time to increase this amount to actually meet the needs of the sick and disabled ex-service men for the next several years.

The present needs for additional hospitals require much more than the appropriation carried in this bill, and I am confident that Congress will respond to these needs liberally, just as Congress has already liberally appropriated for hospitals and hospital facilities in the past—$10,000,000 by the Sixty-fifth Congress and $18,000,000 by the Sixty-sixth Congress, making a total, with the $17,000,000 carried in this bill, of $45,600,000 appropriated for hospitals and hospital facilities, in addition to approximately $2,000,000,000 appropriated for ex-service men's compensation, insurance, allotments, and so forth, reference to which is made here in the form of the accompanying chart and letter:

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
Washington, March 14, 1922.

Hon. JOHN J. KINDRED,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KINDRED: In accordance with your request, I am forwarding herewith statement as of January 31, 1922, showing the fiscal operations of the United States Veterans' Bureau, the former Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and the former Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

Respectfully,

C. R. FORBES, Director.

We should at once provide a hospital system that would properly care for curable and incurable ex-service men, and which will at the same time stop all this unjust criticism and impugning of the motives of Congress and of the Members who have at all times desired to pursue a policy most liberal and fair to the ex-service men. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentlemen on the other side use some time now?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad indeed to vote for the appropriations authorized by this bill, but the House and the country should not gain the impression from its passage that this will be the last expenditure necessary to properly hospitalize the ex-service men who are, or who will be, in need of this kind of care and attention. The bill carries a million dollars more than was requested by the Federal Board of Hospitalization, but this is not enough to do all that should ultimately be done. The memorandum signed by the members of that board and approved by the President on February 11, 1922, asks for only $16,000,000, but the House by this bill is allowing $17,000,000, which again demonstrates that so far as money for hospitalization is concerned it is no fault of the Congress that ample facilities have not been provided.

The Director of the Veterans' Bureau has with great vehemence and severity criticized those who have been heretofore charged with the construction of hospitals. Under this bill the director, subject to the approval of the President, is given the authority to provide additional hospital facilities for persons who served in the World War, and if he does not get satisfactory results from this $17,000,000 he must take the same dose of criticism that he has given to others in connection with hospital work, and is expected to swallow it cheerfully, because otherwise he would be unfit for the responsibilities that will be imposed upon him.

I believe the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds acted wisely in authorizing the President to supervise all new hospital construction. This will permit him to coordinate the activities of every architectural, engineering, and constructing bureau and department of the Government, thus to obtain results at the earliest possible moment. The President, as the head of the administration, ought to be able to suppress all rivalry and compel all branches of the public service to work together in harmony.

My primary object in addressing you to-day is to point out the fact that there exists in the Southwest a most serious situation in reference to a large number of ex-service men who are in immediate need of hospitalization. I want also to express the hope that the President, as soon as the funds herein authorized are available, will see that proper hospital facilities are provided to meet this situation, particularly in southern Arizona.

It may be true, as some respected medical authorities assert, that climate is of no benefit, that tuberculosis of the lungs and throat can be cured in one place as well as another, but thousands of those who suffer from that dread disease sincerely believe that a dry climate will aid in their recovery. It is universally recognized that proper care is half the battle against this malady, but notwithstanding the statements of some physicians there is much well-grounded medical opinion that the right kind of climate is beneficial in the treatment of tuberculosis. In the following statement Dr. John W. Flinn, of Prescott, Ariz., has, in my opinion, correctly set forth that which has been repeatedly demonstrated to be a fact:

As between care—that is, fresh air, good food, rest, and competent medical attention—and climate, the latter must always continue to be a secondary consideration. In the least favorable climate good care, provided the surroundings be the best obtainable, will produce much better results than the best-known climate without this care. If the patient must choose between the two, he should take the care and let the climate go, but if he be so fortunate as to be able to have them both his prospects of recovery are certainly brighter than they could be if he were compelled to depend on one alone.

The belief that climate is helpful is so widespread and so persistent that, despite any advice to the contrary, large numbers of ex-service men are coming to the Southwest each year in the hope of relief. From all parts of the United States they are moving to Colorado, New Mexico, or Arizona, and when they arrive there they demand immediate hospitalization by the Federal Government, which up to the present time can not be provided.

To demonstrate that this belief is founded on good medical authority let me quote from this book, entitled "A Handbook of Medical Climatology," by Dr. Samuel Edwin Solly, who says:

In that portion of the country known as the great Southwest, the winter climate of Colorado, northern New Mexico, and Arizona may be characterized in a phrase as cold, dry; that of New Mexico and Arizona south of latitude 35° as warm, dry; and that of the coast of southern California (west and south of the mountain ranges) as warm, moist.

Arizona affords the best desert climate of the United States, and as winter residences for health seekers it possesses the three towns of Tucson, Phoenix, and Yuma. As the entire territory of Arizona is west of the great Continental Divide and slopes steadily toward the Pacific, it is subject to a certain amount of ocean influence, not to the extent to which the winter rains in California bear witness but sufficiently to be subject between December and March to occasional rains or snows on the high plateaus and on the southwest slopes of the mountains. There are few cloudy days in Arizona, and the spring weather is usually dry.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield, briefly?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my good friend from New York.

Mr. KINDRED. May I ask the gentleman from Arizona if there is at the present time any Government hospital for tuberculosis in Arizona?

Mr. HAYDEN. There is a modern, well-constructed Public Health Service hospital at Prescott, which is now being enlarged to accommodate about 1,100 patients. Tucson has a temporary hospital conducted by the Public Health Service in lumber buildings, inflammable and unsafe, which will accommodate about 300 men. At Phoenix there is a small contract hospital which has been ordered to be closed in the near future.

Mr. KINDRED. If the gentleman will allow me to say, I fortunately spent a winter in his delightful city of Phoenix, Ariz., and have also been at Tucson, some 125 miles south of Phoenix. Tucson is at an elevation of a little over 2,000 feet. It has delightful mountain air in summer and very exhilarating air in winter, and is ideal for tubercular patients.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from New York mentioned, in the course of his remarks a few moments ago, that it was contemplated that a certain stock farm on the Hudson River be acquired for a tuberculosis hospital. I would like to have the gentleman express his opinion, as I know he is qualified to do by reason of his long medical experience, supplemented by extended travel, as to the relative merits of the location of a hospital for tuberculosis in a damp climate at sea level in New York or in Arizona at locations such as he has just described.

Mr. KINDRED. I have been informed only to-day by my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], that the proposition to take over the Governor Morton stock farm at sea level had actually been laughed out of court. The distinguished consultants on hospitalization of the Treasury Department dropped that proposition, because they knew that when it saw the light that it would be condemned.

From the standpoint of public health and medical science, with such an insane proposition to locate a tubercular hospital in a damp place where sore throat and consumption are very common, there is no comparison between Tucson and the Hudson River.

Mr. BARKLEY. What kind of a hospital is that at Fort Bayard, N. Mex.?

Mr. HAYDEN. I understand that there is a well-conducted Public Health Service hospital at Fort Bayard. I have never been there. It is located at a suitable altitude where the climatic conditions are somewhat similar to Prescott in my State, which is about 5,000 feet above sea level. In cases of tuberculosis, where the patient's heart is in no way affected, such an altitude is conceded to be of great benefit. I am informed that in perhaps half of the cases of tuberculosis there is no weakness of the heart. But where a patient's heart is in any way affected, a high altitude is not beneficial and is also liable to bring on certain nervous disorders. Consequently all tubercular persons should not be sent to high altitudes, and that is the reason why such a large number of them come to southern Arizona, where they may obtain the benefit of the dry air and a mild winter climate, and yet where altitude is sufficient to be exhilarating but not injurious to the heart.

Mr. KINDRED. An altitude like that of Tucson, Ariz., of about 2,500 feet, does not have an injurious effect on the heart or the nervous system, and is therefore ideal, because it is stimulating and the arid climate helps to kill the tubercular germs more rapidly.

Mr. HAYDEN. In that connection permit me to quote from a paper in the Transactions of the American Climatological Association, written by Dr. J. T. Eskridge, and entitled "Nervo-vascular disturbances in unacclimated persons in Colorado":

At altitudes varying from 5,000 to 8,000 feet the inconvenience of the unacclimated seems to have its origin in the increased respiratory activity, and this, in turn, leads to increased work of the heart, which, by its overwork, causes at first an active hyperemia and an irritability of the nerve centers. Later the nerve centers suffer from imperfect nutrition, induced by a poor blood supply, which results from passive hyperemia. We have, then, the "irritable weakness" of the old pathologists. After the nerve centers have become irritable neither the respiratory act nor the heart's action is performed as regularly and methodically as in the normal condition; and in consequence various unpleasant symptoms are experienced by the unacclimated. Persons possessed of considerable vigor and capable of adapting themselves to greater changes in their environments go to high altitudes and live almost as they had done at sea level, and find no appreciable inconvenience in doing so; but for those advanced in years and for those of feeble health the consequences are far different.

The need for greater hospital facilities in southern Arizona has been brought to the attention of those in authority in times past. A proposal was made only a few months ago for the sale of a fireproof hospital that had been partly constructed by certain good Christian people of Phoenix. The uncompleted building and the tract of land offered to the Government was, under any reasonable appraisement, worth $200,000. In their anxiety to help the disabled veterans they offered to turn the entire property over to the United States at a price of $165,000. This hospital could have been completed in 90 days and made available for the care and treatment of ex-service men, but nothing was done. Instead, an order has been issued that the local contract hospital shall be closed and the patients moved away.

There is also imperative need for a large permanent hospital, thoroughly fireproof in its construction, at Tucson. A larger number of veterans of the late war have voluntarily gone to Tucson than to any other city in Arizona. The existing Public Health Service hospital at Pastime Park consists of a number of wooden buildings, hastily constructed in an attempt to meet this emergency, but all who know the facts concede that much more must be done.

That the condition of many of the disabled ex-service men in Tucson is not only desperate but disgraceful to this great Republic is shown by the following newspaper article:

UNITED STATES RED TAPE LEAVES STRICKEN WAR VETS TO DIE ON STREETS OF TUCSON.

Invisible bars of official red tape and Government regulation block the gates of Pastime Park here to hundreds of tubercular veterans of the World War entitled to hospitalization and in need of expert attention.

Massed in Tucson in a common battle against the life-sapping disease are 1,200 stricken "buddies."

Two hundred and seventy-eight are now crowded together in hastily built frame hospital wards and 1-room cottages. A recent inspection showed the 6 feet-apart regulation on cot spacing was violated.

Soon the number of patients in these temporary quarters will have to be reduced to 252. Death and a summer exodus may solve the problem.

But for the 1,000 others—there is no room.

They are scattered about in cheap lodging houses, private homes, and hotels. Many have had to walk the streets and daily face denial of the care their critical conditions necessitate.

A few have some money. But their tiny savings are fast dwindling. Most of them are too ill to work. Every one is a potential emergency case.

NO ROOM IN PARK.

Yet there is no room for him at Pastime Park, the incongruously named hospital provided there for the men who helped win the war and now strive to win the battle for life.

What is more, a recent order from Major General Forbes, head of the Government Veterans' Bureau, says that no more men will be sent to the Tucson station.

And still more, the Chamber of Commerce of Tucson, with citizens of this "city of healing air," have had for a year in the hands of Washington officialdom an offer to provide a $500,000 permanent hospital, built to meet the summer heat, equipped with modern conveniences—they have offered to rent such a place to Uncle Sam, have offered to solve the problem for him, and no reply has ever been received.

PROBE BARES CONDITIONS.

Such is a summary of high lights contained in a report Ralph A. Horr, vice commander of the Disabled Veterans of the World War, will take to Washington after an investigation here in which I participated.

These statistics were provided by Claude Smith, local commander of the Disabled Veterans' organization that pioneered the fight against existing conditions. In this fight A. L. Irvin, head of the local American Legion Post, is now joined.

And supplying further data is Dr. S. H. James, commander of the hospital.

"A real emergency exists," he says. "It will grow worse in another year, and within four years the peak will be reached. By that time the temporary wooden structures may be falling to pieces."

Says Claude Smith: "I have listed the names of each man in this section entitled to hospitalization and not getting it. I am one of them, but I have a little money. I have given this to Commander Horr, together with data of what the fellows have been and are now up against."

OTHER STATIONS.

The Government has in this district tuberculosis stations at Prescott, Ariz.; at Camp Kearney, San Diego, is opening another at Livermore, Calif.; and is prepared to send tubercular veterans to a number of other camps.

"But there are other elements to meet," points out Doctor James. "Cases involving heart disturbances, asthmatic conditions, throat and nervous troubles are affected by climate or altitude of these other stations.

"In Tucson alone are all these elements overcome. The sufferers have a Tucson psychology. You can send them to San Diego or Prescott, or where you will, but they won't stay there. They feel better here and they're going to come if they have to walk."

"And they do come here, whether the Government provides for them or not," declares Irvin. "They come by freight car or on the brake-beams—but they come, and what are you going to do about it?"

Mrs. Mary Blair, secretary of the Red Cross here, personally has cared for as many as 40 cases a day.

Men have collapsed in the street while waiting for a chance in the hospital. Red tape in the Veterans' Bureau has held men weeks and months—periods when they were in dire need of attention—before they could enter Pastime Park.

"I don't know what might have happened to scores of the fellows if we hadn't been on the job to help," said Smith and Irvin in chorus. "We've dug down in our own pockets and in the public pockets. The Red Cross fund has all but been exhausted—for there have been 1,000 men around here who couldn't get in."

PASSING THE BUCK.

Who's to blame?

"The Veterans' Bureau blames the Senators, and the Senators pass it along; but we do know that the local Vet Bureau has its hands pretty well tied with red tape," Smith charges.

Officials of the local Veterans' Bureau admit the emergency. General Forbes "seems to have been misinformed," says one who can not be quoted.

Citizens of Tucson, backed by the chamber of commerce, did much toward building such places as now are provided.

While delays and red tape kept hundreds waiting about the city a "field day" was declared. Hundreds went out and threw together the temporary structures.

For 192 men there are but three showers, and there are three more for the other men in the wards. The frail cottages do not withstand the summer heat and bring only discomfort.

The only solution is a permanent and properly built hospital.

Otherwise hundreds will die from Government neglect.

WHAT TUCSON PEOPLE SAY.

TUCSON, ARIZ., March 21.—Here are opinions of those in the best position to know just how critical is the condition of Pastime Park, Government station for tubercular veterans here:

Dr. S. H. James, commander of Pastime Park: "There is a real emergency at this moment; but this is just the beginning. Next year we will have a greater influx of tubercular 'vets' than ever. This is the spring season and during the summer conditions will be at their best. Within four years the peak of the rush here will be reached. Only a large permanent hospital will solve the problem. I know the men will come here if they have to walk."

Claude Smith, Tucson commander of the Disabled Veterans of the World War: "There are more than 1,200 tubercular veterans in and around Tucson. There is room for but 252 in the hospital. The rest must get along as best they may, as I have had to do. Soon their money will be gone, and then what? The Red Cross, the American Legion, the citizens, and my own organization have fed hundreds and found rooms for them. We have fought with the heads of the Veterans' Bureau for space in the hospital. Uncle Sam, the men are here. What are you going to do about it?"

MARX DEMANDS ACTION.

(By Judge Robert S. Marx, of Cincinnati, national commander Disabled American Veterans of the World War.)

The Government must take at once some definite steps to remedy shameful conditions of the kind existing at Tucson, Ariz.

The Langley bill, now before Congress, appropriating $16,500,000 for hospital facilities, must be adopted without further delay and hospital construction started immediately.

Conditions found at Tucson are reflected in other institutions in other parts of the country. The Disabled American Veterans of the World War has dedicated itself to the task of remedying these conditions.

Certainly such statements would not be made without foundation in fact, and I trust that this publicity will result in greater efforts for immediate relief. The only true solution, however, is the construction of a thoroughly modern, well-built hospital in Tucson.

I have no desire to prolong this discussion, but I can not forbear to again quote from this work by Doctor Solly, who has long been recognized as an authority on climatology. These extracts will, I hope, give to some gentlemen in authority a better understanding of the climatic conditions in southern Arizona:

Phoenix (elevation, 1,100 feet): This town has become favorably known as a winter resort of low altitude. It is situated near the center of the great Salt River Valley about 2 miles north of that stream. The Salt River Valley is a favored region for the cultivation of fruit, as snow seldom falls and the rich alluvial bottom lands yield largely under irrigation.

The average temperature (from records for 12 years) is—for January, 49°; for July, 90°; for the year, 69°. By seasons it is as follows: Winter, 51°; spring, 67°; summer, 87°; autumn, 69°.

The average annual rainfall is 7 inches. The amount falling in each month is light, the heaviest rainfall occurring in August and December. The average annual wind movement (taken from observation for three years) is 2⅞ miles per hour. Gen. A. W. Greely says that "Phoenix is the locality where the wind is perhaps the feeblest of any point in the arid regions."

Tucson (elevation, 2,400 feet): An old Spanish grant is said to show a town here in 1553, built on the site of the Indian pueblo which is lost in the mists of tradition. Another account dates the Spanish Mission of San Xavier from 1694. At any rate, in the words of a thoughtful writer, "it is certainly of sufficient age to promise permanence."

The town is surrounded by mountains. On the north are the Santa Catalinas, east the Rincons, south the Santa Ritas, and on the west the Tucson range, with its most prominent peak—Tucson Mountain. Water is brought from the Santa Cruz River. The winter climate has been highly praised for its warmth and sunniness.

The record by season is shown in the following table, the figures for temperature and rainfall being based on the reports of the Army posts for 14 years:

Seasons.	Temperature.	Rainfall.	Relative humidity.
	Degrees.	Inches.	Per cent.
Winter	52	3.01	52
Spring	67	1.22	34
Summer	87	5.47	27
Autumn	70	2.41	32
Year	69	12.11	36

In conclusion let me repeat that when the funds authorized to be appropriated by this bill are available for expenditure, I sincerely trust that the President will direct that prompt and proper steps be taken to provide every means for the complete and adequate hospitalization of all those who have served their country in time of war and who are now in Arizona or who may hereafter come to that State seeking to have restored the health and vigor which they lost while bearing arms in defense of the honor of their country. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Frazer, the Assistant Director of the Veterans' Bureau, while in New York yesterday, made the following statement, according to the press:

New York has been badly treated; that is a fact. The State has got no hospitals; the program of decentralization that is being followed by the Government has left New York to the last in delivery of the files. This district seems to have had especially hard luck in administration. The whole district is in a turmoil and it is a fact that we have found in this office—I am not blaming anybody—evidences of total lack of efficiency.

That is the indictment which was made by the Assistant Director of the Veterans' Bureau in describing the condition in New York City. A year has elapsed and nothing has been done from a practical standpoint to send these ex-service men who are suffering from tuberculosis to a place or places having a higher climate.

A few moments ago there was some discussion on this floor as to whether these men should be sent out West or somewhere else. These veterans feel that they are entitled to hospital treatment either in Sullivan County or in the Adirondacks. I know of no reason in the world why they should not be treated in one or the other of the places that I have just mentioned.

The American Legion Weekly has said editorially this week about this situation, as follows:

AND THE DISABLED PAY.

The hospital crisis which Congress should have foreseen in 1919 is now developing fully. The disabled are now paying the penalty for the failure of the Government to realize that the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service was right when he estimated that 30,000 ex-service men would require hospital care before 1922.

A few weeks ago the Veterans' Bureau finally gave the word to close the ramshackle Fox Hills Hospital in New York. Six hundred men, many of them with tuberculosis, were patients in it when the "abandon ship" call was sounded.

Where are the 600 going? To Government hospitals? Not at all. For the most part they are being distributed among private hospitals and sanatoria, but some of them will have to pack up and go to New Mexico or California or some other Western State. Imagine sending a man suffering from tuberculosis in an advanced stage 3,000 miles away from his home and friends because no hospital facilities are available nearer!

The most tragic thing about this is that the site of the tuberculosis hospital to be established in New York under the hospital appropriation of a year ago has not even been selected yet. And it is not reassuring to know that seven other temporary war-time hospitals of the Fox Hills class must be abandoned this year. It means a further stern demand for more hospital beds and more discomfort for the disabled.

Meanwhile Congress is still considering the new Langley bill appropriating $17,000,000 for additional hospitals. If Congress reads aright the lesson of Fox Hills it will pass this measure at once.

There has been a lot of talk to the effect that Congress is to blame for inaction. Congress has appropriated the money, but the administrative officers have failed and neglected to act.

There is not a hospital in the State of New York which is in the condition which the Fox Hills Hospital at Staten Island is. It was decided a few weeks ago that the patients were to be removed, but instead of trying to remove them to hospitals in the vicinity of New York an effort is being made to shift these men—many of whom would not last a trip to the West—to thousands of miles away from New York. Properly, many of them have said that they would rather die where they are than to move away where they would not see a relative of any kind on account of the expense of travel.

There is another matter with which we are faced in New York. Our friends of the Legion, in their zealousness to obtain results, started the pupils in the public schools in a campaign of writing letters to Members of Congress. Each pupil in the public schools was asked to write to the Member of Congress representing the particular district in which he resided, to the effect that there were 20,000 to 200,000 ex-service men walking the streets of New York who could not obtain hospital treatment. As a matter of fact, we knew that was not true. There is no such condition anywhere. What was the consequence? The children went home to their parents and told them the story which had been handed out at school. The parents got the idea that that was the true condition. All over the city of New York the story was spread that Congress was neglectful in either making appropriations or trying to take care of these men. We all know that the contrary is true. No man can or would resist a description of these ex-service men appealing for hospital treatment while suffering from diseases from which they can not recover. It was wrong to plant strange thoughts in the plastic minds of these children and can not be too severely condemned.

We are going to pay our tribute to the last soldier dead coming from France this coming Sunday, in New York City. Many of them came from New York. If these men who passed away in making the supreme sacrifice could speak to the country at large and speak to this Congress, they would say that it is the duty of Congress to make this appropriation, which Congress intends to do, and to appeal to all American citizens to indorse by deed and action the words contained in an editorial of the Legion, dated March 31 and entitled:

THE NEXT MAN'S GOD.

We who were yanked out of whatever rut we happened to be in in 1917 and 1918 and sent to a cantonment and to France may have come back with a cootie or two that wouldn't delouse, but we also came back with a broader outlook. We learned, for one thing, to respect the religion of the man at our side, whatever it happened to be. We may have been Protestants or Catholics or Hebrews; it made no difference, and it made no more difference to the chaplain who was officially handed the job of being our spiritual father and brother.

The chaplains, in fact, were the exponents of this religious liberalism. Rabbi Lee J. Levinger, one of the 12 Jewish pastors assigned to the A. E. F., and a member of the Legion's ritual committee, in a recent book, "A Jewish Chaplain in France," writes this description of the chaplains of the Twenty-seventh Division assembled in their quarters following afternoons spent in burying soldier dead:

"Every evening we gathered about our grate fire and relaxed from the grim business of the day. If we had allowed ourselves to dwell on it, we would have been incapable of carrying on the work; it was so ghastly, so full of pathetic and horrible details. We sang, played checkers, argued on religion. Imagine us singing the "Darktown Strutters' Ball," or discussing the fundamental principles of Judaism and Christianity for several hours! The five of us were all of different creeds—Catholic, Baptist, Christian, Christian Scientist, and Jew."

One of the members of this group was Father Francis A. Kelly, former national chaplain of the American Legion.

Another passage from Rabbi Levinger's book merits citing in this connection:

"A Catholic priest told us briefly what we should do in case we found a dying Catholic in the hospital or on the field, with no priest at hand. Then I was asked how best the others might minister to a Jewish soldier in extremity. I repeated to them the old Hebrew confession of faith: 'Shema Yisroel adonoi elohenu adonoi echod'—'Hear, O Israel, the Lord is our God, the Lord is One.' I told them to lead the boy in reciting it, or, if necessary, just to say it for him, and the next morning when I brought down copies of the words I was deeply touched by their eagerness to know them."

This tolerance, this reciprocal respect for another's belief, is spirit of the Legion's spirit. It was not demobilized, but goes marching on as the Legion itself goes marching on to its great destiny.

But, unhappily, this spirit is not universal. Not all America went to war, so that not all America returned with a broader outlook. Outside the Legion voices have been raised in an effort to make the Legion the vehicle for religious bigotry. Not a single scrap of evidence is available to show that they are being heeded. Even the most stupid mongrel finds in time that he is barking up the wrong tree.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER].

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, there is no more pressing problem confronting the Congress than to provide for the proper and necessary hospitalization and care of our sick and wounded soldiers.

There is nothing for which Congress will be criticized and condemned more than to permit our soldiers who entered the war sound in body and mind and who came back broken in either or both to be told that we have not provided the necessary facilities for their proper care.

To assist these men in their efforts to regain their health; to assist them in their physical rehabilitation; to assist in giving them the necessary training; to become self-supporting, whenever this is possible, and if this be impossible, then to care for them, is not only our duty but a privilege.

The bill which we are considering to-day is intended to supply the necessary hospital requirements. It authorizes the President of the United States to expend, through the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, the sum of $17,000,000, to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensatory facilities for our soldiers. I hope there will not be a single Member of Congress who will vote against this bill.

On February 7, 1921, we passed a similar bill. That bill carried an authorization for the expenditure of $18,600,000 for hospitalization purposes. It is to the credit of the Congress that that bill was passed unanimously, not a single vote being reported in the negative.

It was then my privilege as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to assist in the framing of that bill, and it was again my privilege to support this bill in the committee.

When the bill was written a year ago, it was thought that the authorization was sufficient to provide the necessary housing facilities to care for all of our ex-soldiers, but we find that the number desiring and entitled to treatment is much larger than was anticipated. As a result, the housing of some of our ex-soldiers is very unsatisfactory, while others are not housed at all.

The hearings held by our committee disclose the fact that many of our patrons are being housed in all sorts of hospitals and buildings, many of which are of the temporary character; some are wooden structures, highly inflammable, and entirely unsuitable for hospital purposes. It should be said that neither Congress nor the Government desired to use these buildings, but as nothing better was available the Government was forced to do so because of the number of applicants for hospital care and treatment.

It is absolutely necessary that additional facilities be provided at the earliest possible moment.

It is gratifying to know that the Federal Board of Hospitalization has decided upon and adopted a general policy or program of hospitalization. With regard to construction the board recommends that all hospitals hereafter erected shall be constructed of the fireproof type; this is certainly desirable from every viewpoint.

The board also recommends that the nature and location, whether for the treatment of tuberculosis, neuropsychiatric, or general medical and surgical cases, shall be determined by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President.

Both of these recommendations are written into this bill, and must and should be followed. Those who are in direct and active control, and who must assume the responsibility of caring for our ex-service men, should be given discretionary powers, for they are in a far better position to know the requirements than we are here on the floor of the House.

The recommendations in the hospitalization program includes dispensaries; it is believed that a great many men who are now in hospitals, if they had out-patient treatment, would not be in hospitals. It is said that 60 per cent of our hospital population is composed of ambulatory men; that is, walking patients. The majority of the cases are tuberculosis, mental, and nervous disorders.

The establishment of modern dispensaries, where out-patient treatment can be given, which includes everything but putting a man to bed, will be a great step forward toward economy and better service to the men; and, after all, the service to the men, the deserving, disabled ex-soldier, is a matter of first consideration.

Of the expenditures of $17,000,000 authorized in this bill, it is intended that between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 shall be expended for dispensaries.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to consume the time of the House in any further discussion; I believe we all understand the bill; I believe that we all want to provide for our deserving ex-soldiers, and we are all glad to do it as quickly as possible.

Let me again express the hope that we will pass this bill to-day without a dissenting vote. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not wish to take up too much time in discussing this bill in detail, but will say briefly that, in view of the fact that this bill authorizes an appropriation of $17,000,000 for the purpose of making ready to take care of disabled ex-service men and women, I am heartily in favor of it. I hope every Member of this House will be able to see his way clear to support this measure, and I trust that the purpose for which this money is appropriated will be carried out by the responsible governmental agency without delay.

As I see it, that is the main point, which needs to be emphasized most—that is, the necessity of speedy action in carrying out the purposes of this bill.

Just here let me say that I heartily join Comrade FISH, of New York, in thanking the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for reporting out this bill.

In this connection I am forcibly reminded of the fact that $18,600,000 were provided for by Congress more than 12 months ago, and that as yet there is nothing in the way of new hospitals to show for any part of that $18,600,000 except a lot of plans and blue prints.

Of the $18,600,000 provided for by Congress in March, 1921, more than 12 months ago, $12,500,000 was to have been spent for the building of new hospitals. The other $6,100,000 was to be used for remodeling or extending existing plants. It is true that some work has been done toward remodeling or extending existing hospital facilities, but the fact remains that, of all the beds which the $18,600,000 was supposed to provide for disabled ex-service people, the only beds in the country to-day that are ready as the result of the appropriation of $18,600,000 in March, 1921, are 100 beds at Lake City, Fla., and they have been ready only since the 28th of February, 1922.

Now, my friends, that is a record of shame!

The dilatory tactics on the part of those whose duty it was to administer the expenditure of this appropriation are certainly most deplorable. In this connection let me read you a paragraph in the report of the national legislative committee of the American Legion, which report was read and adopted at the national convention of the Legion at Kansas City last November. It bears directly on this subject, and I believe it will be of interest to every Member of this House who has at heart the welfare of the disabled ex-service people, and I believe also that it will be of interest to every citizen of the Nation who has any concern for the disabled men and women who served under our colors during the World War. The paragraph to which I refer is as follows:

> The Secretary of the Treasury states that his first concern is for the disabled. If such is really the case, it is time that he devoted some attention to the problems of the disabled. Six months ago Congress appropriated $18,600,000 for the remodeling and improving of existing hospital facilities, and provided for the expenditure of $12,500,000 of this sum on the construction of five new hospitals. Although a board of hospital consultants has made recommendations as to where and how the five hospitals were to be built, the Secretary of the Treasury has taken no action upon the matter. He is probably concerned with the saving of this $12,500,000 at the expense of the disabled.

Another paragraph from the same report, which was read and adopted at the same time by the Legion in convention assembled, and which also bears directly on this same subject, is as follows:

> Six million one hundred thousand dollars of the appropriation of $18,600,000 has been allocated to remodel and improve existing facilities. Although this appropriation is six months' old, no action has been taken by the Treasury Department to expend $12,500,000 for the building of five new hospitals. This delay is deplorable in view of the urgent need for hospital facilities, particularly for neuropsychiatric and tubercular cases. The Secretary of the Treasury appointed a committee of hospital consultants. That committee has reported to the Secretary, making certain recommendations on the expenditure of the $12,500,000. The Treasury Department has taken no action. At best, it will take several years to complete these hospitals, and in the meantime our disabled comrades, suffering from diseases of the central nervous system, will continue to languish in jails, almshouses, and State insane asylums, deprived of the best care and treatment which has been repeatedly promised to them. They are unable to aid themselves. The leisurely procedure of the Treasury Department in providing these new hospital facilities is to be condemned.

That is what the report says.

Mr. MADDEN. Why does the gentleman say they are languishing in jails?

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. I was reading from a report of the legislative committee of the American Legion; and when they say that these men are languishing in these little jails, in these small places all over this country, they are telling what they know, I will have you to understand, and they would not put it in their report if it was not so.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield to me to answer that question?

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. That is very often because the State has not room for an insane man, and until room is made for these insane men in the asylum they have to keep them somewhere where they will not harm anyone, therefore they keep them in jail.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. I thank the gentleman for that comment. The statement is true. Disabled ex-service men suffering from mental trouble have languished in jail on account of the lack of hospital facilities. American Legion representatives have gotten them out of jail right here in the District of Columbia. Anyone sufficiently interested can find what the conditions are without looking very far.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. If you will not take up too much of my time.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am inclined to think, from what I have heard, that the remarks of the gentleman are not entirely without some foundation on that point.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. I thank the gentleman. It is too bad that whenever a man stands up here on the floor of Congress and makes any statement here with reference to the disabled service boys which reflects in any way upon any man connected with this administration, people want to get up here and impugn the legislative committee of the American Legion for making statements of the absolute truth. The country ought to know the truth, even though it does necessitate criticizing high-ranking administration officials.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not think I was trying to do anything of that kind?

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. I do not want to do you any injustice, but you asked me why I said they were languishing in jail, and I told you I was reading from the report of the legislative committee of the American Legion, and that if it was not so they would not have said it.

Mr. MADDEN. I accept the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alabama is very much excited.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. I heard that side remark of the gentleman from Illinois. I have every respect for the gentleman from Illinois, and with regard to his remark that I appear to be excited let me say that I think it is time to be excited. Feeling the way I do about this shameful delay on the part of the people responsible for providing facilities for the treatment of these ex-service people under the appropriation made in March, 1921, let me say it is very hard indeed to keep from appearing excited when discussing the outrageous delay which has occurred. If the Secretary of the Treasury had been a little more excited about it there would be hospitals ready for patients now in place of a lot of blue prints. [Applause.] The report shows that not even a pick has yet been stuck in the ground to start the work on the five big hospitals proposed, and in some cases the sites are not even selected yet.

The language of the paragraph just quoted is clear enough for anyone to understand. I call your attention to the wording of the last sentence wherein it flatly says that "the leisurely procedure of the Treasury Department is to be condemned."

To be perfectly frank about it, it appears to me that the failure of the Secretary of the Treasury to handle this matter with all possible speed and dispatch may well and properly be termed as absolute criminal negligence. I believe that it can be said safely, without fear of successful contradiction, that ex-service men have gone to their untimely graves as a result of this negligence.

The last paragraph of that bill providing for the sum of $18,600,000 is as follows:

> For carrying into effect the preceding paragraphs relating to additional hospital facilities there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $18,600,000 to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, of which sum not to exceed $6,100,000 shall be used for remodeling or extending existing plants.
> Approved March 4, 1921.

You will note that it says that "the sum of $18,600,000 is to be immediately available." As stated above, more than 12 months have passed and the report of the consultants on hospitalization, who were working under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shows the following facts regarding five new hospitals:

First, for a hospital at Tuskegee, Ala., for the care of negro tubercular and neuropsychiatric cases $2,250,000 was allotted on November 16, 1921, more than eight months after the appropriation was made. I find now that the bids for that hospital are "to be advertised in April, 1922." Think of that! More than 12 months have elapsed now, and the bids for the construction of the hospital not yet advertised!

Second, for a neuropsychiatric hospital at Palo Alto, Calif., $1,400,000 was allotted on November 16, 1921, and the report now shows that "bids are to be opened April 10, 1922." Think of that! More than 12 months have elapsed now, and the bids for the construction of the hospital not yet opened!

Third, for a tubercular hospital "somewhere in western Pennsylvania" $1,000,000 was allotted on November 16, 1921, and the report on that hospital is as follows: "Choice of site practically completed." Think of that! More than 12 months have elapsed now, and the site not yet selected!

Fourth, for a general hospital to be located at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., $1,000,000 was allotted November 16, 1921, and the report on that is that a "contour survey is being made." Think of that! More than 12 months have elapsed now, and they say that they are making a contour survey to decide just where to put the hospital!

Fifth, for a tubercular hospital in the metropolitan district in New York City $1,000,000 was approved November 16, 1921, and the report on this is as follows: "Preliminary studies have been made for sites under consideration, and negotiations for site pending." Think of that! More than 12 months have elapsed now, and they are still negotiating for the site!

Consider carefully the five examples as set out above, my friends, and I believe you will agree with me that the record made so far by the Secretary of the Treasury on this work is a record of shame and constitutes absolute criminal negligence!

Permit me to quote further from the report of the national legislative committee of the American Legion:

ARMY AND NAVY HOSPITAL FACILITIES.

Repeatedly, President Harding and General Sawyer have told the Congress and the people that there were from 10,000 to 12,000 beds available for the care and treatment of discharged disabled men. Undoubtedly there are some 10,000 or 12,000 beds in abandoned Army cantonments. These camps, poorly and hastily constructed, are rapidly deteriorating. They are not even suitable for housing men in the prime of health. The fire hazard is extreme. The Army and the Navy state: "Yes; we have these beds, but no personnel, nor have we authority to employ personnel to provide hospital care and treatment for beneficiaries of the Veterans' Bureau." Therefore these ten or twelve thousand beds are, in fact, "paper" beds. They exist on paper; as a matter of fact, they can not be used for the care of our disabled.

The committee of hospital consultants, appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to make recommendations on how to expend the $18,600,000 for the building of new hospitals, states that there is a need to-day of 10,000 or 12,000 beds; that after the $18,600,000 has been expended there will remain a need for some 5,000 more beds, and it recommends that the Secretary of the Treasury request of Congress an additional appropriation of $16,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury takes no action either to build new hospitals or to provide a permanent building program as his committee of hospital consultants recommends.

Note the reference in the last sentence of the extract just quoted to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury.

I want to tell you that ex-service men and women were in attendance on the floor of this last Legion convention in Kansas City from every nook and corner of this country. I want to also state that the ex-service people of this country are able to understand these things and they are intelligent enough to inform all citizens with whom they come in contact of existing conditions. They all had it plainly put before them there last November that the appropriation for the $18,600,000 was approved on March 4, 1921, and that nothing had been done about it, and this was in November, 1921. They also heard and understood that the committee of hospital consultants had told the Secretary of the Treasury that there was a need of 10,000 to 12,000 beds and that after the $18,600,000 had been expended there would remain a need for some 5,000 more beds; and these representatives of the ex-service people of this Nation also understood that the committee of hospital consultants had recommended that the Secretary of the Treasury request of Congress an additional appropriation of $16,000,000. That was in November last. They now see that the bill asking for the additional $16,000,000 which has been increased in this bill to $17,000,000, is just now being brought up on the floor of this House, and that so far as the $18,600,000 appropriation is concerned they now see that nothing has been done yet practically, and five more months have elapsed since the report referred to was adopted at the Kansas City convention.

The ex-service people all over this country, as well as all loyal American citizens who have at heart the interests of the disabled ex-service men and women, will remember that in the report of the national legislative committee of the American Legion was included this statement:

The Secretary of the Treasury takes no action either to build new hospitals or to provide a program as his committee of hospital consultants recommends.

I have quoted from the official report of the American Legion for your information, and now I wish to quote a representative of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War. The following statement was recently made by Mr. Ralph Horr, of Seattle, Wash., national vice commander of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War. This appeared in the San Francisco Chronicle about the middle of March, 1922:

Twenty-five per cent of all our cases are nervous cases—

Said Horr—

There is no provision made for such cases anywhere in the United States. In San Francisco alone there are 1,000 former service men walking the streets who, if the Government does not take care of them, must be later adjudged insane, and they will become a permanent care upon the State. These men may not be insane now, but their mental condition is such that they will become so unless they are cared for in time.

The situation in San Francisco is duplicated in every other city of the same size. There must be special treatment for cases such as this outside of State asylums where these men are now being taken.

In the tubercular cases the situation is about the same. There are not sufficient hospital facilities to care for tubercular cases. I have just been in Tucson, Ariz. There every available bed is taken in the Government's tubercular hospital. Men are piling in daily who can not be cared for. Some come by box car; some come in on the brake rods; some pay their own expenses. The order has gone out by the Federal authorities that no more men be sent there, but they are coming of their own accord, because there is no other suitable place, as they think, to go. And they can not be cared for.

In every State institution where disabled service men are cared for I have found even worse crowded conditions than in the United States Public Health Service hospitals.

And this fact is most significant: Only 3 per cent of men who go into State institutions are rehabilitated. How can a man suffering from nervous breakdown be rehabilitated in a State insane asylum? It can not be done.

The situation is desperate for thousands and thousands of splendid men who would "come back" had Congress paid any serious attention to the problem of the disabled.

You will see that this statement of Mr. Horr, an official of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, bears out the statement as quoted above from the report of the American Legion and goes to show that nothing has been done yet to relieve the situation, which was so justly criticized by the Legion last November.

In looking into this matter, trying to see what manner of man this is that President Harding has, in his own wisdom and after holding "front-porch consultations" with the "best minds" of the Nation, placed in his Cabinet as Secretary of the Treasury, we find that it is a man who, according to available information, was an officer and director in banks and insurance companies with resources of more than $800,000,000; that he was an officer and director of other corporations of known assets of more than $700,000,000; that he is the head of a family whose members have control of affairs of corporations totaling more than a billion and a half of dollars.

We see that the Mellon family is interested in between 75 and 100 big concerns of this country. One of these concerns is the Standard Steel Car Co. We have seen that the Standard Steel Car Co. was known to be war profiteers on the Government of the United States of the very worst type.

We find that another concern in which Mellon was interested is the liquor business, known as Overholt & Co., which in its warehouses a year ago had liquor worth $18,000,000.

Among other numerous concerns in which he was interested and which were engaged in the fabrication of iron and steel and other war commodities are the Aluminum Co. of America, the New York Shipbuilding Co., the Osgood-Bradley Car Co., the McClintic-Marshall Co., and the Ritter-Conley Co.

Regarding this Mr. Mellon, the Chicago Tribune, which paper, I believe, claims allegiance to the Republican Party, discusses him as follows:

Japan has a genro. It is the class of the elder statesmen. It is the dead thumb of octogenarianism upon the present. Ultra conservatism always is property and age. Uncle Andrew Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, is a man of much property. You hear that he is second or third in point of personal wealth in the United States.

Uncle Andrew Mellon is head of the American genro. President Harding merely comes up from somewhere, but Uncle Andrew Mellon always existed because what he represents and what he thinks always has existed.

The elder statesmen are against the soldier bonus. Uncle Andrew is against it because the war is over and all the values which were in danger and which have been saved are now out of danger. The soldier is an uneconomic force except when he is needed to preserve the balance and the working power of economic force. They are badly disturbed when a foreign governor general takes control of an occupied territory.

Then all ordinary laws of economic cause and effect go out of office and the soldier boy is the boy relied upon to keep the homeland functioning as it ought to function normally. Then he is invaluable, because without him all values would go to pot.

If the German soldier had been able to carry through the plans of the German military leaders, the German mark would not be a beggar on the doorstep of financial solvency, and if he had been able to do the superhuman, which was required of him, Uncle Andrew Mellon's fortune might be barely equal to a square meal.

The difference between the value of the dollar and the value of the mark is now the sacrifices made by the American soldier. He created that value. If he had not done so, it would have no value. The only reason these men of wealth have wealth is because American soldiers determined that depreciated currency should be in Germany and not in the United States.

To whom would Uncle Andrew like to pay a small percentage of his money? To the American soldier who saved him from the German tax collector or to the tax collector? Buddy, join the Legion, as your father joined the G. A. R., and impress as a political fact upon the elder generation that it is in luck, and much in luck.

Concerning Mr. Mellon's aluminum interests, Mineral Industry has furnished figures showing that the gross profits from this industry rose from $3,345,000 in 1909, before the war, to $74,250,000 in 1918, and in a report of the Republican majority of the congressional Subcommittee on Investigation of War Expenditures, Mr. Mellon's own party says of him:

The subcommittee is of the opinion that the settlement of this—the Standard Steel Car—claim constitutes a palpable fraud upon the Government.

So we find that the Secretary of the Treasury mentioned in the extracts from the American Legion report, as I have already quoted, was no other than the Hon. Andrew Mellon, the present administration's Secretary of the Treasury. In my opinion he is one of the most flagrant supergrafters of this country, and yet it is he who has the colossal nerve and unmitigated gall to pose as the Nation's first and foremost, most conspicuous, and most notorious "conscientious objector" to adjusted compensation.

By the way, let me say just here, that I have heard it said, perhaps some of you gentlemen on the Republican side of the House can tell me how true it is, that the Hon. Andrew Mellon has been more embarrassment to the present administration than any other person who is or who has been connected with the administration, except perhaps the late lamented "Boastmaster General," the Hon. Will Hays, whose passing brought such favorable comment from some of the Members of this House on both sides of the aisle.

In opposing adjusted compensation for ex-service men we hear a good deal about Mr. Mellon's desire to give first consideration to the care of the disabled. That was a pitiful bit of thin camouflage on his part and I believe the ex-service people of this country saw through it without any trouble. Regarding his concern for the disabled we have only to refer again to the fact that more than one year ago out of an appropriation of $18,600,000 there were $12,500,000 especially set aside for the building of new hospitals for the care of tubercular and neuropsychiatric patients and up to date this same Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. Andrew Mellon, who claimed to feel such a deep concern for the disabled veteran, can give no better account of his stewardship on that particular proposition than to show a lot of blue prints and a report to the effect that they are still making preliminary studies of different sites upon which to build these hospitals.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman spoke of the tuberculous cases and mental cases.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that unless these men get immediate treatment it will soon be too late to care for them?

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Yes. This money has been lying there now for a year or more, and the Secretary of the Treasury is supposed to have made provision long before now.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. With the appropriation that we have before us now and the information you have from the Legion authorities, about how long will we have to wait probably to secure the completion of hospitals under this fund, under the terms of the bill?

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. I do not know. It depends, of course, upon how that money is administered. The gentleman is on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ought to have that information; but from the failure of Mr. LANGLEY, the chairman of the committee, to answer the inquiry of Mr. DENISON a few minutes ago and from your inquiry now I am forced to the belief that the committee does not know much about what is expected to be done with this $17,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. LANGLEY. Now that the gentleman has five minutes more will he yield?

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. You have control of some time and I have only five minutes, which I need. If you will give me another minute I will yield to you for your question.

Mr. LANGLEY. I can not do that.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. All right, I am sorry, but I can not yield to you then.

Now this bill provides that the director of the Veterans' Bureau should handle this $17,000,000 under the direction of the President of the United States. There is serious question in the minds of some Members of the House as to whether or not it is wise to turn this over to the Veterans' Bureau. For my part I am willing to try the change. Certainly the Veterans' Bureau can not make a worse showing with this appropriation than has been made by the Treasury Department on the last appropriation. If the Veterans' Bureau does not make a better showing than has been made by the Secretary of the Treasury and his consultants, then the Veterans' Bureau will not be worthy of its name.

I hope to God for the sake of the suffering ex-service men and women in this country, who are and who have been languishing in almshouses, State insane asylums, contract hospitals—some of which are reported to be absolutely filthy—and in some instances in the jails of the country, that such a delay as has taken place with the $18,600,000 appropriation provided for in March, 1921, will not apply to this appropriation of $17,000,000. I hope and trust that if the Veterans' Bureau is given jurisdiction that they will be able to make a better showing than has been made by the Treasury Department. [Applause.]

I know that the Veterans' Bureau has come in for a lot of criticism. I realize, however, the immensity and complexity of the task of the Veterans' Bureau, and for my part I am inclined to withhold criticism of the bureau and the administration of its affairs and to give them every chance to make good.

Quoting from the recent address of the chairman of the rehabilitation committee of the American Legion, let me say that I think "it is to our advantage that they operate splendidly, not poorly. We are after results, not scalps."

I must say, however, that some of the criticism to which the Veterans' Bureau has been subjected has been the failure of people within the bureau to issue statements that will hold water. They should be very careful about this. The Veterans' Bureau should at all times be absolutely frank and truthful with the ex-service people of the country, with the citizens of the country, and with the Members of Congress.

Here is an illustration of what I mean: Recently I wrote to the bureau asking them if they could use to advantage certain hospital facilities which were available for immediate use in Alabama. The letter I received from the bureau in reply to my inquiry contained the following statement: "With the completion of the large hospital now under construction at Tuskegee, Ala., and the extensive improvements now under way at Augusta, Ga., it is believed that additional beds will not be needed in the State of Alabama." Now, as a matter of fact, there is no hospital "now under construction at Tuskegee, Ala." The situation regarding that particular hospital is that even though the money was appropriated in March, 1921, it was not allotted to the building of a hospital until November 16, 1921; and although $2,250,000 was allotted on November 16, 1921, for the building of this hospital at Tuskegee, the fact now is that the contract for the building of the hospital has not yet been let. The last report from the Treasury Department on that hospital was that "bids to be advertised in April, 1922."

Regarding the "extensive improvements" mentioned in the letter to me from the Veterans' Bureau as being "under way" at Augusta, Ga., let me say that the latest report from the Treasury Department says regarding the situation at Augusta that "contract awarded February 3, 1922, material reported in transit." The possible date for the completion of that work at Augusta is September, 1922.

And yet in the face of these facts some man in the Veterans' Bureau writes me a letter with the name of C. R. Forbes signed to it, to the effect additional beds will not be needed in the State of Alabama on account of the fact that "a large hospital is now under construction at Tuskegee, Ala., and extensive improvements are under way at Augusta, Ga."

With farcical statements like that coming from the Veterans' Bureau over the signature of Colonel Forbes—of course, I know that the probability is that Colonel Forbes did not sign that letter himself, but some one in the bureau signed his name to the letter—is it any wonder that the Veterans' Bureau comes in for scathing criticism? Suppose I sent that sort of a letter from the Veterans' Bureau down to Alabama, and it is turned over to a newspaper man down there, of course, any newspaper man knowing the truth about the situation would be fully justified in writing a strong article criticizing the Veterans' Bureau for trying to get away with such a crude bit of camouflage.

It may be that there is in existence a blue print for the hospital at Tuskegee, and they may call that a "hospital under construction," but I would not call it that.

For my part, I want to see the Veterans' Bureau function properly and handle its business properly, and I am not one who would direct unfair criticism at the bureau. I merely point out the foregoing example to show that the Veterans' Bureau is itself responsible for at least a part of the criticism that is directed against it. In this connection I believe the Veterans' Bureau would do well to deal with the Members of Congress and with the veterans themselves in an absolutely fair and truthful manner.

My friends, in discussing this bill on the floor here to-day the majority leader [Mr. MONDELL] took occasion to talk about the sympathetic, harmonious, and cordial relations between this Congress and the President. Speaking of harmony, I just want to recall to your minds, my friends, something that happened here on Monday last when the distinguished leader of the majority stood here and pleaded frantically until he looked as if he was going to have apoplexy any minute, and with tears streaming from his eyes cried out to the Members that they should "stand by the Budget." It was like a voice crying out in the wilderness, and his plea fell upon deaf ears. Now, I am sure he has not forgotten the spanking that the House then gave him when they voted on the appropriation for rivers and harbors last Monday. Republicans and Democrats harmonized on that occasion, but I doubt if the majority leader was able to appreciate the harmony. [Laughter.]

When that happened, I was reminded of the spectacle here last December when a special vote was taken on the surtax feature of the revenue bill. I was a new man in the House—and am still one, for that matter—but up to that time I had had an idea that the Republican leader of the Republican majority was, in the eyes of his Republican colleagues, something more than a nonentity. I remember my astonishment on that occasion when, metaphorically speaking, the House of Representatives took the letter that had been sent up here by the President regarding the surtax feature, and with that letter patched up the clothing of the majority leader, reinforcing his defense as it were, and Congress promptly and emphatically placed the toe of its boot upon that patch with a solid whack that was heard from one end of the country to the other, resounding and reverberating and echoing and reechoing from the Statue of Liberty to the Golden Gate, and from the wind-swept Great Lakes in the north to the sun-kissed shores of southern Florida. [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman from Wyoming said to-day that "good folks back home" know of the harmony that exists. He was evidently speaking then, my friends, for the benefit of the "good folks back home."

The most harmonious occasions that I have noticed here have been the times when a great many of the gentlemen on the Republican side of the House have joined with the gentlemen on the Democratic side, and they have, with one accord, taken some good wallops at the leadership of the gentleman from Wyoming. [Laughter.]

[Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama had leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I have some other matter bearing on this subject which I will extend in the RECORD, under this permission, at a later date.

[By unanimous consent Mr. Box was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Chair how much time remains on each side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] has 18 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] has 45 minutes remaining.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am in rather an awkward position. Two members of the committee have not yet spoken. I made a mistake and miscounted the time. I thought I had 10 minutes more, and I wonder if I can not get unanimous consent to have 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not see how that can be done, inasmuch as the time was fixed in the House.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman that, as far as I am concerned, if I can get 10 minutes during the 5-minute debate, I will make my remarks at that time.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I with every other Member of this House believe that the Congress should appropriate every dollar that is necessary to in any way take care of the disabled ex-service men. As has been said by some who have preceded me, the treatment that some of the disabled ex-service men have been accorded is little less than an outrage, and especially those who deserve hospital treatment. I am willing to vote for this $17,000,000, or any other amount that is necessary to build hospitals for these men. But, Mr. Chairman, I want the money that the Congress appropriates used for the purpose for which it is appropriated. I think there has been unconscionable delay not only in the hospitalization of the ex-service men but the delays by the bureau from one end of the land to the other in letting these men who are disabled know their status without writing to them day in and day out and to their Congressmen to send in additional affidavits, or by cutting them off without a word from compensation that they are receiving.

There is one provision in the bill and which runs through it to which I most positively dissent. We have been trying, or we have said that we were trying, to cut out duplication of work, to economize in all departments of the Government, and yet in this very bill, after years and years of building up in the Treasury Department an architect's office that is supposed to have and should have, if it does not have, the greatest experts in the country on building, we intend now to enter upon a new venture and make an architect's office in some other department of this Government.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Not only that, but the bill places no limitation whatever on the amount that they can expend for the new architect's office, or any other establishment they may seek to organize.

Mr. RAYBURN. None.

Mr. MADDEN. They can expend most of the appropriation for it.

Mr. RAYBURN. We will spend a great part of $17,000,000 in building up another bureau in the Government and may not have any hospitals completed in any reasonable time, if at all.

Mr. MADDEN. Exactly.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, in my time I desire to have read a letter from me to the Director of the Bureau.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARCH 28, 1922.

Col. C. R. FORBES,
Director of the Veterans' Bureau, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: So many complaints come to me of the administration of the law with reference to disabled ex-service men by the regional office at Dallas that I feel justified in calling upon you to make, at the earliest possible moment, an investigation of the treatment the disabled ex-service men are receiving from this office. Not only do these complaints come from the disabled ex-service men themselves but from citizens who have a patriotic interest in seeing that those who gave so much to the country should be taken care of as Congress, in passing the war risk legislation, intended that they should be. Men who are disabled are having their compensation either totally discontinued or cut to practically nothing by a harsh and unjustified construction of the law. I was in charge of the original war risk act and I know that it was the intent of Congress that there should be a liberal and not a harsh construction placed upon the act. These disabled ex-service men are in a bad humor, are disappointed, and have a right to be. Congress realized that these men had given so much to their country and passed the most liberal law ever enacted, believing and knowing that the country would uphold a generous compensation to them. I realize that this is the time when we should economize in every department of the Government, but I believe that it is an inhuman economy to be niggardly and closefisted with those who came out of the World War maimed and disabled. I hope that you will call attention of the head of the regional office at Dallas to the fact that many believe that this law is being given an unjustified and harsh construction by the bureau.

Sincerely yours, SAM RAYBURN.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to putting this additional burden upon the Veterans' Bureau for the simple reason that I think the Veterans' Bureau has already more work than it can attend to. I know that it has more work than it is attending to. In the last Sweet Act we provided that this Veterans' Bureau should be a separate bureau of the Government. I feared then, and I believe now, that that was a mistake. We provided for 14 regional officers, with power to make final decisions in compensation and in insurance claims. I feared then that that was a mistake, and I believe now it was a mistake, as I feel certain it has caused delay in the adjustment of claims. I take up cases with the War Risk Bureau here and they tell me that the case has been decentralized and has been sent to Dallas. More delay. I take up the case with the Dallas office and they tell me that that case has not been decentralized and that it is in Washington. We have these disabled ex-service men from one end of the country to the other who have not, three years after the war is over, had their compensation yet adjusted. It is a shame. It is an outrage, and those responsible for that kind of condition ought to be called to the bar of justice and of popular opinion. I say that the Veterans' Bureau has more to do than it is attending to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has the gentleman's attention been called to cases where ex-service men have had their compensation either decreased or totally cut off without the slightest explanation?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; without the slightest explanation or notice. I find such cases in the district that I have the honor to represent, and I would hate to put into the record of this House the mental attitude of the average disabled ex-service man in this country. He believes that the law passed by Congress, which is the most liberal one ever passed in any country in the world, should be followed by this bureau, and yet one month a man will be on one basis of compensation and the next month he will be on another basis of compensation. It seems to me that it is time that the bureau should begin to function. I have never been a critic of the Veterans' Bureau. I have been its defender. I had hoped that they would straighten these matters out, but the principal thing that they do is to send flying squads over the country to create false hopes in the minds of some disabled ex-service man and then leave them to write letters to the bureau.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, before long the bureau will straighten out these claims and give to these weary and long-suffering men what Congress intended they should have.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suppose there will be no opposition whatever to the passage of this bill. I raised a question awhile ago when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] was discussing the measure, that it seems to me is capable of raising some confusion in the administration of the war risk insurance act. When we passed what is known as the decentralizing act, the Sweet bill, changing the name of the War Risk Insurance Bureau to the Veterans' Bureau and consolidating under the bureau all of the functions that pertain to the care and treatment of ex-service men, there was a provision in the law which authorized the President to transfer certain hospitals under the jurisdiction of the Public Health Service to the Veterans' Bureau. Of course, we all understand that all of the hospitals that have been erected in the past and those that now exist in the country for the care of ex-service men have been erected and are now under the jurisdiction of the Public Health Service. It has been rumored that the President is about to issue an Executive order transferring some 60 of these hospitals from the Public Health Service to the Veterans' Bureau. We provided in the Veterans' Bureau act that whenever these hospitals are transferred from the Public Health Service to the Veterans' Bureau, the personnel of the Public Health Service which is transferred shall retain all of the rank and grade, and so forth, which they possess now as members of the Public Health Service. I do not know whether this bill makes provision for giving the Director of the Veterans' Bureau absolute control over the appointment of physicians who are to be under him in these new hospitals or not. I have been told that these hospitals that are to be constructed out of the $18,000,000 are to be upon the same basis as those which will be transferred from the Public Health Service to the Veterans' Bureau in the event they are transferred. If that is true, then all of the physicians that are to be in charge of these hospitals that are to be transferred and those that are to be erected out of the $18,000,000, while appointed by the Public Health Service, are to be under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Bureau. I would like to know whether I am correct in that interpretation.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman understand that an order has been issued transferring the hospitals from the Public Health Service to the bureau?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand that it has been issued, but I am told that it has been prepared but that the President has not actually signed it. Whether he will sign it I am unable to say, not being one of his advisers. What I am anxious about is that there shall be no more confusion or duplication in the interpretation of the law in behalf of the ex-service men. Another thing: The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has just referred to a situation which, I think, we can all testify to. I do not know just where the blame lies, but I have had numbers of cases called to my attention recently where men have had their rating and compensation suddenly reduced without any explanation whatever from the bureau as to the reason for it. There may be some justification for that, but certainly an ex-service man who has been disabled is entitled to the courtesy of a reason by the bureau whenever his compensation is reduced and he is taken from a certain rating and reduced to another rating.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Should he not have medical examination as the basis of such action?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly; but in most cases they have not done it. In many cases called to my attention men have written to the bureau itself asking why they have been taken from one basis and put onto another, and they have been able to receive no information whatever. And when we write down to the bureau and ask for that information we are not much luckier than the ex-service men in obtaining information in reference to it. I do not know where the fault lies. I do not like to say it is the director of the bureau, who, while of course he is responsible for the conduct of the bureau, is not in personal charge of all the details. As I say, I do not know where the fault lies, but certainly there ought to be enough responsibility somewhere to make the bureau give the reasons which actuated it in reducing the compensation and rating of an ex-service man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, of course my purpose is to support this bill. I have asked for this time to make an explanation for general information about another matter. Many Members of Congress have received, and are daily receiving, inquiries as to the present situation with reference to the so-called Towner-Sterling educational bill. It may be because I am a member of the Committee on Education that I received more inquiries than other gentlemen, but I know that a number of inquiries have been made of many Members on both sides of the House as to what the situation is in reference to that proposed legislation about which there is a good deal of general interest in the country. A few days ago I wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Education, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], calling attention to the fact that there had been no meeting of the Committee on Education at this session of Congress and expressed to him my opinion that there is a great deal of general interest in the country concerning the status of this legislation, and asked him whether it was his purpose to call a meeting of the committee to pass upon the legislation at this session of Congress. My letter was as follows:

MARCH 9, 1922.

Hon. S. D. FESS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. FESS: As the ranking Democrat on the Committee on Education, I write this to ask if it is your intention to call a meeting of the Committee on Education for the purpose of considering the Towner bill at this session of Congress. I respectfully request that the committee be called together for that purpose. I will thank you for the courtesy of informing me of your attitude with respect to this matter.

With high regard,
Yours very truly,
W. B. BANKHEAD.

I do not know whether you approve of the attitude expressed in the reply of the chairman of the committee, and I am not offering it for the purpose of criticism at all, but merely for the information of Members of the House to explain the attitude of the chairman of the committee in reference to the legislation, and I will ask the Clerk to read the letter in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the letter will be read in the time of the gentleman.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARCH 11, 1922.

Hon. W. B. BANKHEAD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: Replying to your letter of inquiry as to the consideration of the Sterling-Towner bill, I am writing to state that, as you know, several bills are now before our committee. The bill to which you refer includes the several individual bills. I have thought from the beginning that the separate bills, such as physical education and home economics, both of which have already had hearings, should not be taken up until after a decision had been reached on the larger bill. As you recall, the larger bill has had hearings and was advanced by committee action in the last Congress.

In view of the fact that the Committee on Reorganization is at work, the chairman of which has laid before the President a plan of reorganization which includes a department of education and public welfare, it would be impossible to consider the Sterling-Towner bill looking to creating a department of education until after the reorganization plan is submitted to Congress, unless that is unduly delayed. The President has had this matter before him for about 10 days. This is why I would advise against taking up the Sterling-Towner bill at this time.

Yours very truly,
S. D. FESS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think a correct interpretation of the statement of the chairman of the committee, and I give it for the information of the members of the committee and of the country, is that there will be no meeting of the Committee on Education to consider the bill at this session of Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the gentleman give any information as to the status of the reorganization referred to in the letter?

Mr. BANKHEAD. My statement that there will probably be no meeting of the Committee on Education was predicated upon the proposition that there has been no initial meeting of the Committee on Reorganization, and that it does not seem likely there will be any, in view of the situation existing in the President's Cabinet with reference to that proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman is not aware of the efforts of the President to create some harmony in the Cabinet on this subject?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not an expert on Republican harmony. I would not undertake to answer the gentleman. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to-day very fully qualified as an expert on harmony between the Executive, the Cabinet, and the Congress, and I refer the inquiry to him.

I think it entirely proper for me to say, further, that in my opinion there is a complete understanding between the chairman of the Committee on Education [Mr. FESS], the Republican leader [Mr. MONDELL], and the Republican steering committee that the Towner bill shall not be given a chance for passage at this session of Congress.

The method of administering to it the coup de grace is very simple. It can not be reported favorably out of the committee without a meeting of the committee, and no meeting of the committee will be called by its chairman, Doctor FESS. It is one of the oldest and yet the most effective of all methods of giving the sleeping potion to a bill. The Committee on Education is an important committee of the House. It has many important bills pending before it, and yet it has not had a single meeting to transact business since the present Congress convened in April, 1921. It is very plain to me that such a situation has been inspired if not directed by those at present in authority to put the Towner-Sterling bill into a state of suspended animation. I respectfully challenge a refutation of this charge.

I want all friends of education, especially the American Educational Association, to understand why no progress has been made in the House on the Towner bill, and why, in my opinion, none will be made as long as the present group of obstructionists control the situation.

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And the chairman of the committee also yields five minutes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, like all Members of the House who have been heard thus far on this bill, I want to declare myself in favor of the proposition. But I have another matter I want to call to the attention of the Members of the House. I offered a resolution some few days ago, which was referred to the Committee on Rules, for an investigation of the Washington or Victory Memorial. For some unknown reason—to me, at least, consequently I can not criticise it—they have refused that investigation. In yesterday's news the press carried a report that the site that had been deeded or ceded to this organization was found by the Attorney General and General Harris as having a clear title, and that Lieutenant Colonel Sherrill wrote the officials instructing them that they could begin operations. Before those operations begin I want to bring to the attention of Members of the House some conditions and situations in reference to this project. In the first place, a memorial was planned to cost about $3,000,000, to be called the George Washington Memorial. It was to take the form of a university. There was granted this organization a charter, and I wish to read from that charter the purposes of the organization:

First. The corporate name of said corporation shall be George Washington Memorial Association, and its object shall be to advance and secure the establishment in the city of Washington, D. C., of a university for the purposes, and with the objects substantially, as contemplated and set forth in and by the last will of George Washington, the first President of the United States of America, and to increase the opportunities for the higher education of the youth of said United States, and to this end to collect, take, and hold moneys, gifts, and endowments, to take and to hold by purchase, donations, or devise real estate, to erect and furnish buildings to be used by said university, when legally established, and, in advancing the object of this corporation, to sell, convey, mortgage, and exchange any real and personal estate which it may hold, and to do any and all things which may be lawfully done in carrying out the objects of this corporation.

That was the original plan—the charter was issued in 1898—but apparently they did not begin active operations until about 1912, and from 1912 to 1921 they have succeeded in collecting something in the vicinity of less than $500,000, and in the meantime they have changed the whole plan and object. Now they propose to erect a Victory memorial, to cost between eight and ten million dollars. May I briefly describe this Victory memorial? It is an elaborate building, to contain a large convention hall. In this convention hall there is to be placed in the ceiling a star for every American soldier who was in the service during the World War, or about four and a half million stars, at $5 per star.

Then, in addition to that there are several thousand stars, gold stars, to be placed in the ceiling or in the dome of this building, to commemorate every man who paid the supreme sacrifice, and those stars are to be retailed at $100 per star. Those stars can be easily seen by the use of a powerful telescope from the main floor of the building, and it is the purpose of these people to go before the legislatures of the various States and ask those States to appropriate by direct issue or by bond issues enough money to supply the cost of placing the stars at $5 apiece for the ordinary star, and $100 apiece for those who died in the service.

They think that by so doing they can raise the $8,000,000 that it is going to cost, but that does not include the furnishings, and I understand that they contemplate furnishings to cost $1,000,000 or $1,500,000 more. The American Legion has taken up this matter, and in no uncertain way they have declared against any such proposition, any such exploiting of their service and the service of their comrades, and I think the Members of the House want to know what they say. I read:

THE AMERICAN LEGION, NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1922.

Hon. JOSEPH WALSH,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WALSH: The American Legion at its third national convention adopted unanimously the following resolution:

"Whereas there has been pending in Congress for some time legislation relative to the erection of the George Washington memorial; and

"Whereas it has been proposed that this memorial should be changed to include within it a memorial to all the men and women of the recent World War; and

"Whereas it is believed that this is not the proper time for the erection of a memorial until adequate legislation has been enacted for the disabled and unemployed and compensation: Be it therefore

"Resolved by the American Legion in convention assembled, That we do protest against the erection of any public building by or with the consent of our National Government on any Government land in any way designed to commemorate the men and women who served in the World War until proper and adequate legislation has been enacted for the relief of the disabled, first; the unemployed, second; and adjusted compensation, third."

I have heard it rumored that you contemplate the introduction of a bill authorizing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to investigate this association. I want you to know that the American Legion will support such a resolution as I understand you contemplate introducing.

Sincerely,

JOHN THOMAS TAYLOR,
Vice Chairman National Legislative Committee.

Now, I want to bring to your attention the way that the half million dollars they have to start this $10,000,000 building was raised. Back in 1917 they sent to all the little towns in my State a circular or letter which purported to state the amount which that city or town was assessed for the George Washington Memorial, and many of these little towns, thinking that it was a Government function and that the assessment was a Government or State appropriation, placed in their town warrants anywhere from $25 to $300, and the residents of those towns voted to contribute that amount. Now, nothing was known about it at first, but when it was found out what the purpose was, some towns tried to get their money back, but they have not succeeded. I have a list of the towns that appropriated money and also a statement of the amounts they appropriated, and likewise some remarks made by the selectmen of these various towns in connection with the appropriation and the misunderstanding that they had at the time.

The movement for raising funds was especially lively in 1917. The following statements, the truth of which does not appear to have been challenged, have been printed:

Massachusetts has raised $32,000 for this project, of which $16,000 has been spent in this State for promotion. The agencies of publicity and propaganda—including the cost of the Saturday evening dinner—have thus absorbed half of the money raised.

The promoters hit upon a device which the Commonwealth ought to forbid, that of assessing municipalities with certain sums, as if these appeals were in the nature of obligations. The little town of Peru, for instance, was held up for $75, which it has appropriated and paid. Tisbury has yielded its assigned amount. In fact, a map has been issued of the towns which have responded to the ingenious form of "holdup." In this way $8,000 has been obtained.

The chairman of the Massachusetts Advisory Council of the George Washington Memorial Association, in an official statement published February 15, 1917, said:

It is true that in the last three years of preliminary organization some $16,000 has been expended, but not 1 cent of this will be taken from the final contribution to the fund and but a small part of it was derived from those contributions, even temporarily. * * * The $16,000 was not all spent in Massachusetts, a part of it going toward organization work in other States. The only actual expenses met in this State thus far have been office rental, the issuance of circulars, and the organization of town and city committees. Ultimately every cent given by States, towns, or individuals will go toward the memorial and not a cent toward expenses. These latter are being covered entirely by subscriptions never intended nor made toward the memorial, but definitely given to carry on the work of raising the great patriotic fund.

On February 18, 1917, the memorial association reported that "after four years of endeavor" it had on hand $241,173.09 of the $2,500,000 it purposed to raise. But this was "actual cash." According to Charles J. Bell, trustee of the "permanent building fund" and president of the American Security & Trust Co., of Washington, "more than $500,000" had been raised. Of the cash, it was stated, "With the exception of $10,000, this money is invested so that it is returning to the fund nearly $1,000 in interest a month."

On May 17, 1914, the Boston Herald reported that—

The council reports that among the towns that have been unusually prompt in raising their quota of the sum are Uxbridge, Upton, Bolton, Pembroke, Charlton, Auburn, Norwell, and others. Great progress has also been made in Pittsfield, Waltham, Lawrence, Andover, Avon, Brookline, Dalton, Cheshire, East Longmeadow, and other places.

In the spring of 1917 towns on the cape found that there had been general misunderstanding as to the scheme, it being believed that both the National and State Governments had sanctioned it, made appropriations, and obligated the towns—at least morally—through patriotic appeal to vote each its "quota."

Up to that time, 80 Massachusetts towns had voted "per capita appropriations, averaging $100," according to a statement printed in the Boston Herald of February 18, 1917. Leaflets sent out told of the "nation-wide response," and how "46 governors and former governors have indicated their approval," and "a gratifying spirit of cooperation has been shown on the part of the following States and insular possessions." Here follows a list of 46 States, with Hawaii, the Canal Zone, and the Philippines, although up to that time no State or possession had made an appropriation.

Apparently the promoters traded on the patriotic spirit and lack of knowledge of the smaller towns of Massachusetts, not one of the larger communities being led to vote a dollar. According to the plan—

The general rule is to get an appropriation by town warrant on the basis of a toll of about 6 cents per capita, so that the appropriation covers a wide range—$10 to $20 up to $500.

From the map prepared by the "advisory council," the following Massachusetts towns had at that time appropriated money—although some question had been raised as to the power to do it legally, but this had been silenced by the quoting of the statute, chapter 116, acts of 1903, permitting appropriations for "monuments to soldiers and sailors":

Barnstable, Brewster, Bourne, Chatham, Eastham, Harwich, Orleans, Sandwich, Yarmouth, Becket, Florida, Tyringham, Washington, Acushnet, Berkeley, Raynham, Swansea, Gosnold, Oak Bluffs, Andover, Boxford, Groveland, Newbury, West Newbury, Swampscott, Gill, Monroe, Northfield, Warwick, Wendell, Blandford, Holland, Cummington, Goshen, Greenwich, Hadley, Huntington, Ashland, Bedford, Carlisle, Chelmsford, Lexington, North Reading, Shirley, Cohasset, Foxboro, Wellesley, Westwood, Weymouth, Duxbury, Halifax, Hanover, Hanson, Hingham, Kingston, Marion, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rochester, Rockland, Auburn, Berlin, Boylston, Bolton, Charlton, Dana, Harvard, Lancaster, Milford, Oakham, Oxford, Petersham, Phillipston, Princeton, Southboro, Upton, Uxbridge, and Webster.

As the result of the Herald's revelations regarding the "George Washington Memorial Building," two towns on the Cape, Provincetown, and Wellfleet, are holding up payments of appropriations already voted, and are likely, at special town meetings, to rescind the appropriations. Truro will not give a cent. Neither will Dennis.

Other Cape towns, which have parted with their money, are anxiously waiting to see whether court decisions will uphold the opinions of various town counsel in other parts of the State that such appropriations are illegal, hoping, meanwhile, against hope that somehow they may get at least part of their money back.

Cape towns are not rich enough to have town counsel, but are so stirred by what is now termed "trading on their patriotism" that they are almost ready to hire one.

It is really astounding how many towns have appropriated money for this far-away building in the District of Columbia under a total misapprehension. In some cases selectmen say they understood that the governor and the legislature had set the seal of approval on the plan; that State appropriations had been made or were to be made; that each town was to "give its quota," as the literature sent out by the promoters said, and that it was in the nature of an assessment, or at least an obligation. The appeal to patriotism and public duty had force, and the coming Pilgrim tercentenary celebration had a misty influence.

I am not here to defend the action of any of our towns or to criticize the action of some perhaps well-meaning woman or body of women in building a memorial to George Washington or a victory memorial with their own money, but with money that they can collect from the deluded public. When they come before my State and before the towns and the cities in my State and ask them to contribute money in a camouflaged way, using as a lever an appeal to be patriotic, I protest. I also protest because I know from the past experience that this organization will get along just about so far, and, judged by their past successes, it will be some 10 years before they get another $1,000,000. They will go to work and start this building on this site given by the Government, which might be used as a site for a public building, an archives building, or some other useful building; but they do not seem to care whether the records of these soldiers are put in a safe building or not. What they want by and by is to have anybody who is interested come down and get the record off the ceiling of this memorial building. What they will do will be to get it along so far, and then they will come to Congress and ask Congress to appropriate $5,000,000, $6,000,000, $7,000,000, or $8,000,000 to finish this building. It may be that they do not have that in mind. They may think the people of this country are foolish enough to build a convention hall for the use of organizations that come here and hold conventions. But the business men of Washington a very short time ago when they wanted a convention hall succeeded in less than a month in raising more money than this organization had raised in 10 years.

The George Washington Memorial Association should surrender its charter and the money contributed for a Washington University, which was to cost $3,000,000, or carry out the original plan. If they are to build or start a victory auditorium or something else to cost $10,000,000 they should get a new charter. George Washington needs no additional monuments to perpetuate his greatness and fame. The tomb of the unknown soldier is a shrine that a victory memorial can not displace. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, by agreement with my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL], in control of the time on the other side of the House, I was to have three minutes. I yield two minutes of that time to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BURROUGHS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BURROUGHS. I regret I have only a few minutes. I am sorry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I only wanted to get unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Chairman, I am glad of an opportunity to vote for this bill. I am glad to vote to authorize an appropriation of $17,000,000, or any other amount that may be needed, in order to provide necessary additional hospital facilities for persons who served in the World War. This, as I understand, will make a total of about $42,000,000 either appropriated or authorized for this purpose. The Congress of the United States will gladly double this amount, if necessary, in order to give every sick or disabled ex-service man the hospital facilities he needs. I believe this bill meets a real need. I am confident it is in every sense a most meritorious measure. I hope and expect it will pass without serious opposition.

Mr. Chairman, a few days ago on the floor of this House I stated briefly some of the reasons why it was not possible for me to support or vote for the adjusted compensation bill in the form in which it was presented.

In concluding my remarks, after quoting sundry statistics showing the immense expenditures to date for the benefit of the disabled ex-service men and their dependents, I said:

I make these statements, Mr. Speaker, and quote these figures not for the purpose of showing that the Government of the United States has done its full duty, or, indeed, is doing all that should be done for its disabled ex-service men. I know that is not the fact. A great deal yet remains to be done. There is altogether too much delay in acting upon worthy claims.

It is my experience, Mr. Chairman, and I understand the experience generally of all Members who have been obliged, because of decentralization, to take up claims with the district office of the Veterans' Bureau at Boston, Mass., that there certainly has been most inexcusable and reprehensible delay at that office in acting upon worthy claims. My experience further leads me to the conclusion that the apparent inattention and consequent delay in adjudicating the claims which I have been obliged to take up with the district manager at Boston is a chronic condition in that office, tolerated by the district manager and therefore properly chargeable to him. To date my dealings with the district manager at Boston have, with rare exceptions, been wholly unsuccessful as regards obtaining either reports on the cases or satisfactory adjudication of the claims in which I have been pleased to express an interest. My files show a great many instances where the district manager has not even taken the trouble to make reply to my letters and telegrams of inquiry as to the status of claims pending in his office. I have been forced to appeal in personal interviews and by letter to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau for corrective action on his part, so far as the district manager at Boston and his office was concerned. The director, in order to assist in obtaining reports on these long-delayed cases, has repeatedly telegraphed and written the district manager at Boston, and in many cases it is acknowledged to me that no replies are received. No matter whether the claimant has a compensable status or not, a statement of the degree of disability should be given promptly in every case. As it is now, the amount of correspondence on the many cases I have pending in the office of the district manager at Boston is enormous. The replies I receive are few and far apart. Meantime it is the claimant who suffers, and unjustly so, because of the unwarranted delay and evident inattention on the part of the district manager at Boston and his office.

I have no acquaintance with this district manager nor, so far as I know, with any of the office force under his direction. The only means I have of judging them and their fitness for the jobs they hold is by results, and that is exactly what I do not get. My sole purpose in taking up the time of the House for these few minutes is to place on record my earnest and emphatic protest against a continuance of the negligence and inattention concerning cases which I am obliged to take up with the district manager at Boston. I want to say further that officials of the American Legion, the American Red Cross, and other organizations in my State interested in the welfare of the disabled ex-service men, with whom I am constantly in communication concerning these various claims, are equally emphatic in their protest against the attitude of this same district manager.

As a basis for my protest, Mr. Chairman, I want to cite a few cases in point in order to bear out my contention that there is altogether too much delay in acting upon worthy claims and also in the hope that these claims, as well as additional ones in which I may express my interest, may be properly and promptly adjudicated.

(Case of A. A. H. C 523758.)

March 9, 1921. Initial letter taking claim up with War Risk Insurance Bureau.

March 21, 1921. Letter from acting director setting forth award under rating of temporary partial 10 per cent disability, or $11.40 per month from May 25, 1920.

March 31, 1921. Wrote director requesting reexamination of claimant with view to increased award.

April 30, 1921. Acknowledgment from director of foregoing letter with no reference to request for reexamination, but with particular reference to increasing award on account of dependents.

July 5, 1921. Renewed request for reexamination of claimant on receiving advice from him that such action had not been taken.

July 12, 1921. Director acknowledged foregoing letter, but again made no statement as to reexamination of claimant.

October 28, 1921. Claimant advises he was reexamined on October 10, 1921.

October 29, 1921. Wrote director calling attention to fact of reexamination on October 10, 1921, and requested prompt consideration of report. No reply whatever was made to this request.

December 9, 1921. Wrote director strenuously about claim and advised that claimant had been obliged to seek charity of his home city to provide means of support of himself, wife, and child. This letter was presented to the director personally.

December 10, 1921. Director wrote advising that "Bureau records disclose claimant was examined on October 10, 1921, for the purpose of determining whether or not the compensation should be increased, but the report of this examination has not been received in this bureau. I have accordingly wired the district manager at Boston, Mass., to expedite the report of this examination for my personal attention."

On December 23, 1921, the director advised me by telephone that this claimant's compensation had been increased to 20 per cent, dating back to discharge, and that a check for the accumulated amount due would be promptly sent forward.

So that the record discloses that although the examination of the claimant was made on October 10, 1921, the report of same was apparently not received by the director from the district manager at Boston until on or about December 23, 1921, almost two weeks after the director telegraphed the district manager to send same to him personally without delay. A period of approximately nine months dragged out between the time of request for the reexamination of claimant and the date on which his award was amended, and a period of over two months passed between the date of his reexamination and the date of the amended award.

(Case of R. W. H. C. 370204.)

January 22, 1921. Submitted receipted bills covering medical, surgical, hospital, and nursing expenses, together with a receipted bill for an artificial leg. These bills aggregated approximately $675. This claimant is rated as temporary total.

February 6, 1921. Director acknowledged receipt of bills and advised: "The bills in question have been referred to the district supervisor, United States Public Health Service, Boston, Mass., for attention. When the claim, properly certified, is received from the district supervisor prompt action toward settlement will be taken by the bureau."

July 11, 1921. Having received word from the claimant that his claim for reimbursement on account of the bills in question had not been settled, addressed a letter to the director of the bureau protesting against the unwarranted delay and calling for immediate action.

July 25, 1921. Director acknowledged receipt of foregoing letter and advised: "The bills for these expenses were forwarded to the bureau's supervisor in Boston, Mass., February 7, 1921, for necessary corrections. A telegram has accordingly been sent to the supervisor requesting him to wire report of the action taken in this matter."

August 19, 1921. Claimant advises all bills had been returned to him for correction, and he had returned same to the district supervisor at Boston, Mass.

August 24, 1921. Wrote director of bureau setting forth above statement.

December 19, 1921. Claimant advises that early in October, 1921, he promptly complied with further requirements of district supervisor at Boston in regard to bills in question, but no word or payment has reached him.

December 20, 1921. Called on director personally and demanded immediate action.

December 22, 1921. Director advises by telephone that a check for $687.62 was mailed that morning to claimant to cover reimbursement.

It will be noted, Mr. Chairman, that this claim for reimbursement of legitimate expenses incurred by the claimant was filed by me on January 22, 1921, and was not finally settled until December 22, 1921, or exactly 11 months after the date of filing. For practically 10 months of this time the claim was shelved in the office of the district supervisor at Boston with the possible exception of perhaps a week when the bills were being corrected by the claimant. The bills were not sent to the claimant for correction until seven months after filing, in the first instance, and nine months after initial presentation to the bureau for their final correction.

Note, also, that whereas the director personally telegraphed the district manager at Boston on July 25, 1921, for a wire report in order to obtain action, no attention was paid to same by the Boston office, so far as I have been advised, although the director in his letter to me of July 25, 1921, had said: "I shall write you again as soon as a reply from the supervisor has been received."

By reason of the settlement made with this claimant this case can now be considered as closed so far as his interests are concerned.

(Case of L. D. W. C264167.)

This case involves the question of a change of vocational training from machine designing work to a commercial course and my letter requesting investigation addressed to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau was dated November 3, 1921. The decision rendered in this case was adverse to the desire of the claimant, but the delay in arriving at that conclusion is fairly set forth in the following quoted letter which I presented to the director of the bureau under date of January 24, 1922:

Col. C. R. FORBES,
Director Veterans' Bureau, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL FORBES: I deem it highly important that the following statement of facts should be brought to your personal attention and receive your personal investigation and prompt action.

Mr. W. is a resident of my home city, Manchester, N. H., and his mother has for some time past been known to me through the fact that she has done housework for us. She has spoken and written to me concerning her son's case. My interest in the matter is therefore personal as well as official in an endeavor to bring about a speedy and proper adjudication of his claim.

It appears that Mr. W. has been in training at Providence, R. I., for about two years. On November 1, 1921, he wrote me concerning his condition and I quote you a portion of his letter (also set forth in my letter to you dated November 3, 1921):

"I have been in training here for about two years and have been constantly bothered with my leg. I have been going to the doctors about every week and they do not seem to be able to help me at all. About six months ago a Doctor Mahoney, who is a specialist here, wrote a letter to the Federal board office requesting that I be given a special board at school. I am taking machine design and that necessitates quite a lot of standing. The board was given me, and about a month ago the same doctor recommended that I be given a different line of training. He suggested accounting. * * * He wrote this request to the Federal board people here over a month ago and I can not get any action on it at all. The doctor of the public health office also called up the local supervisor here and gave the same opinion as Doctor Mahoney. He suggested that I be transferred to the Bryant & Stratton school here in Providence.

"My disability is a compound fracture of both bones of the right leg, upper and middle third. I also have a foot drop. On account of extensive injury to the muscles and tissues my leg tires easily and causes pain when it is tired."

I have recited fully Mr. W.'s disability, in order that it may be seen that his present training as machine designer is in fact a handicap, as testified to by Doctor Mahoney, as well as by the public health physician.

In writing you concerning this matter it is with the idea of bringing to your attention, for appropriate action, the unwarranted and absurd situation which has developed in connection with your district office at Boston, Mass., as will be seen by the following statements.

On November 28, 1921, you wrote me as follows:

"We note his (W.'s) desire to be transferred from machine designing to a commercial course. As records on file do not bear upon the point in question, we are referring the matter to our representative at the district office in Boston, with the direction that his request be taken into consideration and report submitted. Upon its receipt we shall be pleased to inform you accordingly."

On that date you wrote the district manager at Boston for investigation and report concerning this case, and your records will also show that you have further written for the report in question on the following dates: December 12, 1921; December 29, 1921; January 13, 1922; January 23, 1922. Your records will also show that urgent telegrams were sent by your bureau to the district manager at Boston on this case on the following dates: December 16, 1921; December 19, 1921; January 4, 1922; and January 9, 1922.

And yet to date the medical report in question has not been furnished you as directed, even in the face of five official letters and four official telegrams.

As a matter of fact, the report of medical examination of Mr. W., made at Providence, R. I., by the public health physicians, left Providence for your Boston office on November 18, 1921.

In order to supplement the efforts of your bureau to obtain from Doctor Brides the medical report of examination in question, I telegraphed him on January 9, 1922, as follows:

"Have been for days pressing Veterans' Bureau for immediate action on application L. D. W., C-264167, for transfer vocational training from machine designing to commercial course, due to poor physical condition. Bureau advises no reply received to several official telegrams sent you this matter. Bureau awaits medical report furnished your office by Providence office last November 18. This matter important and justifies your personal attention by forwarding immediately report in question. Wire reply."

Note the reply I received by telegraph the next day (January 10, 1922), signed "Brides"—

"Re tel December 9 case L. D. W. Telephoned Providence to-day to send medical report to-morrow."

And, in confirmation of this telegram, Doctor Brides wrote me under date of January 12, 1922, in part, as follows:

"Immediately upon receipt of duplicate medical report from Providence, copy will be forwarded to Washington for action."

On January 21, 1922, having been advised on the morning of that day by your office that the medical report in question had not been received, I again telegraphed Doctor Brides as follows:

"You telegraphed me January 10, case L. D. W., you had telephoned Providence that day to send medical report. Your letter 12th stated immediately upon receipt duplicate medical report copy will be sent to Washington. Report not yet received. I consider situation ridiculous. That medical report rendered November 18 must reach Washington Monday with copy to me."

Up to this morning your bureau has not received the medical report in question, and neither have I received a copy, nor any further word from Doctor Brides concerning it.

* * * In the past there has been much well-founded criticism placed at the doors of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, but as time went on conditions were expected, and have, improved, and it was hoped that with the passage of the act creating the Veterans' Bureau conditions under its terms would be so improved as to do away with unnecessary delay in the settlement of the claims of meritorious nature. The very establishment of the regional or district offices was for that sole purpose.

But under the conditions set forth in this letter you can not uphold the present management of your district office at Boston. At present this is a matter for your personal attention as Director of the Veterans' Bureau, in order that remedial steps may be immediately taken to correct the unwarranted and serious mismanagement herein complained of.

So, in the consideration of this matter it is my desire, first, that W.'s case be immediately and satisfactorily adjudicated, and, second, in order to prevent similar conditions in other cases, that you make such changes in your district office at Boston as may bring about proper efficiency in management as well as expeditious handling of these deserving cases.

At the present time I have pending before the office of the district manager at Boston, in various stages of neglect and delay, some 20 cases, in each of which I have long ago recorded my interest and urged prompt action. On many of them no reply whatever has reached me to date.

It is not the fault of the law, Mr. Chairman, that delays occur. It is the fault of incompetent men administering the law that delays occur. I am glad to say that many, in fact most, of the officials with whom I come in contact appear to be courteous and conscientious and reasonably efficient in the discharge of the duties imposed upon them. I want to make all reasonable allowances on account of the great number of claims pressing for attention and a certain amount of confusion naturally attendant upon the processes of decentralization. But when all that has been taken into account I must still insist that the action or nonaction at the Boston office, as shown in the cases cited, is without any sort of justification or excuse. More flagrant and utter disregard of the plain, ordinary rights of claimants would be hard to imagine. I see no occasion for weeks and months of vexatious delay in getting the simplest sort of medical report necessary as a basis of adjudication.

When these boys, most of whom are maimed and sick in body or in mind, and many of whom are wholly without funds, keep writing in desperation to me for help, and I know that the Government of the United States has made provision to meet their needs, as in most cases it has done, I have little patience with any official who can not find a way to acknowledge, if not to answer, my letter or telegram of inquiry. If the district manager at Boston can not do this, it is high time for the district manager at Boston to give place to some one who can. I call upon him now to wake up and see to it that these plain, ordinary duties of his office are performed. I call upon the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to see that he does this or demand his resignation without delay. [Applause.]

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Does not the gentleman think the cure will be to abolish the regional offices?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Well, I had some question originally as to the wisdom of decentralizing this work, but it was the desire of the American Legion, and we passed the Sweet bill accomplishing that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire has expired.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, my interest in this bill is a sort of legacy coming down from my former membership of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. In 1919 I had the honor to report the first bill for the hospitalization of the wounded and disabled soldiers of the World War. That carried with it an appropriation of $9,500,000. Since that date we have appropriated $20,000,000, and, with the present appropriation of $17,000,000, we will have appropriated $46,000,000 for the construction of hospitals and for the hospitalization of disabled soldiers, sailors, marines, and so forth. In addition to that, I want to put on record, so as to give a general survey and bird's-eye view of what Congress has done, the appropriations made by Congress for the relief of the ex-service men. I do that in order to combat by figures the wild statements that are given currency to the effect that Congress is neglecting or has neglected the ex-service men, particularly the disabled soldiers.

To account for the numerous complaints which are heard respecting the administration of the war risk insurance act, we must go back to the very beginning. I have the fullest appreciation of the fidelity and patriotism of the draft boards, but I can not help but believe that in their zeal they unconsciously put upon the country a tremendous burden of financial responsibility. They inducted many men into the Army who had been rejected by the Regular Army surgeons upon their offer of voluntary enlistment.

In their zeal to get men they often drafted men without discrimination. They took strong men who could, would, and did fight, but they also drafted men physically unfit for the duties of a soldier. They selected men with rheumatism, flat feet, and other organic troubles, with the inevitable result that the efficiency of the Army was seriously impaired and the hospital facilities taxed to the utmost in caring for men who were wholly unfitted for Army work. The boards seemed to think unwillingness to fight was a just provocation to make them fight. I hope posterity will profit by their error, and if we should ever have another war and the selective draft is resorted to, I hope the questionnaire will culminate with the supreme question, "Do you want to fight for your country?" If the answer were in the negative, I would not honor such a man by placing him in a combat corps, but immediately assign him to the labor corps and detail him to work in the munition factories, shipbuilding plants, and in the transportation service. I would give him soldiers' pay.

Unfortunately, there was no authority for such a course upon our entrance into the World War. Many things were left to chance, and the selection of soldiers was one of them. The result of our mistaken policy has been to create a long train of unpleasant consequences.

In the first place, the men who escaped military service were permitted to enter munition factories, shipbuilding plants, and other war-time industrial occupations and draw wages far greater than the country was paying its soldiers on the fighting line. This disparity provoked a great deal of the discontent which was behind the movement for adjusted compensation.

The zeal of the draft boards in sending men into the combat corps with organic troubles which unfitted them for Army work was almost immediately reflected in a large hospitalization list. Many of these men barely gave a month's service. They had one trouble or another and were in many cases discharged within a few days of their arrival at the training camps. Many others lingered on for months. They were a burden to the country then and they are going to be a burden for many years to come.

There is hardly one of them who does not want compensation. The word seems to be passed along that Uncle Sam is paying out money to ex-soldiers and they all feel that they ought to get what is coming to them. It is with these that I have found most difficulty. Many make application for compensation, setting forth certain disabilities. The Veterans' Bureau justly requires that they should connect their disability with their Army service with adequate proof. This is only what any self-respecting honest man would require where he is intrusted with the expenditure of other peoples' money. We should not complain of the Veterans' Bureau because it seeks to protect the United States Treasury.

Another criticism that I have heard here to-day is that the decentralization of the Veterans' Bureau was a mistake. I do not agree to that proposition. The idea of creating 14 divisional offices in the United States for the care of the veterans' claims, in my opinion, was a good one. It enables the veteran to file his application and be examined in his own vicinity and ought to result in the expeditious handling of his claim. It avoids the long delay involved in correspondence with Washington. Before undertaking to criticize the Sweet bill, we ought to give it a fair trial. The American Legion advocated the modification of the law, and I believe in the end it will justify their judgment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. If the gentleman will pardon me I can not yield now, because I have so little time.

In addition to the appropriations for hospitalization, Congress has appropriated for compensation for disabled veterans and expended since the passage of the act $256,063,428. Then, for vocational education, which you know goes only to the disabled or debilitated veterans, we have appropriated and there had been laid out, to December 15, 1921, $249,000,000. The total altogether in the way of appropriations for the benefit of the ex-service men of the World War is $551,208,428, or over half a billion dollars.

Now, gentlemen, this is not a party question. There is no room here for demagogy or partisanship. I say that Congress has done its full and complete duty toward the ex-service men.

It may be that in the administration of the act there have been some instances of inefficiency, carelessness, neglect, and delay; but I want to say that in so far as my dealings with the Veterans' Bureau are concerned, I have found its officials courteous, diligent, prompt, and efficient. Now, that may seem a strange thing for a man from this side of the aisle to say, but I believe it is due to the men at the head of the Veterans' Bureau to say that they are doing honestly the best that they can. [Applause.]

TABLE IV.—HOSPITALIZATION.

Summary of all hospitals built or leased and now under the control of the United States Veterans' Bureau, with bed accommodations and patients under treatment as of January 31, 1922.

UNITED STATES ARMY.

The United States Army has allocated a certain number of beds in military hospitals for the use of the United States Veterans' Bureau. Funds are allotted to the United States Army to cover the cost of Veterans' Bureau patients in these hospitals, the cost being based upon the percentage of Veterans' Bureau patients to the total patients in each hospital. The facilities available in military hospitals are as follows:

Location of hospital.	Total available beds.	Patients under treatment.
Walter Reed General Hospital, Washington, D. C.	750	410
Fitzsimmons General Hospital, Denver, Colo.	1,221	759
Letterman General Hospital, San Francisco, Calif.	288	97
Beaumont General Hospital, El Paso, Tex.	200	111
Post Hospital, Fort Sam Houston, Tex.	300	273
Army and Navy General Hospital, Hot Springs, Ark.	171	84
Total	2,930	1,734

UNITED STATES NAVY.

The United States Navy has allocated a certain number of beds in naval hospitals for the use of the United States Veterans' Bureau. Funds are allotted to the United States Navy to cover the cost of Veterans' Bureau patients in these hospitals, the cost being based upon the percentage of Veterans' Bureau patients to the total patients in each hospital. The facilities available in military hospitals are as follows:

Location of hospital.	Total available beds.	Patients under treatment.
U. S. Naval Hospital, Chelsea, Mass.	539	369
U. S. Naval Hospital, Portsmouth, N. H.	217	4

NATIONAL HOMES FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Of the hospitals of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers where facilities have been allotted to the United States Veterans' Bureau, two hospitals are operated entirely for the use of the United States Veterans' Bureau, namely, the National Sanatorium at Johnson City, Tenn., and the sanatorium at Marion, Ind. At the other branches the facilities are only in part available to the United States Veterans' Bureau. Funds are allotted to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers as they are to the United States Army and to the United States Navy. The branches of the National Soldiers' Home making hospital facilities available to the United States Veterans' Bureau are as follows:

Location of hospital.	Total available beds.	Patients under treatment.

Location of hospital.	Total available beds.	Patients under treatment.
St. Elizabeths Hospital, Washington, D. C	827	827

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

All hospitals operated by the United States Public Health Service are available in total or in part to the United States Veterans' Bureau. However, certain of these hospitals, namely, the marine hospitals and three other hospitals, are operated entirely out of funds appropriated to the United States Public Health Service and that service is reimbursed by the United States Veterans' Bureau at a rate of $3.50 per day for the treatment of Veterans' Bureau beneficiaries treated in those hospitals. The other hospitals operated by the United States Public Health Service are the United States Veterans' Bureau hospitals, and these hospitals are maintained entirely out of funds allotted by the United States Veterans' Bureau to the United States Public Health Service. The hospitals operated out of Public Health Service funds and available in part to the United States Veterans' Bureau are as follows:

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this bill. I have heard no objections raised to it, and believe that it will be passed unanimously. I desire to call your attention and the people of this country to the threatened coal strike, and place the blame where I believe it rests.

THE THREATENED COAL STRIKE.

Because of a drastic cut in their wages, amounting to one-fourth of the present wage, 500,000 coal miners will go out on a strike April 1, which gives promise of being one of the largest and most bitter industrial struggles in the history of this Nation. These striking miners are now getting less than a living wage.

The Department of Labor, through its division of conciliation, has offered its good offices in an effort to get the operators of the coal mines to arbitrate their differences and avert a great industrial struggle which will shake this country from center to circumference, and which will cause great suffering among our people. This strike will injure the public millions of dollars a day and will engender intense and bitter class hatred with all of its attending dangers. The miners have informed the Commissioner of Labor that they are ready and willing to meet with the Bureau of Conciliation and the operators, as requested by the Department of Labor. The coal-mine operators refuse.

On March 10, 1920, the miners and operators entered into a contract, made at the solicitation of the United States Government, settling their differences as to wages and hours, and providing that the parties to this agreement should get together and have an interstate joint conference prior to April 1, 1922, for the purpose of settling any differences between them.

SECRETARY OF LABOR DAVIS BLAMES OPERATORS.

Secretary of Labor Davis, a member of the President's Cabinet, and who presumably speaks for the administration, says in regard to the refusal of the operators of the bituminous coal mines to keep their agreement with their employees:

I have always believed, and every citizen is with me in the belief, that employers and employees who have signed a wage agreement or contract should observe it in spirit and to the letter. If the two parties to a trade dispute get together it is always possible to work out a satisfactory settlement and maintain peace.

In fairness it must be said that the miners' officials were willing and ready to go into the conference agreed upon, but some of the operators declined to meet.

The operators and miners were bound to a conference; that this conference might have led to a new agreement, and the country might not have been confronted with a stoppage of coal production, a suspension avoided, ample supplies of coal and a gradual reduction in prices would have resulted.

I can not but express keen disappointment at the failure of certain operators to fulfill the terms of their obligation to meet in conference with a view to peace in the coal industry for two years more.

The Secretary of Labor says further:

There may be faults on both sides of this bituminous dispute, but the side that openly repudiates its written and signed obligations has crippled its case before the bar of public opinion.

The agreement signed by the parties regarding a future conference is as follows:

Resolved, That an interstate joint conference should be held prior to April 1, 1922, the time and place for holding such meeting to be referred to a committee of two operators and two members from each State herein represented, together with the international officials of the United Mine Workers of America.

The mine operators, notwithstanding this solemn agreement, which both parties entered into at the instance of the Government, now absolutely refuse to keep their agreement, and are taking advantage of the fact that there are millions of men out of employment and give notice that April 1, 1922, they will reduce the wages of their employees one-fourth of the present wage.

MINERS NOW GETTING LESS THAN A LIVING WAGE.

The miners now are getting less than a living wage, and are engaged in one of the most hazardous and unhealthy employments of any class of labor. In any of the leading coal-mining districts in the United States, excepting certain anthracite districts, the miners are not employed on an average of to exceed three days a week. I herewith give a table showing the number of days the miners were employed in 1921 and their average earnings:

District.	Average days worked in 1921.	Average annual earnings.
Pittsburgh	123	$762
Ohio	118	550
Indiana	148	.....
Illinois	159	.....
Western Kentucky	.....	180
West Virginia	80	500

Tennessee, approximately one-third of the miners worked one-third time, averaging $105 a month per man for the time they worked.

CONSUMER WOULD NOT BE AFFECTED BY REDUCTION OF 25 PER CENT ON MINERS' WAGES.

The average retail selling price of bituminous coal March 1 was $10.41, of which the coal miners received not to exceed $1.97. If the operators of the mines are successful in reducing the wages of the miners 25 per cent, the maximum reduction the consumer would get would be 49 cents on the ton. But the operators are not going to put themselves to the trouble of conducting a labor war just for the sake of saving the public some money. They will keep a large share of the 49 cents for themselves. If the coal operators were generous enough to divide the wage cut on a 50–50 basis with the public we would get our coal 25 cents per ton less than we do now, while the miner who now earns too little to live decently will be deprived of one-fourth of his wages.

ACTION OF OPERATORS UNJUSTIFIABLE.

In a time like this, when we are recovering from the effects of the World War, when there is widespread industrial depression, with 5,000,000 men out of employment, is it right for the operators of the mines to take advantage of the necessities of their employees, ignore the request of the Government of the United States to meet its Conciliation Board, repudiate a written contract with their employees, and cause widespread suffering to the consumers of coal throughout the United States?

POWERFUL FINANCIAL INTERESTS BACK OF MINE OPERATORS.

What great interests are back of the mine operators that are powerful and arrogant enough to defy the Government itself? In other words, who own the coal mines? I answer, the railroads and the United States Steel Co. own over 75 per cent of the coal mines in the United States, both anthracite and bituminous, and completely control the output of coal. What large financial institutions own the stock in these railroads and, therefore, own these coal mines and coal railroads? I answer again, they are owned by the following financial institutions:

1. J. P. Morgan Co.
2. First National Bank of New York.
3. Equitable Trust Co.
4. Guaranty Trust Co.
5. Equitable Life Assurance Association of the United States.
6. Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York.
7. American Surety Co.
8. Mechanical & Metals National Bank.
9. National City Bank.
10. National Surety Co.
11. New York Trust Co.
12. Chase National Bank.
13. United States Steel Co.

As an illustration as to how the various coal companies doing business before the public in their own names, but in reality are controlled by one of the large aggregations of capital mentioned, take the United States Coal & Coke Co. All of the stock of this company, amounting to $2,000,000, is owned by the Illinois Steel Co. (capital stock $18,650,600), which is owned by the Federal Steel Co. of New Jersey (capitalization $46,484,300 common and $53,260,900 preferred). All of the capital stock of the Federal Steel Corporation is owned by the United States Steel Corporation. (Brief for the United States (pp. 755–756), U. S. of A., appellant, v. U. S. S. Co. et al., Supreme Court, October term, 1916, No. 481.)

In the same way the United States Steel Co. owns the Pocahontas Coal & Coke Co., and going further we find that J. P. Morgan Co. and the financial institution just named hold a majority of stock in the United States Steel Corporation.

The men who control these great financial institutions control these coal railroads.

The coal railroads controlled by these great financial institutions are:

Norfolk & Western Railway.
Western Maryland Railway.
Berwind-White Coal Mining Co.
Pennsylvania Coal & Coke Corporation.
Pennsylvania Railroad.
Erie Railroad.
Pennsylvania Coal Co.
Reading Co.
Philadelphia & Reading Railway.
Philadelphia & Reading Coal Co.
Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Co.
Central Railroad of New Jersey.
Lehigh Valley Railroad.
Lehigh Valley Coal Co.
Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad.
Delaware & Hudson Co.
Coxe Bros. & Co.
New York, Ontario & Western Railroad.
Maryland Coal Co. of West Virginia.
Pittsburgh Coal Co.
Rocky Mountain Fuel Co.
Chesapeake & Ohio.
Virginian Railway.

MEN WHO CONTROL THE RAILROADS.

A group of 25 men control 82 per cent of the country's steam transportation system, operating 211,280 miles of railroad. These 25 men divide between them 193 directorships. This means that they averaged nearly eight directorships apiece. These 25 men sit together on the board of directors of 99 class 1 railroads. The names of these 25 men are as follows:

1. Robert S. Lovett.
2. William Rockefeller.
3. H. W. De Forest.
4. A. H. Smith.
5. G. F. Baker.
6. H. S. Vanderbilt.
7. Samuel Rea.
8. L. P. Loree.
9. A. J. County.
10. A. W. Krech.
11. F. N. Davis.
12. Fairfax Harrison.
13. W. W. Atterbury.
14. J. E. Reynolds.
15. Charles Steele.
16. Howard Elliott.
17. M. H. Smith.
18. Charles Hayden.
19. A. H. Harris.
20. Julius Kruttschnitt.
21. Charles E. Ingersoll.
22. E. T. Stotesbury.
23. E. V. R. Thayer.
24. T. De Witt Cuyler.
25. H. Walters.

A SUPERCORPORATION.

It should be noted that the first eight men referred to all belong to the inner banking circle, centering around the house of Morgan and the National City Bank of New York.

I have thus shown that the men that I have named own our coal and our railroads and control financial institutions strong enough to dominate our entire banking system. I will place in the RECORD a chart which will illustrate how our coal mines, railroads, and a dozen New York City banks are practically one large supercorporation dominating the industrial life of the Nation.

This same group of capitalists not only own the coal and the railroads but they also control iron, steel, copper, petroleum oil, cement, water transportation, and a large part of the developed water powers of the United States.

The Lockwood committee of the New York Legislature has shown clearly the existence of a conspiracy dominated by the Morgan steel combine to hold up the prices of building materials. In this case these same interests took advantage of the people's necessities for homes, which conditions were caused by the war, when all building was stopped, to exact an exorbitant and unconscionable profit. As a result, building has seriously been interfered with and rents raised so high as to take at least one-half of the average wage earner's income.

EXORBITANT PROFITS OF COAL COMPANIES DURING THE WAR.

Senator CAPPER, in a speech before the Senate, made the statement that the American people paid for the coal mines and steel mills during the war by paying these concerns in excess profits more than their entire net wealth. He proved this by official figures.

When William G. McAdoo was Secretary of the Treasury and had possession of the income returns of these companies, he made the statement that the profits of the coal operators ranged as high as 2,000 per cent and that profits as high as 100 per cent on capital stock was not uncommon. The Treasury reports for the year 1917 show that 185 coal companies reported upon earned profits on their capital stock of over 100 per cent net incomes.

The United States Steel Corporation, which I have shown was extensively interested in coal, with a capital stock of $868,583,600, that same year received a net income of $478,204,342, according to their own report.

My colleague from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON], in an able address, placed some tables in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—March 7, page 3528—taken from reliable sources, showing that the anthracite coal companies made an increase in their net profits during the war averaging 83 per cent over the pre-war period. He also shows that their pre-war profits were excessive.

At the signing of the armistice, November, 1918, anthracite coal, according to the operators' own figures, sold at the mouth of the mine for $6.10. October, 1920, two years afterwards, when farm produce had deflated so that it was selling for less than the cost of production, anthracite coal sold at the mouth of the mine for $7.95, $1.85 per ton in advance of two years previous, and $2.90 more than it did December 1, 1917, when we were engaged in war and when the companies were making over 100 per cent profits.

The following are figures furnished by the anthracite operators themselves:

In 1902 anthracite sold for $3.75 per ton at the mouth of the mine. The price stayed about the same when it was raised to $4 per ton in 1912. The following gives the cost of coal at the mouth of the mine:

	Per ton.
June, 1912	$4.00
May, 1916	4.40
May, 1917	4.70
December, 1917	5.05
November, 1918	6.10
August, 1919	6.60
April, 1920	7.45
October, 1920	7.95

DEFY THE GOVERNMENT.

These same interests that defy the Government now defied it during the war, regarding the Government's right to make prices. The Government fixed the price of almost all of the commodities we produced but did not succeed in fixing the price of steel, copper, gasoline, or coal, although the Government used millions of dollars' worth of these products a day.

ROOSEVELT COMPELLED THE COAL COMPANIES TO SUBMIT TO A CONFERENCE.

In 1902 when these same companies under similar conditions refused to confer, Theodore Roosevelt threatened to take over the coal mines and have the Government operate them if they did not comply with his order. The coal companies complied. A commission of seven men were appointed by the President, the strike was stopped, and the coal famine relieved, and there was no further refusal on the part of the coal operators to confer with their employees for 20 years. With the many great accomplishments of the Roosevelt administration, none was applauded more by the American people than his bold and fearless stand against these the most powerful combinations of capital when they attempted to substitute war for conference as a method of government in industry.

The commission appointed by President Roosevelt to investigate and make an award were: Brig. Gen. John M. Wilson, Mr. E. W. Parker, Judge George Gray, Mr. E. E. Clark, Mr. Thomas H. Watkins, and Bishop John L. Spaulding, with Hon. Carroll D. Wright as statistician.

UNEMPLOYMENT.

The unjustifiable and arbitrary action of the coal operators will throw over half a million men out of employment to join an army of unemployed that the Assistant Secretary of Labor informs me to-day is now 5,000,000. Figuring three persons dependent upon each one of the unemployed, which is a very conservative estimate, we have 16,500,000 people without means of support, the most serious industrial crisis this Nation has ever faced.

UNEMPLOYMENT AFFECTS PUBLIC HEALTH.

One of the most interesting documents bearing upon the significance to the country of widespread unemployment is the Statistical Bulletin of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. under the caption, "Will unemployment affect public health?" It proceeds to show that the effect of unemployment upon the health of the Nation is so immediate as to be a matter of very grave concern.

Referring to the high wages during the war, this bulletin recites:

> Despite popular misconception that wage earners spend their higher incomes in wasteful ways, the real evidence is that much of the increased income was expended wisely in securing a more wholesome home environment. Department-store records show that wage earners bought heavily of such useful goods as furniture, bedding, carpets, and other lines of household equipment. Both industrial and ordinary insurance companies report unprecedented sales of higher-priced plans of insurance to wage earners. The "industrial" or weekly premium applicant became a candidate for "immediate" and "ordinary" insurance.
> Savings banks reported record-breaking deposits from this group of the population. Lodges and other fraternal associations gained largely in membership. Vacation resorts gave testimony that the wage earner took advantage of his increased earnings to provide healthful outdoor recreation for his family. Skilled medical and nursing care became available to many persons who heretofore relied upon free clinic and hospital facilities. All these factors helped to lower the death rate of the industrial population of the United States and Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASES CRIME.

Unemployment tends to weaken the natural bonds which unite society and which cause the individual unconsciously to act for the best interest of society as a whole. These periods are marked by increase of crime and is one of the causes to-day of the crime wave. The business depression of 1893, which marks a period of great unemployment, also marked a period of increase of crime. A report of the general superintendent of police of Chicago for the year ending December 31, 1893, is as follows, and statistics from other cities show the same conditions:

Report of general superintendent of police of Chicago for year ended December 31, 1893, pages 70–71.

Classification of offenses.	1893	1892	1891
Assault	3,874	2,539	1,496
Burglary	2,965	1,629	1,479
Doing business without license	1,807	159	146
Extortion by threats	49	1	3
Inmates of opium dens	363	154	85
Murder	40	20	19
Robbery	1,062	818	585

I believe that it is the duty of this Congress to investigate this matter at once, and upon ascertaining the facts pass legislation that in the future will prevent the American people from being victimized and made dependent upon any person or corporation for a great basic necessity like coal. I believe that our President should follow the precedent set by his great predecessor, Roosevelt, and compel the coal operators to operate their coal mines or the Government of the United States operate them itself.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is a responsibility to the ex-service men which forms an issue that none of us can escape when we face these men on the hustings this year. The last Sweet bill that was passed contained a provision which authorized the expenditure of $20 a month to employ a special nurse when a disabled ex-service man was on his back unable to help himself. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] went before that committee having that bill in charge and pleaded with tears in his eyes for at least $50 a month to employ a nurse under such circumstances, and he was turned down absolutely. The committee gave him hardly any hearing, and when he begged for time on the floor of this House even to speak on the matter he was denied the opportunity. He got up and asked unanimous consent to show the necessity of it, and asked that he might proceed for five minutes, and the RECORD shows that he was denied even that request. When he placed the matter before this House by amendment proposing to allow as much as $50 a month to employ a nurse for a disabled ex-soldier on his back and unable to care for himself, this House turned him down by an overwhelming vote. We can not escape that responsibility. That is a matter for which Members must answer to the ex-service men of this country. If there is on earth a pitiable sight it is a disabled soldier in a hospital or somewhere else on his back, unable even to brush the flies away, and dependent upon Congress for a nurse, while we provide only a measly little old pittance of $20 a month. Why, there is no opportunity on earth to employ a nurse for $20 a month, and we know it, and the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is here on the floor, and I call upon him now to say if it is not a fact that he has been before that subcommittee having such legislation in charge, and been urging them to bring a measure to increase this amount to as much as $50 a month. Is not that so?

Mr. FISH. That is the fact.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman has not been able to get a hearing on the matter. He has been put off and put off and put off. Yet you say we have done our full duty. Have you ever been on your back, absolutely helpless, unable to care for yourself, unable to have the benefit of some loving hand to care for you, dependent absolutely upon the gratuity of your own Government, for which you fought, and then have your Government say, "We will give you $20 a month to employ a nurse," when some nurses these days in some instances make as much as $20 a day? To allow only $20 a month for a nurse for a disabled soldier under such helpless circumstances is an absolute denial of the benefit of a nurse to such a soldier. I have one rule in my office that is absolute. That is that when a soldier calls on me to assist him I do not ask where he lives or who is his Congressman, I assist him without asking any questions. [Applause.]

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK].

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am for the bill under consideration which authorizes an appropriation of $17,000,000 for the construction of additional hospital facilities for our soldiers of the World War. Ample provisions for these boys should be provided and all adequate assistance given to the sick and wounded. I am glad always to speak for them and to vote for their benefit and protection.

I wish to use the time allotted me to discuss to some extent the conditions in some of our fraternal insurance organizations. A short time ago I prepared a resolution asking for an investigation into the management of the Woodmen of the World. Before that resolution was introduced I found that House Resolution 291 had been introduced February 21, 1922, providing for a congressional investigation into the affairs of this order, and my resolution was abandoned. I am, therefore, supporting House Resolution 291.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWANK. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Upon what theory does the gentleman base the jurisdiction of Congress to investigate this organization?

Mr. SWANK. On the ground that Congress has jurisdiction to inquire into the affairs of any order of this nature when the rights of a large number of people are affected. I think it has made investigations in the past of insurance organizations.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of private insurance organizations?

Mr. SWANK. Yes; when in this condition.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield, I will tell the gentleman upon what it is based—on the basis that the officers in this company are absolutely robbing 900,000 policyholders in almost every State in the Union.

Mr. SWANK. I can not yield further.

When the membership in such an organization loses confidence in their officers something is wrong, and it is time for the lawmakers to pause and think for a remedy. The different States have laws for the protection of policyholders, but laws are enacted to meet conditions, and future conditions can not always be foreseen. With changed conditions, there is sometimes a need for a change of law. At least, no law has yet been found adequate for the protection of the members of the Woodmen of the World. There is no law to-day that meets the situation, and when this condition exists the lawmaking body of the country should do something for the protection of the great number of its citizens affected. The fraternal societies have done much good for the country. They have furnished a system of insurance for the man and the woman who could not pay a premium for one year in advance. The fraternal system furnishes them with a plan whereby they can make a small monthly payment and lay aside a legacy for the protection of their loved ones. It furnishes a plan for the poor man and the wage earner to provide for their families. The fraternal work of some of these societies is excelled by none. Remove that fraternal feeling from mankind and Bolshevism will stalk abroad in the land and the anarchist will have found his ideal state. God makes no distinction between classes. It is not the money that makes the man but, as Pope said, "Worth makes the man and want of it the fellow."

The two chief objects of these societies are fraternity and protection. As fraternalists we do not provide ourselves with an insurance policy as an investment but as a protection for our loved ones, to provide them with food and clothing and with some of the comforts of life. The protection of home and family is our most sacred pledge with our loyalty to God. The great membership in these societies, therefore, have rendered an invaluable service to their Government and to society by protecting their homes and their families. A good home and proper living conditions for all of our citizens are the best safeguards for the future security of this Republic. Therefore I think it entirely proper at this time to direct the attention of the Members of Congress on this floor to some of the conditions that exist and methods used in perpetuating abuses in the administration of the affairs of one of these societies, namely, the Woodmen of the World, with headquarters at Omaha, Nebr.

In 1899 I joined this order, and it was a great order until the present management came into power. This was the first secret order with which I affiliated. I have promptly paid my dues since that time to the present. I have sung the praises of woodcraft in every section of the State where I live and in other States. It has done a wonderful amount of good, and that record would still be unbroken with the proper management of its affairs. No man should be bigger than the membership whom he is supposed to serve. When he becomes a dictator, with the laws so manipulated as to give him absolute control with an effort to destroy every member who does not submit to his dictation, then I believe it is time for Congress to take a hand.

The Woodmen of the World was not organized for profit nor the enrichment of its officers, but for the protection of the homes of the members, with a rate that the wage earner could afford to pay. When I became a member my policy was for $2,000, which I still carry. My rate was $1.30 per month on this amount, exclusive of the war tax and local camp dues. The constitution provides that in addition to the monthly rate extra assessments can be levied, and that is one of the reasons the rate can be lower than that of the old-line companies. No member would object to an extra assessment when necessary to relieve some extraordinary occasion. As I now remember, but two of these extra assessments have been collected since my membership in the society.

I have had the honor of being head consul of the jurisdiction of Oklahoma and therefore a delegate to two of our sovereign camps or national conventions. I attended the sovereign camp at Jacksonville, Fla., in July, 1913. That was the last sovereign camp presided over by that great fraternalist, our first sovereign commander and founder of the order, Joseph Cullen Root. At that time in his report to the sovereign camp he gave it as his opinion that it would not be necessary to raise the rates. That was preached all over the country by the officers of the order, but as soon as Sovereign Commander Root died the present sovereign commander began laying his plans for a raise in rates. The first raise after that time came in July, 1915, during the sovereign camp at St. Paul, Minn., where I was again a delegate. Not a word of the proposed raise in rates was uttered until after the convention assembled. Again it was stated that no further raise was contemplated, but at the sovereign camp in Atlanta, Ga., in July, 1917, another raise was made. Again it was stated that there would be no further raise in rates, but lo and behold, the greatest raise was yet to come. At Chicago, Ill., July, 1919, the most unjustifiable raise of all was put into effect at this convention. Before the sovereign camp convened in Chicago the present sovereign commander stated that there would be no raise in rates.

At the Chicago sovereign camp in 1919 the sovereign commander, W. A. Fraser, said that the order was insolvent some 60 per cent. What would you think of a bank or any other business establishment doubling the salary of its chief officers when the institution was in an insolvent condition? You know that no company or firm would be permitted to do such a thing. The salary of the sovereign commander of the Woodmen of the World has been increased from $7,500 per year in 1900 to $25,000 in 1919. But that does not tell it all. At the sovereign camp in St. Paul in 1915 the convention increased the allowance for the sovereign commander by $2,500 per year for "entertainment purposes." Now, whom was he going to entertain but W. A. Fraser. He could use that money in any way he wished, without any accounting, and it is therefore nothing but additional salary? Therefore instead of receiving $25,000 per year salary he receives $27,500 per year.

Think of it. Almost four times as much as the salary of a United States Senator, and more than twice as much as is received by a Cabinet officer of the United States. Gentlemen of the committee, think of paying $27,500 salary per year to a man as head of a fraternal organization, and when he is neither an actuary, an insurance man, nor a fraternalist. Had the founder of the order lived he would never have permitted the order to pay him any such an exorbitant amount, contributed, as it was, largely by poor men. He was in the order for the benefit of the membership and not for the purpose of enriching himself. The present sovereign commander has a peculiar brand of fraternalism. Fraternalism has changed in the order since the election of W. A. Fraser. Our first sovereign commander was an insurance man, an able actuary, and a fraternalist.

Some people evidently prefer the dark to the light "on account of their evil deeds." At the sovereign camp at St. Paul in 1915, as a delegate from Oklahoma and past head consul, I introduced a resolution requiring the salaries of the sovereign officers to be published in each issue of the Sovereign Visitor, our official paper, and the sovereign commander, W. A. Fraser, said at that time that such a requirement had no place in the laws of the order. Why did he oppose the resolution except for the reason that he wanted to keep the members in the dark as he had done up to that time? He knew that if the membership found out what enormous salaries were being paid to their officers that they would rise in rebellion against such management.

He wanted the salary and got it, but wanted the members kept in the dark as much as possible. Why should not the people who employ and pay a man know the amount of his salary? At that convention I predicted that at the next sovereign camp W. A. Fraser would be out for another increase in salary. He had gained more power in the order and was not so modest now, and his salary was raised to $25,000 per year, and he still received the $2,500 for "entertainment purposes." He tells the boys that he is a big man and worth more than that. His extravagant management of the affairs of the order has almost brought it to ruin. By his autocracy, extravagance, and mismanagement he has ruined many a home and blasted the last fond hope of many dying fathers when, by the impossible rates, he caused them to lapse their insurance. He has brought more tears to the eyes of widowed mothers and caused more hungry children to cry for bread than any man I ever knew. Yet he is not satisfied. He admits that the rates are too high when he advertises a "second cash refund to our members." No man ever joined the Woodmen of the World with a view of having anything refunded except the full face of his policy at his death. It was his, for the contract was as sacred as ever bound honest men, but W. A. Fraser took from his wife and children that which was intended to assist in keeping the "wolf from the door" after he started for that "everlasting camp." In the printed advertising of the sovereign commander he says: "Insurance at cost—society 100 per cent solvent plus." Now, that can mean nothing but that we are collecting more than necessary, even with our exorbitant salaries, to pay all cost of running the order and in addition pay all death losses.

Mr. Chairman, my policy was issued December 18, 1899, in the order for $2,000. My rate up to the raise in 1915, on the $2,000 policy, was $1.30 per month. With the war tax I paid $1.40 per month on this policy for $2,000. This was in addition to the local camp dues. The order contracted to pay my beneficiaries $2,000 at my death and, in addition, to erect a monument at my grave. Now, what has the present ruler of all "he surveys" done in my case? In a letter from the sovereign clerk, dated November 30, 1921, was sent me a "statement of rates," and so forth. It says:

> You are now paying a monthly rate of $1.40, and have a lien of $290 charged against your certificate, being continued in force for the death benefit, subject to the lien, but not for the monument and disabilities benefits.
> Privilege No. 4 says:
> If you do not wish to have a lien charged against your certificate you can rerate on this privilege and exchange your old certificate for the universal certificate, which will be in full force and effect, for the death and modified disability benefits, but without the monument benefit. Your rate will be $64.76 per year, or $5.62 per month.
> Privilege No. 5 says:
> If you wish to have your certificate in full force and effect for the death, monument, and disability benefits, and not have a lien charged against it, your rate will be $71.08 annually, or $6.16 monthly, and no lien will be charged against your certificate.

Privilege No. 5 contains the same benefits that were promised me in my original policy. This is only one concrete case, and there are thousands of others, where the increase is greater and more unjustifiable.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, just think of that increase in my case. Before 1915 I was paying $16.80 per year on $2,000 for my insurance in the Woodmen of the World, and am now required to pay for the same benefits the sum of $71.08 per year on the $2,000, or an increase of over 323 per cent. Who will deny the fact that such an increase is unjustifiable? As I said before, many policies were raised more than this. It is nothing but confiscation and putting money into the pockets of W. A. Fraser and other sovereign officers from the sorrow of widowed mothers and orphaned children.

The sovereign commander was present at a special head camp of the Oklahoma Woodmen in the fall of 1919 at Oklahoma City, and before arriving he sent word ahead that he and the general attorney would spend the whole day in explaining the new rates. When he landed he soon found out that some of the other members knew something about the affairs of the order, and when members know of the excessive extravagance and reckless management of the affairs of the Woodmen of the World by the sovereign officers they denounce that management as they did in Oklahoma. At the head camp in Enid, Okla., in March, 1921, none of the sovereign officers attended, and did not even try to elect a ticket, as was done in most of the other States. Since 1900 the membership of the order has paid to its sovereign commander the enormous sum of $254,500, and to the sovereign clerk the sum of $182,300, and in addition large sums as mileage and per diem. The other sovereign officers received large amounts in salaries and per diem. The present sovereign commander, W. A. Fraser, as such officer has drawn as salary alone the past six years the sum of $115,000, and in addition to this amount he was sovereign adviser of the order for many years, and in that capacity received a large salary. The sovereign camp in New York City, July, 1921, paid its delegates the sum of $30 per diem and mileage in the amount of 20 cents for each mile traveled in attending the convention. That amount was, of course, favored by the sovereign commander, for otherwise it would not have carried for such a large amount. As soon as old Sovereign Commander Root died, the present commander, W. A. Fraser, had another coin made with the image of himself instead of the founder of the order, as formerly was done.

Mr. Chairman, we sought to remedy the situation at the last sovereign camp, but the sovereign commander controlled that convention as before by questionable methods, and changed the constitution which required head camps and sovereign camps to meet every two years. In New York it was changed, and unless this Congress can find a way out there will be no sovereign camp until 1925. Why did he want to put off for four years? There is but one answer, and that is that he was afraid that the members would "get him" in two years and thought that we could not keep up the fight for four years. But Mr. Fraser, the membership is thoroughly aroused and more determined than ever.

The members know that the order can not survive under your management, and we are still "after you." [Laughter.] Many members are remaining in the order hoping that its affairs will be readjusted and that it may be brought back to the principles of fraternalism and protection. Mr. Fraser, you have grown rich, wealthy, and powerful out of the funds of the Woodmen of the World. The membership have lost confidence in you, as you well know, and you should heed the cries of the widow and orphan for protection. We can never return to the principles upon which the order was founded until the removal of W. A. Fraser as sovereign commander, and we intend to keep up the fight until that time.

Mr. Chairman, the resolution under consideration asks that the House give the Speaker authority to appoint a committee of seven members to investigate the affairs of the Woodmen of the World and ascertain whether there is any way whereby the sovereign commander can be forced to call head camp meetings in the different States and a sovereign camp convention that the membership may have a fair voice in its management.

I think the resolution in itself, and which can be substantiated amply, is sufficient to warrant an investigation. A short time ago we had a membership of 900,000, which in the past two years has been greatly decreased. This membership constitutes a great number of our citizens, home builders, and those who want to provide protection for their families. An investigation is the most effective relief that can be granted. I know that Congress has much to occupy its time, but this is someing that Congress should take cognizance of and start a probe.

The present sovereign commander has so changed the constitution of the order that any member of the society who, in the judgment of the sovereign commander, says anything derogatory about any of the sovereign officers may be dragged across the United States at his own expense to be tried before the sovereign commander, W. A. Fraser, in Omaha, Nebr. [Laughter.] In no civilized country of the world would the people stand for a law like that. That is the law of the king and emperor, but can not prevail in free America. He has already sent a summons to a Member of this House to appear before him in Omaha, Nebr., to stand trial because he charges that said Member made statements in the House derogatory to the sovereign officers. That is the method used by W. A. Fraser, the head of the order at this time. He is threatening to cancel the insurance of said Member, on which he has paid for 20 years, and to expel him from the order.

Mr. Chairman, I may be next, but propose to set forth the facts in the management of the affairs of the order. I wish to inquire from the membership of this House if you will permit a Member to be threatened with expulsion from any order for the reason that said Member calls the attention of the House to the management of such order? We can not afford to let this threat go unnoticed. Who is W. A. Fraser that he assumes more authority than the Constitution gives any other citizen, officer, organization, or court? Section 6 of the Constitution of the United States provides that "for any speech or debate in either House they—the Members—shall not be questioned in any other place." Yet W. A. Fraser would set this provision aside and expel a Member of this House and cancel his insurance for criticizing the management of the Woodmen of the World. Are we going to submit in that manner and be driven by threats from any officer of any organization from an investigation of the affairs of such order? On that insurance policy that I have been paying for more than 22 years I am laying myself liable to expulsion from the order and having my policy canceled for citing the facts in this speech. W. A. Fraser defies the law and sets himself up greater than Congress itself and assumes more power by so questioning a Member of the House for his "speech or debate." Mr. Chairman, if you or any other Member of this House should ask for an investigation of the affairs and management of the Woodmen of the World or should make a speech in the House criticizing any of the sovereign officers, you would face expulsion and have your insurance canceled, no matter how long you had paid, and your wife and children would be deprived of that which is rightfully theirs, all to satisfy the autocracy of one man.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWANK. I will.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman, in view of what he has said, want to make 12 members of the Committee on Rules put themselves in contempt of this august person? Nay, nay. [Laughter.]

Mr. SWANK. That is what I want to find out, whether he is bigger than Congress. [Laughter.]

This is not the first investigation that has been asked in this House. Many investigations have been made in the different States. This is a question of such magnitude that Congress should order an investigation, and should do it now. Thousands of good people, though poor, would have their rights preserved. A national convention or sovereign camp should be called at some central place in the United States and an election had by regularly elected delegates selected at the different head camps. I feel sure that Congress would order an election and the sovereign camp convened after making an investigation. This is a case of national importance and should have the attention of Congress. We would not be here with this resolution and urging its adoption had not the sovereign commander moved the next sovereign camp up from two to four years, and thereby providing himself with $110,000 more salary before another sovereign camp convened. If another sovereign camp convened in 1923, as the constitution of the order provided before the national convention of 1921 changed it to four years on request of the sovereign commander, then in that event we would not ask the adoption of this resolution. The great membership have lost confidence in the present management. I am sure if another convention could be held in the near future and the members given an opportunity to express themselves, that the troubles confronting the order would be adjusted satisfactorily to all except to those sovereign officers who have fattened on the money taken from widows and children of deceased members. It is a reasonable resolution and one that contains the greatest merit. Has it come to pass in the history of the American Congress when a Member elected by the people does not dare to talk about the affairs of any order unless his talk is first approved by the head officer of that society? Ah, but some one says why not settle the matter in court? Mr. Chairman, the sovereign commander uses the funds of the membership with which to fight them. It is a sacred trust fund, but not so considered by him. In conducting the fight for the membership we have been compelled to spend our own money in connection with that collected from other members. I have spent much time and money for just an humble member in fighting to have a fair settlement of the affairs of the order. If a sovereign camp could be convened, with delegates fairly elected, then all would abide the result. The head of no order or organization should be permitted to threaten a Member of this House for calling the attention of Congress to conditions in such organization and for requesting an investigation.

I hope that the Committee on Rules will report the resolution favorably, and that it will be adopted by this House in the name of humanity and fraternity. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I am going to yield for one more speech which will exhaust all the time, and at the conclusion of that speech I think the Clerk should read the first section of the bill and immediately after that I will move that the committee rise. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KOPP].

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, when we entered the World War hospitalization became one of the most important subjects for the consideration of the American people. It could not be otherwise, for war means destruction. Wounds of every kind and diseases of every nature are the inevitable result. War takes the flower of youth and robs it of health and strength and hope and reason.

We are a rich Nation—the richest in all the world. Our duty to the disabled ex-service men is in direct proportion to our wealth. We shall be recreant to that duty if we do not expend for them every dollar that will in any way contribute to their health and happiness. Science has made great advancement. Medical skill can do many marvelous things that were not dreamed of when our fathers fought the Civil War. The disabled ex-service men are entitled to the benefit of every advance in science and to all the skill that the medical profession can exercise. They are the Nation's wards, and in dealing with them we can not be too generous.

Heretofore several appropriations have been made by Congress for hospital facilities, totaling over $25,000,000. It was thought that these appropriations would prove sufficient. It was thought that they would provide adequate hospital facilities. We now know that these appropriations have proven insufficient. We now know that they have not provided adequate hospital facilities.

Many ex-service men have been unable to obtain hospital treatment. Many others have been treated in contract hospitals, where the treatment accorded them has been entirely unworthy of ex-service men. Some contract hospitals, indeed, have been of a very high order, but many of them have neglected the ex-service men intrusted to their care and have been wholly indifferent to their welfare. The facts would justify criticism much more severe.

In another respect the hospital facilities have failed to meet the needs of the ex-service men. From among the disabled ex-service men two great classes have emerged—those suffering from tuberculosis and those suffering from mental trouble. The disabled ex-service men may now all be divided into three classes—the tubercular, the mental, and those having general and surgical disabilities. Each class numbers about one-third. It is apparent to everyone that tubercular and mental patients should be placed in hospitals built especially for them. In many cases this has not been done because it has not been possible.

Some of our hospitals are unfit even for those afflicted with general and surgical disabilities. Some of them are comprised of temporary war shacks. They can neither be heated nor ventilated properly. In some instances the location of hospitals is undesirable and even unhealthful. Some of the hospitals are not fireproof. Disabled ex-service men should not be kept in any building that is not fireproof. Especially is this true of those who are suffering from mental troubles, for if fire should occur many of these would be completely at the mercy of the flames. The American people would never forgive those in authority if hospitalized ex-service men should be burned to death in a fire trap.

The President of the United States has been keenly interested in this subject. He has realized that more adequate provision must be made. In order to coordinate the different hospitalization activities and bring about unity of purpose he created a board, known as the Federal Board of Hospitalization, composed of the following officials: The Surgeon General of the Army, the Surgeon General of the Navy, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, the Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, the Board of Managers for the Home of Volunteer Soldiers, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and an official designated by the President, known as the chief coordinator, who is president of the board. This board made a complete and thorough investigation of this entire subject and determined that the amount named in this bill, to wit, $17,000,000, would make it possible to do full and complete justice in hospitalization to the disabled ex-service men. Your Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, after extended hearings, came to the same conclusion. This amount will make it possible to dispense with every doubtful contract hospital. With this amount it will be possible to build sufficient special hospitals for the tubercular and mental patients.

On March 1 of this year there were 30,879 ex-service men in the hospitals. A large number have heretofore been in the hospitals for varying periods. The total number of ex-service men who had been admitted to hospitals up to March 1 of this year was 220,654. The peak of hospitalization, however, has not yet been reached. That will probably come in three or four years, when there will likely be 35,000 ex-service men in the hospitals. It is feared that tubercular and mental cases as a direct result of the war will develop for several years to come. It is thought that many of those who have been in the hospitals and have been discharged will find it necessary to return from time to time.

Of the total number given above as being in the hospitals on March 1 of this year, 12,274 were tubercular patients. Ex-service men suffering from tuberculosis are, of course, found in all parts of the country. Proportionately, the most are found in the Southwestern States, where the climate is beneficial for this disease and whither many have gone in the hope of being cured. It is now well established, though rather contrary to current opinion, that cures of tuberculosis, especially of incipient tuberculosis, are possible in every State in the Union, and hence, while proper provision will be made for the Southwest, tubercular hospitals will be established in all parts of the country. The hospitals, in any event, must be taken to the people as well as the people to the hospitals. On account of family ties and other sentimental reasons many people will not go far from home in order to take treatment. With the care that can be given to the tubercular ex-service men, after the passage of this bill, it is reasonable to hope that many of them will be completely restored to health.

On March 1 there were 9,069 mental patients in the hospitals. All classes of disabled ex-service men evoke our sympathies, but none more so than those having mental trouble. According to Dr. Thomas W. Salmon, one of the distinguished alienists of this country, "the ratio of insanity among the ex-service men is practically three times what it is among civilians of the same age." This means that of the 9,069 mental patients in the hospitals on March 1, two-thirds, or over 6,000, were afflicted with mental trouble solely on account of the war. The toll taken by war is, indeed, terrible. Of these mental patients, over 4,000 are in contract hospitals. This is a most unfortunate condition. Some of the contract hospitals are wholly unfit for mental patients. In some cases the buildings are in no way adapted to their needs. In some instances the physicians and nurses in charge of them have not had training or experience along these lines and do not know how to treat mental diseases. The importance of this can not be emphasized too strongly. The patients are practically all young men. Many of them can be cured if promptly given the proper care and attention. They are entitled to the best and should have it without delay. Again quoting Doctor Salmon, "Every day of delay means that some man who is now on the borderland between curability and incurability passes over into the incurable stage." How important, then, that everyone who is connected with this problem should take prompt action.

According to modern authority, institutions for mental patients should not consist of one large building, but rather of a group of detached buildings, each building housing from 150 to 250 patients. These buildings will not be useless even when the time for hospitalization has passed. Unfortunately, many of these mental patients can never be cured. Many of them, I regret to say, will be shrouded in mental darkness as long as life lasts. When every attempt has been made to cure them and when every effort has failed, it will still be necessary to house them. They will become permanent wards of the Government. The hospitals to be erected under the provisions of this bill can later be utilized as domiciles for the incurables. These incurables will need our solicitous care through all their remaining years. How helpless we feel when we contemplate their sad condition. How anxious we are to serve them, and yet how little we can really do for them. Would that we could do more.

When the previous hospitalization bill was passed the Veterans' Bureau was still a part of the Treasury Department. Since then, by a change in the law, it has become an independent bureau, and the director now reports to the President instead of to the Secretary of the Treasury. Under the law as it now stands the Director of the Veterans' Bureau is responsible for the care and treatment of the disabled ex-service men, and for that reason this bill gives him the power to erect the hospitals. The committee took the position that as the director had the responsibility he should also have the authority. This is likewise the view of the Federal Board of Hospitalization and has been approved in writing by President Harding. Furthermore, the commander of the American Legion, Col. Hanford MacNider, in strong and vigorous language, on behalf of the American Legion, has expressly approved this provision of the bill. Colonel MacNider, a brave soldier who won renown on the field of battle, and who, I am proud to say, is a citizen of my own State, is devoting himself to the cause of the American Legion and knows the sentiments and wishes of that great organization. In this matter of hospitalization, which is so close to the hearts of the ex-service men, I believe in following their wishes. We need these hospitals without delay. Therefore let there be no divided authority.

Let us speed the passage of this bill. Let us hasten the day when every disabled ex-service man will have the best care that a grateful and generous Nation can give him. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to provide additional hospital and outpatient dispensary facilities for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau, by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise, such hospitals and outpatient dispensary facilities to include the necessary buildings and auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, approach work, roads, and trackage facilities leading thereto, vehicles, live stock, furniture, equipment and accessories, and also to provide accommodations for officers, nurses, and attending personnel; and the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized to accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes named herein. Such hospital plants shall be of fireproof construction and the location and nature thereof, whether for the treatment of tuberculosis, neuropsychiatric, or general medical and surgical cases, shall be in the discretion of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now arise.

Mr. MADDEN. But I have an amendment that I want to have pending for the information of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The section will be open for amendment to-morrow.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is only fair to have this amendment pending for the information of the House so that Members can read it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield for that purpose?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; because other amendments are to be offered. There is no reason why we should take up all of this time in recognizing one amendment when there are others who desire to have theirs pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10864 and had come to no resolution thereon.

GEORGE W. TURNER.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes to present certain facts and reasons to the Members of the House why the name of a good soldier, George W. Turner, with an honorable record, should be removed from the so-called slacker list, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 6, 1922, on page 3858, in the first column—about the middle of the column—under the subhead "Local board for county of Davis, State of Iowa," the last name appearing there is that of George W. Turner, of Belknap, Iowa. The facts in the case are that George W. Turner went into the first draft in September, 1917. He was in the service with an honorable record until June 16, 1919, and over half of that time he served in France. On June 16, 1919, he received an honorable discharge at Camp Dodge. He then went back to the farm, where he had been before he went into the Army. He knew nothing about anything being against his record until last January, when notices were posted in the post offices of Davis County, Iowa, offering $50 reward for his arrest as a deserter from the Army. On January 20 of this year he wrote me a letter and gave me his whole record, when he went in the Army, when and where he served, the dates of his transfers to different organizations, and so forth, and many other details of his Army service, stating that on July 14, 1918, he was placed in the Fifty-ninth Infantry, Fourth Division, which fought at Chateau-Thierry, and so forth. I shall not read the letter. I submitted this letter to the War Department, and on February 4 the War Department wrote me and explained and apologized for the error through which his name appeared on the list of alleged deserters and said:

However, it is evident that Mr. Turner was not a draft evader in any sense of the term, and that the publication of his name as a deserter from the draft was a mistake. The department regrets that this error has been made, and desires to assure you, and also Mr. Turner, that every step possible will be taken to give wide publicity to the fact that the name appeared upon the list through error. His name has been removed from the list, and will not be included in the list to be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Notwithstanding this assurance to me and to Mr. Turner, his name did appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 6, this month. On the 8th day of March I called the War Department on the phone and called their attention to what had occurred. The same day The Adjutant General wrote me a letter, a few sentences from which I desire to read at this time:

With further reference to the case of George W. Turner, who was reported as a draft deserter, and it was subsequently ascertained that his name did not properly belong on the deserter list, he having served honorably and received an honorable discharge, and whose name was, nevertheless, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a draft deserter, it is very much regretted that, through oversight in this office, his name was not removed from the list of draft deserters published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

In closing, The Adjutant General says:

Thanking you for bringing the case to my attention, and with apologies for the inexcusable oversight of this office, as you had specifically brought the case to attention, I am, yours very truly.

The situation is this: His name had been removed from the list of alleged draft deserters in the War Department before his name was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

His name appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by an oversight. Now, it is true next month his name will likely appear among the list of those whose names were removed from the list in the War Department. But the trouble with the list in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is that, under the present unanimous agreement given the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] to publish the names of alleged deserters in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when a man's name once gets in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD it stays there forever unless corrected in the manner I shall ask in a moment.

Mr. MADDEN. It ought to be removed from the permanent RECORD.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is what I am coming to. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to remove and omit from the permanent RECORD the last line under the subhead "Local board for the county of Davis, State of Iowa," on page 3858 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 6, about the middle of the first column, reading as follows:

90. Geo. W. Turner (George Turner), Belknap, Iowa.

I ask unanimous consent that that line be omitted from the permanent CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to change the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what date was this list published?

Mr. RAMSEYER. March 6—this month.

Mr. MONDELL. Then the permanent RECORD has not been published?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I understand it has not yet been made up. I am not absolutely sure about that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the letters from which I have quoted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letters are as follows:

FLORIS, DAVIS COUNTY, IOWA, January 20, 1922.

Congressman C. W. RAMSEYER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing to ask if you will help me to get my service record straightened out. I am on the list of deserters and my name is is every post office in the county with $50 reward for my arrest.

Now, Mr. RAMSEYER, I'll tell you a little about my Army service. I answered the call and went in the first bunch from Bloomfield, September 22, 1917, to Camp Dodge. I was transferred October 30 to the One hundred and thirty-third Infantry of the Thirty-fourth Division. Was sent to France in a casualty outfit for replacement. I sailed from Boston June 30, 1918, landed in Liverpool, England, July 14, crossed to France and was placed in the Fifty-ninth Infantry, of the Fourth Division, on or about July 18.

The Fourth Division was driving on the point of that horseshoe bend just above Chateau-Thierry and was in the lines when I was placed in the Fifty-ninth Infantry. We were fighting the Prussian Guards, driving them away from Paris, and I believe that was the most severe fighting of the whole war. We were relieved by the Seventy-seventh Division August 16, and the Fourth had lost nearly 7,000 men since I had been placed in the division.

August 27 I was sent to the field hospital, was taken from there to Base Hospital No. 18, and later was sent to Hospital No. 22, at Bordeaux, in southern France. Was discharged from the hospital at Bordeaux in October, was on special duty at a replacement camp and did guard duty for "Hard-Boiled Smith" at a prison farm near Paris for about two or three weeks. I was then transferred to Company I, One hundred and forty-fourth Infantry, Thirty-sixth Division, which division I was with until we landed in New York, June 6, 1919. Was sent to Camp Dodge and given an honorable discharge the 16th day of June, 1919. My discharge is marked "No A. W. O. L.; no absence under G. O. 31114 or under G. O. 45. Character excellent." I was one of the first ones called from this county and about the last one home.

Now, you see, through some mistake, they stick my name up in every post office in the county and offer $50 for my arrest. I do not like to have this against me on my record, so if you will help me get this thing fixed up I'll be very thankful to you. My grade was private first class, No. 1412914.

Yours truly,

GEORGE W. TURNER.

P. S.—My address was Belknap at the time I entered the service.

Mr. RAMSEYER, will you please look into this thing for me and get the War Department to take my name from that list. The charges are that I never was in the service at all; that I did not report for duty when called. I think the fault started here at Bloomfield with the local board.

Yours very truly,

GEORGE W. TURNER,
Floris, Iowa.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 4, 1922.

Hon. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to the letter herewith from Mr. George W. Turner, of R. F. D. No. 3, Floris, Iowa, which was left at this office by you in connection with a letter to you from this office of the 27th ultimo, relative to the publication of Mr. Turner's name in the list of alleged draft deserters of the local board for Davis County, Iowa, which list appears to have been recently posted in the post offices of Davis County, and referring especially to Mr. Turner's request that his draft record be straightened out in view of his record of service in the Army, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

The list of alleged draft deserters of the local board for the county of Davis, State of Iowa, was dated January 17, 1922, and was to be released to the morning papers of January 27, 1922. In connection with your call upon this office in the interests of Mr. Turner, a telegram was sent to the commanding general of the Seventh Corps Area, at Fort Crook, Nebr., on January 26, 1922, just as soon as the fact was discovered that Mr. Turner's name should not be included in the list, which telegram instructed the commanding general to hold up the list from publication until further instructions. A reply from the commanding general at Fort Crook set forth that the telegram from this office was received by him too late to stop the publication of the list which had already been released for the morning newspapers of January 27, 1922. It is regretted, therefore, that the department was too late in preventing the publication of the list in the newspapers on the 27th ultimo. It appears that some of the postmasters in Davis County posted the list prior to January 27, 1922.

An investigation of the draft records in the case of George W. Turner, Serial No. 760, Order No. 90, a registrant of the local board for the county of Davis, State of Iowa, shows that he was reported as a delinquent through error on the part of the local board. The local board in a letter dated September 14, 1917, to the adjutant general of the State explained its action in this respect as follows:

"I want to make an explanation in regard to George Turner, serial No. 760, who was reported to you on Form 146–A. On August 8 we received notice from Mr. Turner, who was in North Dakota, wanting a permit to be examined by the local board at the place where he was located. We gave him permit by telegram to be examined by another local board, but did not get the result of his examination until we had reported him on Form 146–A.

"Mr. Turner is not a slacker, and wants to go when his turn comes. Mr. Turner was in my office to-day and showed me a letter he had received from you asking him to report to you on September 15. I would like to have Mr. Turner to remain here and go with our next bunch, if you will permit him to do so. We thought after this explanation of his case was made to you it would be all right to send him next week with the other boys. Mr. Turner wants to do the right thing, and will do whatever you insist."

Notwithstanding this explanation on the part of the local board, the State adjutant general included the name of George Turner on the list of final delinquents and deserters of the local board for Davis County, Iowa, which list was forwarded to the department. When the names were transcribed from the final list to the list to be released for publication the construction placed upon certain remarks appearing opposite the name of George Turner was such that it was not deemed necessary to refer to the individual record of the registrant, with which the above quoted matter was filed. The final lists of delinquents and deserters were separate records from the individual records, to which individual records reference was made only in such cases where it was deemed necessary in order to ascertain the true status of the case. However, it is evident that Mr. Turner was not a draft evader in any sense of the term, and that the publication of his name as a deserter from the draft was a mistake. The department regrets that this error has been made, and desires to assure you, and also Mr. Turner, that every step possible will be taken to give wide publicity to the fact that the name appeared upon the list through error. His name has been removed from the list and will not be included in the list to be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. Turner was regularly inducted into the military service by his local board on September 21, 1917. The local board for Davis County, Iowa, sent its first contingent of four men to Camp Dodge on September 5, 1917. Mr. Turner went with the second contingent of 29 men, which was entrained at Bloomfield, Iowa, on September 22, 1917. The military records show that he served overseas from June 20, 1918, to June 6, 1919, and was honorably discharged on June 16, 1919, at Camp Dodge, Iowa.

Very respectfully,

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

(1 inclosure.)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, March 8, 1922.

Hon. C. W. RAMSEYER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. RAMSEYER: With further reference to the case of George W. Turner, who was reported as a draft deserter and it was subsequently ascertained that his name did not properly belong on the deserter list, he having served honorably and received an honorable discharge, and whose name was, nevertheless, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a draft deserter, it is very much regretted that, through oversight in this office, his name was not removed from the list of draft deserters published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Effort was made to remove his name from the list sent to the commanding general Seventh Corps Area, but the list was published by him before receipt of the telegram from this office directing removal of Turner's name. The notice of removal of his name from the list was given the same publicity as the original list, but, as stated above, the removal of his name from the list for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was overlooked. In the next publication of draft deserters in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement will be inserted that Turner's name has been removed.

Thanking you for bringing the case to my attention, and with apologies for the inexcusable oversight of this office, as you had specifically brought the case to attention, I am,

Very truly yours,

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Friday, March 31, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

4921. By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Petition of the Albion College faculty, against the provision of Fordney tariff bill relative to certain provisions; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 31, 1922.

The chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we turn our thoughts toward Thee this morning, gratefully recognizing Thy goodness and Thy grace so continually bestowed upon us. We thank Thee for recent accomplishments and what they may mean to the world at large as well as to our own loved country and its institutions.

The Lord give guidance and wisdom supreme to-day, so that everything may meet with Thine approval, and when the night comes that there may be had satisfaction in heart and life that work nobly accomplished has met with Thine own gracious acceptance. We ask in Christ Jesus' name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, March 16, 1922, when, on request of Mr. WARREN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

TRAVEL PAY OF DISCHARGED ENLISTED MEN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation amending section 126 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, as amended, with respect to the payment of travel pay of enlisted men on discharge, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, when we adjourned last night we were in the midst of a roll call on a conference report. I think we now should have a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harreld	Nicholson	Spencer
Borah	Harris	Norbeck	Sterling
Broussard	Heflin	Norris	Sutherland
Cameron	Hitchcock	Oddie	Swanson

France	McNary	Rawson	Williams
Gerry	Moses	Sheppard	Willis
Glass	Myers	Shields
Gooding	Nelson	Shortridge
Hale	New	Simmons

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was requested to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] are detained at a meeting of the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

REGISTRATION AND VOTING IN RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter in regard to registration and voting, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 27, 1922.

HON. PETER G. GERRY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Can anything be done to right a great wrong that is going on year after year in Rhode Island by keeping a great number of honest working men and women from voting at the election?

Here in Providence everybody who wants to register as a voter has to go to the city hall between 9 o'clock in the morning and 5 in the afternoon. This is just the time when laboring people are at work, and they can not go and register without losing their time or their jobs, or both. It is not so in other States. Why must it be so here?

If men and women do not register before the end of June, they can not vote in November. If they can not vote, they are at the mercy of those who can.

We want justice, not mercy.

Your friend,

EUGENE L. DONAIS.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STERLING presented a petition of sundry citizens of Plankinton and Stickney, in the State of South Dakota, praying for the revival of the United States Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize the prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SPENCER presented memorials of sundry citizens and members of women's clubs of St. Joseph, Mo., remonstrating against inclusion in the pending tariff bill of increased duties on women's leather gloves, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Labette County, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution of the Twinsburg (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the enactment of legislation providing a fivefold plan of adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, the funds therefor to be raised by a sales tax, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented, in the nature of a memorial, a letter from the Business Men's Club of Cincinnati, Ohio, giving their views on the passage of the soldiers' bonus bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of Columbus Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Columbus, Ohio, favoring the total suspension of immigration during such period as may be needful, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. LADD presented the memorials of A. H. Anderson and 13 others, of Carpio, and Irwin J. Wagoner and 91 others, of Napoleon, all in the State of North Dakota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Napoleon, N. Dak., remonstrating against inclusion in the pending tariff bill of high duties on chemicals that go into the manufacture of medicines, and also against the levy of duties on articles not grown or manufactured in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of G. H. Gisleberg and 3 others, of Maddock; Jacob G. Krueger and 9 others, of Kief; Hans Freitag and 71 others, of Scranton; George Knall and 11 others, of Bismarck; Ole S. Erickstein and 5 others, of Tagus; Louis Johnson and 15 others, of Norma; J. P. Ramsey and 17 others, of Binford and vicinity; D. D. Cunningham and 14 others, of Mosher; F. L. Compton and 19 others, of Buffalo; Thomas Landsveck and 71 others, of Dunseith; B. Pieker and 18 others, of Wildrose; Eddie Tormanen and 31 others, of Ellendale and vicinity; Thorvald Tvetin and 93 others, of Hatton and vicinity; Olaf Dilland and 32 others, of Tioga and vicinity; and Paul Haning and 22 others, of Oriska and vicinity, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

HENRY S. KIERSTED.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2232) for the relief of Henry S. Kiersted, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

DEVELOPMENT OF UNDERGROUND WATERS IN NEVADA.

Mr. PITTMAN. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 2983) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant extensions of time under permits for the development of underground waters within the State of Nevada, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 584) thereon.

This is an emergency measure and should be acted upon at once if it is to be acted on at all. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is favorably reported upon by the Department of the Interior and there is a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest that it go over one day. I have not had an opportunity to examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. I object.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand that the bill must go over on objection. I shall call it up after the Senator from Wisconsin has examined it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. PITTMAN subsequently said: A few minutes ago I reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys the bill (S. 2983) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant extensions of time under permits for the development of underground waters within the State of Nevada, and for other purposes. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has examined the bill and now states that he has no objection to it. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the bill should be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior may, if he shall find that any permittee has been unable, with the exercise of diligence, to begin or continue operations for the development of underground waters within the time prescribed by sections 4 and 5 of the act of Congress approved October 22, 1919 (41 Stats. 295), extend the time for the beginning, recommencement, or completion of the said operations described in said sections for such time, not exceeding two years, and upon such conditions as he shall prescribe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WALSH of Montana:

A bill (S. 3364) for the relief of W. O. Whipps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3365) to provide for the addition of the names of certain persons to the final roll of the Indians of the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont. (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McKINLEY:

A bill (S. 3366) granting a pension to William D. Harrington; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 3367) for the relief of T. C. Napier; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3368) for the purchase of a site for and the erection of a post-office building at Fort Benning, Ga. (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3369) granting an increase of pension to Jacob E. Richards; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CULBERSON:

A bill (S. 3370) granting an increase of pension to Harriett H. Harrison; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 3371) for the relief of Capt. Sven Christenson, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY TO HAITI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A resolution (S. Res. 249), by Mr. KING, requesting the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate the power of the President to appoint an ambassador extraordinary to Haiti without the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the mover of the resolution is not in the Chamber. It seems to me it ought to lie over until he is present. It may keep its place without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the resolution just reported may go over. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The morning business is closed.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the conference report on the bill making appropriations for the Interior Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report named by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is in charge of the pending conference report in the Senate, if this is a final report on the bill?

Mr. WARREN. It is not.

Mr. MYERS. Then I wish to say a few words about some matters which I understand are embraced in the partial conference report which is now before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. A roll call was ordered on the report, and it is now in process of being taken.

Mr. MYERS. But we adjourned the session of the Senate on yesterday, I understand, and other business has since intervened. I do not understand the parliamentary status is such that the Senate must begin exactly where it left off on yesterday. This is a different day, and I had supposed we would begin over again. I shall not long delay action on the report, but I do not understand there is any parliamentary rule which requires the roll immediately to be called. Therefore, if I am in order, I will now say a few words.

Mr. WARREN. The Chair may decide that question.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senate adjourned on yesterday after a roll call had disclosed the lack of a quorum. The Senate proceeded this morning with morning business. The Senate not having taken a recess, but simply having adjourned on yesterday, my inquiry is, Does not the Senate begin business de novo this morning? In other words, is the Senate debarred from debating the question which has just now been taken up by unanimous consent?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Nevada will remember that a call of the roll was had upon the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. PITTMAN. There was a vote taken, but it was disclosed that there was no quorum present.

Mr. MYERS. That roll call was null and void, because no quorum was present.

Mr. WARREN. The Chair had directed the calling of the roll and the roll call proceeded.

Mr. PITTMAN. But there was no quorum present, and after that the Senator from Wyoming called for a quorum. The call did not disclose a quorum, and then the Senator from Wyoming moved an adjournment. We adjourned, and this morning when the Senate convened we proceeded with the regular order, which was the morning business. After the morning business had closed the Senator from Wyoming asked unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report. The conference report has been taken up on a new day, by unanimous consent. Is it not, therefore, open to debate?

Mr. MYERS. I think the Senate starts this morning de novo. I have never heard of any rule to the contrary.

Mr. LENROOT. If I may make a suggestion to the Chair, this identical question has been before the Senate on a previous occasion. If the Chair has Gilfry's Precedents before him, I suggest that if he will turn to page 48 of those Precedents he will find that in a similar case it was held that when the pending matter again came before the Senate the question resumed exactly the same status as when the adjournment was had, and that the roll call must proceed.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the Senator from Wisconsin has properly stated the parliamentary situation; but in this case the roll call was a nullity because the absence of a quorum was disclosed. The question now occupies the status of a roll call having been ordered and begun, but no response having been made, so the pending matter is subject to debate. It has been decided that after a roll call has been ordered, but no response has been made, the pending question is subject to debate.

Mr. LENROOT. I will read from Gilfry's Precedents in order that the Senator from Virginia may see that the precedent I have quoted is exactly in line and covered an exactly similar case.

Mr. SWANSON. From what page is the Senator about to read?

Mr. LENROOT. I read from page 28 of Gilfry's Precedents, as follows:

[Fifty-eighth Congress, second session; Journal, pp. 198, 200.]

FEBRUARY 26, 1904.

On motion by Mr. Hale,

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill (S. 2263) to require the employment of vessels of the United States for public purposes; and the reported amendment having been agreed to, and the bill further amended on the motion of Mr. McCUMBER and the motion of Mr. Allison.

A further amendment having been proposed by Mr. Daniel,

After debate, on motion by Mr. Carmack, to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce, the yeas were 12 and the nays were 30.

On motion by Mr. Teller,

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

* * * * * * *

The number of Senators voting not constituting a quorum, the Presiding Officer (Mr. Gallinger in the chair) directed the roll to be called, when 48 Senators answered to their names.

A quorum being present, on motion by Mr. Hale,

Ordered, That the bill as amended be reprinted.

On motion by Mr. Hale, at 4 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m., the Senate adjourned.

On the following day, February 27, on motion by Mr. Hale, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill S. 2263.

The question being on the motion of Mr. Carmack to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce, the President pro tempore (Mr. Frye) held that the roll call should be immediately resumed, without debate or other intervening business.

So Senators will see that the case cited in the precedent was identical with the case we now have before us.

Mr. MYERS. I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that it is not identical in this respect. In the case cited on the day when the bill was being considered a quorum developed.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly; but an adjournment was immediately had.

Mr. MYERS. Yesterday a quorum did not develop.

Mr. LENROOT. But that could not make any difference, because an adjournment was had, and the question was brought back the next day immediately to the same position which it would have occupied had there been no adjournment.

Mr. MYERS. There has never been a valid vote taken on the pending conference report.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly; and neither was there in the case cited.

Mr. MYERS. In the case cited the roll call disclosed the absence of a quorum, but a quorum immediately appeared.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; the roll call did not disclose a quorum, but the presence of a quorum was developed and then an adjournment was immediately had. Nevertheless the Chair held the next day that the question immediately before the Senate was to proceed with the calling of the roll.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the rule is and has always been that when a question comes up on a subsequent occasion it comes up in the same situation in which it was left when last under consideration. That has been the universal rule. There had been debate in the Senate for a long time as to whether a question could be debated after the roll call had commenced. The rule provides that there can be debate until there has been a response on the call of the roll, but that nothing can interfere with the roll call after it has begun and a response has been made. If the roll call is now begun anew, it seems to me, inasmuch as there has been no response, that the question on which the roll is being called is subject to debate. I know that subsequent to the decision cited it was ruled that debate could be allowed after the yeas and nays had been ordered, provided no response had been made.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but in the precedent cited there was a roll call, exactly as in the case now before us, and the roll call failed to disclose the presence of a quorum.

Mr. SWANSON. Until there has been a response to the roll call debate may be had. That is the issue. There has certainly been no response to second the roll call.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to another point of difference between the case cited by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the one now before us. It does not appear from the precedent read by him that other business had intervened the next day between the adjournment of the day before and the time when the measure was called up. I admit that if immediately upon convening this morning the Senator from Wyoming had arisen and demanded another roll call on the conference report, so that the Senate would have resumed just where it left off last night, prima facie the case would present a stronger appeal for regularity, but the Senator from Wyoming suffered other business to intervene. If other business may intervene for 20 minutes, as has been the case this morning, it may intervene for 20 days, and if it may intervene for 20 days it may intervene for 6 months. So, under the contention which is made, the conference report could be allowed to go over for six months, or until next August or next September, for instance, if we shall be in session then, called up at that time and an immediate roll call insisted upon, so that the Senate, after that lapse of time, would begin just where it left off. I hold that intervening business makes a material difference. If I understood correctly the Senator from Wisconsin there was no intervening business in the precedent cited by him.

Mr. SWANSON. There is a rule which provides that there shall be no debate after a response has been made, and there is another rule which provides that nothing shall interrupt the roll call. If it were not for that rule the question on which the roll is being called could be debated after there had been a response on the roll call, whether the roll call had been completed or not, but after there has been a response the rule provides that nothing shall interfere with the roll call until it is completed. In this instance, the roll call was completed but no quorum was disclosed, so that it is necessary to commence another roll call, but it has not been started, and, consequently, I insist that the rule does not apply, and that debate may be permitted, because no response has been made on the new roll call which may be ordered. I repeat that debate can not take place in the middle of a roll call, because the rule provides that nothing shall interfere with the roll call when it is once begun; but, in this instance, the roll call has not been begun.

Mr. LENROOT. But the roll call has begun; that is the difficulty.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin if business intervened in the case cited by him from the precedents?

Mr. LENROOT. It must have, because the Senate adjourned in that instance as in this.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator says it "must have," but does the RECORD show that business had intervened?

Mr. LENROOT. I have not the RECORD before me, but when the Senate adjourns morning business is in order, and presumably in the case cited morning business intervened.

Mr. MYERS. I do not think we are permitted to assume that other business intervenes unless the RECORD so shows. I think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] was guilty of laches in not calling up the conference report immediately after the Senate convened.

Mr. LENROOT. He could not have called it up immediately; it would have been against the rule to call it up immediately.

Mr. MYERS. He could have called it up at once after the Senate met, just as he did 20 minutes later. With great respect for both the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Wyoming, I think the intervention of other business makes a material difference.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken. I waited until morning business was closed, and then asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report, which was granted, and it is now before us. The report has been read and reread; a roll call had been ordered and was proceeding when a quorum failed, and we adjourned. I think the debate which is proceeding is entirely out of order and that the Chair should rule. I am ready to abide by the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MYERS. I think the fact that morning business has intervened makes a difference, but I submit to the Chair the question whether or not it will be in order for me to proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The general rule has to be applied according to circumstances. The roll call was ordered yesterday and started. Thirty-nine Senators voted on the roll call, disclosing that a quorum was not present. The roll was then called to ascertain the presence of a quorum, and, as the Chair recalls, the total number of Senators responding was 39. A quorum not being present, a motion to adjourn was made and carried.

The Senate came into session this morning under that motion, and the regular procedure of the Senate was in order, irrespective of the question that the Senate had under consideration when it adjourned. That regular order was proceeded with until the time came to take up the question which was under consideration when the Senate adjourned. When that question is taken up, the Senate must proceed in the same way as if there had been no adjournment; so that, the roll call having started and responses having been made, there can not be any further debate on the question on which the roll was being called. The only thing that is in order now is to have the roll call proceed.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the yeas and nays have been ordered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. Assuming that he would vote as I intend to vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], is detained on business of the Senate.

Mr. CARAWAY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK. Has the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois. In his absence, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCCUMBER (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand that my pair, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], has not voted. I therefore transfer that pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] and will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 20, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments in disagreement between the House and the Senate and request a conference with the House, and that the Vice President appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE (S. DOC. NO. 175).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, fiscal year 1923—for general expenses, Bureau of Plant Industry, drug and other plants, $6,000; nut culture, $5,000; general expenses, Bureau of Chemistry, table sirup investigations, $10,000; general expenses, Bureau of Soils, soil survey investigations, $10,000; in total amount $31,000—which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF NEAR EAST RELIEF.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the general secretary of the Near East Relief, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the activities of the Near East Relief for the year ended December 31, 1921, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9103, the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from New York for a matter which I understand will not require any time.

THE COAL-MINING INDUSTRY.

Mr. CALDER. I have asked the Senator to yield to me in order that I might submit a Senate resolution; and if there is no objection, as I think it will cause no debate, I will ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 265) was read, as follows:

Whereas an existing controversy between coal-mine operators and their employees vitally touches the interests and welfare of the public as a whole: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and is hereby, directed to make inquiry immediately into the conditions in the production and distribution of bituminous coal; to require data as to the factors in the cost of production, including labor, investment, supplies, and all other items, the cost of transportation, the margins in wholesaling, jobbing, and retailing of coal, and the price paid by the consuming public, and to report the facts to the Senate as expeditiously as possible, by way of partial reports from time to time, and final report at the earliest moment.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the resolution calls for an investigation upon the part of the Federal Trade Commission of the coal situation, including the cost of production, ownership of mines, profits, and so forth.

Mr. CALDER. It does.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator made inquiry of the commission? I understand they have this information.

Mr. CALDER. I understand they have practically all the information asked for; not all of it, but most of it.

Mr. BORAH. Does the resolution call for an investigation or a report?

Mr. CALDER. A report.

Mr. BORAH. I think they have all the information the Senator wants. That is my opinion from my talk with them. I thought the resolution called for an investigation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Let it be read.

Mr. CALDER. I ask that the resolution may be read again, so that it will be clear.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BORAH. I presume that if the Federal Trade Commission already have the information they would understand that all they have to do under that resolution is to report to the Senate what they have.

Mr. CALDER. That would be my expectation, of course, Mr. President.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not yield further, if the resolution is to involve debate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I merely desire to object to the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution. It will go over for one day, under the rule.

RESERVATIONS FOR THE BOTANIC GARDEN.

Mr. FERNALD. Will the Senator from Iowa yield for just a moment in order to permit the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 186, if it will not lead to any debate?

Mr. CUMMINS. If it does not involve debate, I yield for a moment.

Mr. FERNALD. I think there will be no objection to it. It is simply a resolution providing for the transfer of jurisdiction over certain parcels of land from one department of the Government, which is quite willing to give it up, to another.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield if it is to provoke no debate.

Mr. FERNALD. I thank the Senator. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) authorizing the transfer to the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on the Library of certain reservations in the District of Columbia for use in connection with the Botanic Garden, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on the Library the following United States reservations for use in connection with the Botanic Garden: No. 6–A, 6–B, 6–C, 6–D, 6–E, 6–F, 6–G, 6–H, 6–I, 6–K, 6–L, 6–M, 6–N, 6–O, 6–P, 6–Q, 6–R, 292, and 293, all of which lie along the site of the old James Creek Canal, from Maryland Avenue to P Street SW., Washington, in the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of the United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS resumed and concluded the speech begun by him March 10, 1922. His speech, entire, is as follows:

Friday, March 10, 1922.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the consideration of the administration of justice in our own country may not be so interesting as the discussion of our relations with foreign powers, but I believe that before I have finished Senators will be of the opinion that it is quite as important to lend our energies to perfect the administration of our own laws as it is to create new relations with foreign powers.

The American people are in the habit of claiming—and in many respects the claim is just—that we stand very near the front in the civilization of the world. In one respect, I believe, it can be fairly stated that we are marching in the rear rank of all civilized people. There is not a country of which I have any knowledge which so imperfectly administers justice through the courts as the United States, and it will shock all Senators, I am sure, when the facts are fairly before them.

When we contemplate a situation in which thousands and thousands of persons accused of crime must lie in jail for a year or two years, if they are unable to discharge themselves by giving bond, awaiting trial, and when we reflect upon the fact that in many parts of the United States it is utterly impossible to secure the trial of a civil case within a year or two years, where both attorneys and parties are ready to proceed with the trial, it is to me a source of great humiliation. I am speaking, of course, of the Federal courts. It is for the purpose of correcting, in part, the condition which everyone deplores that I am bidden by the Committee on the Judiciary to lay before the Senate House bill 9103.

Before I proceed to the discussion of the details of the bill, it seems to me that I ought to give a general idea of the state of business in the Federal courts throughout the country; and in this connection I beg to say that the document which accompanied the report in this matter contained some typographical or clerical errors. These have been corrected, and a new print will be at the disposition of Senators who desire to consult what might be called the statistics of the measure.

What I am saying now is gathered from the report of the Attorney General, which he is required to make at the end of each year. On the 30th of June, 1921, there were pending in the district courts of the United States 46,345 civil cases. I want Senators to contemplate that statement alone.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator mean to say that there were that number of cases at issue and ready for trial, or only that number of cases on the docket?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is impossible for me to say that they were ready for trial, because it was not practicable to determine the state of each particular case. I am simply giving what the dockets of the district courts throughout the country showed.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the Senator say that was limited to civil cases?

Mr. CUMMINS. Civil cases.

Mr. NORRIS. That many civil cases?

Mr. CUMMINS. There were of civil cases, including, of course, civil cases to which the United States is a party, 46,345.

Mr. OVERMAN. That does not include bankruptcy cases?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; that does not include bankruptcy cases. I will speak of them presently. It has been stated and shown to our committee by evidence that can not be gainsaid that there are districts in the United States in which there was not a single civil case tried in the year preceding June 30, 1921, solely because of the accumulation of criminal cases which the court thought, and I do, too, should have precedence in trial.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, can the Senator give the source of that statement? Who was it made the statement there were districts in which no civil case had been tried during that year?

Mr. CUMMINS. Specifically speaking, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

Mr. SHIELDS. That was not a part of the hearings, then. I was satisfied no such statement appeared in the printed hearings.

Mr. CUMMINS. It was stated in the presence of the Judiciary Committee, or members of the Judiciary Committee, who were considering the bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was not present when the Senator from Missouri appeared before the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. He is my authority for that one district. I have some knowledge of the situation in my own State, and while I am not asking for any additional judge, the situation, with which I am perfectly familiar, is deplorable. I do not think there were more than one or two civil cases tried in the northern district of Iowa during the year preceding the resignation of the judge in that district.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why was that? Iowa has not a very large number of criminal cases. Why is it that the judge has not been able to try any civil cases?

Mr. CUMMINS. Because he was busy during that time trying criminal cases.

Mr. OVERMAN. The record shows that he did not have very many criminal cases.

Mr. CUMMINS. He tried them.

Mr. OVERMAN. When he got through he ought to have tried some civil cases.

Mr. CUMMINS. But he did not get through. That is the difficulty. He did not get through with them. It is true he was able to reduce the number of civil cases pending to rather a reasonable limit, anyhow, but it took all of his time.

There were pending on the 30th of June, 1921, in all of the district courts of the United States 26,802 criminal cases, not including what are ordinarily known as draft cases, of which there were 27,582. We had in the courts of the country pending June 30, 1921, 27,582 cases in which men were charged with some offense against our draft laws. These men stand accused criminally before the community, and our judges seem so far to have been unable to either try or dispose of those cases.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was it not in evidence before us that the district attorneys did not expect to try those cases and never expect to try any of them? The district attorney from New York City and the district attorney from Chicago appeared before our committee and said they do not call these cases up and do not expect to try them. Is not that the evidence before our committee?

Mr. CUMMINS. The evidence is, as I recollect it, that the United States does not feel that it will be able to convict more than a small proportion of these accused persons and therefore will probably never try them. Nevertheless they stand upon the dockets of the courts and must be disposed of in some way or other.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. There were pending on the 30th of June, 1921, 37,365 bankruptcy cases, mainly, of course, before referees, but in all of those cases, or in many of them, it will be necessary for the district courts to make orders of some kind.

I yield now to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to inject a single remark here, because it is pertinent to the figures which the Senator has just inserted with reference to the draft cases. The war has been closed for four years and we are the only country that I know of in the world that is still purporting to punish violations of the draft law or matters growing out of that condition of affairs. It does not seem to me that those 27,000 cases ought to be considered here. They ought to be considered by the Department of Justice.

It is nothing less than a crime to keep these men under charges. If we are not going to try them they ought to be discharged at once. They ought to have been discharged long ago. On the other hand, if we are going to try them they ought to have been tried long ago. As a matter of fact, the cases have been postponed and continued and the shadow is upon the men, and yet it seems that it is never intended to take the cases up.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree with the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment. If the Department of Justice or the district attorneys, in cases that they really do not expect to be tried, do not dismiss them, the court ought to dismiss them. What I am trying to get is a sufficient judicial force to dispose, in one way or the other, of the cases that have been pending a very long time.

Mr. SHIELDS. I can give the Senator from Idaho some information along that line. We had Colonel Hayward, district attorney for the southern district of New York, before us. There are 7,000 draft cases upon the docket of the New York court. He stated that the witnesses were scattered, there are no records, some of the witnesses are dead, and it is impossible now to try the cases. There will be very few if any convictions, and most of them should be dismissed, he said.

I would like to say that I think the Senator is in error about the bankruptcy cases being tried before the judge. Those cases are pending before referees and will be disposed by the referees.

Mr. CUMMINS. Possibly the Senator from Tennessee did not hear the statement I made that those cases were pending mainly before referees, but that in many of them it would become necessary for the court to make orders of various kinds.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think the Senator is mistaken about many of them. In Massachusetts they have perhaps the largest number. There are 3,000 draft cases there and they never expect to try them. There is congestion growing out of both the draft cases and the bankruptcy cases. It is confined, when you get to the bottom of it, as experts from the Department of Justice told us, to six or eight cities. It is not all over the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement, and then I will not interrupt him again?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I was informed that last year they imported a judge from Vermont down into the district of New York and that he disposed of 700 cases in one day. I think that ought to be looked into. It may suggest a method of getting rid of a vast amount of this accumulated material that we never expect to do anything with except to let it clog the docket.

Mr. KING. I might suggest that we appoint some of these new judges from Vermont.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator must have read an exaggerated statement, although the work of this judge in the eastern district of New York is very remarkable even when we confine it to the truth. As I am informed, this judge went to Brooklyn and the first day he disposed of 46 cases and only worked part of the day. Then he gave notice that he would consider that he had done less than a day's work if during the remainder of the time he was in that district he was unable to dispose of 100 cases.

Mr. BORAH. I have the statement of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I am quite sure I am not mistaken about the facts which he gave me. It was such a ray of light that I clung to the fact hours afterwards, thinking that perhaps there was some method, other than of making more judges, of disposing of a lot of this docket business. I am sure the Senator from New York will justify what I said. He might have been mistaken, though I doubt it very much.

The way the judge did that was to say to these people that those who pleaded guilty would be let off with a fine, "but if you insist on going to trial, I can not tell what will happen to you." There were 700 of them came in and pleaded guilty, and he disposed of the cases by fines, and collected I have forgotten how much, but a very large sum of money for the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. That information had not come to my knowledge. I hope it is true.

Mr. OVERMAN. The evidence before the committee——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment, please. Of course, the necessity for these addifional judges is not based upon the draft cases or upon the bankruptcy cases. I have given the number of those cases simply to make my statement complete with regard to the work that is pending in the district. The necessity arises on account of the accumulation of the civil cases and of the criminal cases exclusive of the draft cases.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was stated before the committee, according to my recollection, that most of the criminal cases were prohibition cases growing out of violations of the prohibition law and that from 25 to 50 per cent of them were submissions that did not take any time at all, but they ground out from 50 to 100 of them in half an hour's time.

Mr. CUMMINS. How does the Senator account for the fact that they are on the docket and continue to be on the docket from one year to another?

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, they keep putting them on. I saw an instance of one judge who went to New York and disposed of 150 cases in 45 minutes. He was a country judge, by the way.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from North Carolina knows very well that a judge can only dispose of cases so rapidly as that when there is no contest whatever, when all that they need is an order entered by the court, either of dismissal or upon a plea of guilty.

Mr. OVERMAN. This was a country judge sent up there to try the cases, and he either tried them or dismissed them. He dismissed a lot of cases, but he disposed of the business.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is an admirable example, but we may place side by side with that statement, which is undoubtedly true, the statement that it was believed—I do not know whether

I ought to say this or not—by the Senator from Tennessee that we ought to have another district judge in that State, and therefore I assume that, rapidly as the district judge disposes of some of these cases, he was not able to dispose of the cases as rapidly as they should have been disposed of.

Mr. SHIELDS. The statistics, as appeared from the report of the Attorney General and as stated by the Senator from Tennessee before the committee, showed that the middle district of Tennessee was the only district in the United States, outside of one district in Mississippi, that did not have a district judge. The cases on the docket from that district outnumbered those of six or seven other districts which the committee reported were entitled to new judges, yet the committee reported that the middle Tennessee district was not entitled to any.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator will adhere to that notion, because that is one of the merits of the bill, which provides that we can send country judges into the crowded, populous districts, judges who will be able to dispose of the business that is now pending in the courts.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I simply desire to call attention to the fact that most of the draft cases, so called, are confined to four districts—the Boston, Mass., district, the southern and eastern districts of New York, and the district of New Jersey. Most of the draft cases are in those four districts. In the other districts they are few and far between. The district attorney of New York, who appeared before our committee, giving the number of those cases, said he did not think over three or four of them would be tried.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is quite true, as stated by the Senator from Minnesota. I hope that I have not left the impression, because I have stated the number of those cases, that therefore these additional judges are necessary on account of the accumulation of such cases as either draft or bankruptcy cases.

Mr. SHIELDS. In regard to the rapid disposition of those cases, the judge from Memphis came up into the middle district of Tennessee and tried 256 of them in a week. Quite a number of them were trial cases. The fact is, as Senators must have realized, these cases are for violation of the tippling laws, that should be tried in the State courts. They are merely police court cases. They ought to try one every 15 or 20 minutes.

The docket of the middle Tennessee district showed that at the time stated, June, 1920, there were pending a thousand cases, and the judge from the eastern district, who held court in the western district, also had a thousand cases on his docket. There are six districts for which additional judges are recommended which have less business than the two districts in Tennessee referred to, and in some of them the number of cases is as low as 378. The bill as it came here from the other House allowed a judge to the middle district of Tennessee, which has no judge, but while the Senator from Tennessee was ill and not present the Judiciary Committee struck out the provision for a judge for the middle district of Tennessee, and there is no provision made in the bill for such a judge. I could tell the reasons which I have heard why that action was taken.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not passing on the propriety of that action.

Mr. SHIELDS. And I will tell them during the course of the debate. It was probable that the President would have appointed a man there who would not be hand in glove with the prohibitionists, and it was understood the prohibitionists did not want that district created, because the President might appoint the man upon whom all the Republicans in the State had agreed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I envy the Senator from Tennessee the possession of secrets which are entirely unknown to me.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not charge that to the Judiciary Committee, but I state it as a fact that it was understood that Judge Gore would be appointed down there. He is the chairman of the Republican executive committee for the State, a splendid man and lawyer, who would be absolutely free from any partiality or corruption or bias in any lawsuit he might try. I know the prohibitionists were protesting against him, for I, myself, got letters protesting against him; but I simply replied that it was a Republican fight and I had nothing to do with it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, to come back to the original suggestion, I desire to say that I am sure the Senator from Tennessee has verified what I said, namely, that in his opinion an additional judge in Tennessee is needed, and that, notwithstanding the celerity with which another judge disposed of business, the dockets are still so congested that additional judicial help ought to be provided. We will come presently, Mr. President, to this very controverted field, as to the distribution of this additional judicial help; but before I reach that point I wish to survey for a moment our judicial system.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Iowa has given a short synopsis of the nature of the cases that were pending. I wish to know if he could give us any information as to how many of the criminal cases which are now pending have arisen from some war statute other than the draft act? For instance, does the Senator know how many of these cases have arisen under the espionage law?

Mr. CUMMINS. They have all been collected in the report and denominated "draft cases"; so I assume that the cases that are not under the selective draft law are enumerated under the criminal cases and not under the draft cases.

Mr. NORRIS. What I am trying to get at is this: For instance, there are quite a number of cases where people have been arrested and are in jail—so I am informed, at least, and I think the committee were at one time informed to that effect—cases arising out of the alleged violation of the espionage law. Those cases would not be included, would they, under the head of draft cases?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all. They are under the head of criminal cases.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator tell how many such cases there are?

Mr. CUMMINS. They have not been segregated before our committee, and I do not know what the proportion of the espionage cases is as compared with other criminal cases.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. I wish to verify what the Senator from Iowa has just stated with regard to the general state of the docket in some of the judicial districts. I think I heard the Senator cite the western district of Missouri as an illustration. What he said was entirely correct as to the western district of Missouri. That court which, as I shall show at some other time, has transacted as much business with a single judge as has any other district in the Mississippi Valley with two judges. The United States district judge for the western district of Missouri was unable, working constantly during the entire past year, to try a single civil case. The time of the court was entirely occupied by the pressure of criminal cases; so that in this western district of Missouri in the last year, with a large civil docket pending and pressing for trial, there has not been a single civil case tried.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there are some things in reference to this matter which I can not understand. I am not asking for a new judge in my district, but I live in a district which has more criminal cases for trial than has the judicial district in which the Senator from Missouri lives; yet the court in my district is trying civil cases all the time and there is no complaint. It is at the same time disposing of the cases which are on the criminal docket. I can not understand how it is, it is very strange to me, that the judges of some courts have time to try civil cases and others have not.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. In reference to what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] has stated—and, of course, he speaks upon information furnished by others as to the condition of the courts in his district, he not being there and not personally knowing the facts he states—I desire to say that there is not any doubt as to the amount of business in the several courts of the United States. The Attorney General has furnished the Committee on the Judiciary, through an expert from his office, the exact figures in reference to the cases pending and the cases that have been tried in the last 12 months; and I do not think those figures bear out the statement of the Senator from Missouri. I think his information is erroneous, as he will realize if he will secure the evidence furnished by Mr. Strong, of the Department of Justice, as to the number of cases pending on the docket of the court in the district to which he has referred and the number of cases that were tried during the last year.

Mr. OVERMAN. To what district is the Senator referring?

Mr. SPENCER. To the western district of Missouri.

Mr. CUMMINS. That information can not be found in the table printed in the report.

Mr. SPENCER. The number of cases pending in the western district of Missouri is 1,229. In regard to the civil cases, I took the pains to verify the figures in the last few days by telegraphic communication with the district attorney of that district, and what I have said is precisely the fact, that during the last year the trial judge has not been able to try a single civil case, and that condition, as no one knows better than the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], is, so far as justice is concerned, simply atrocious.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I notice in the report of the Attorney General that in the western district of Missouri the total number of cases is 515.

Mr. SPENCER. No. The Senator doubtless does not have the correct reference.

Mr. OVERMAN. Whereas in the district from which I come there were 1,300 cases.

Mr. SPENCER. Is the Senator from the eastern or western district of North Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am from the western district.

Mr. SPENCER. In the western district of North Carolina, with two judges, there were pending, according to the report, 1,256 cases, of which by far the larger number were criminal cases, there being 805 criminal cases.

Mr. OVERMAN. As compared to the 515 cases in the district in Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. Which would mean, with two judges, less than 650 cases to a judge.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri was a member of the committee when that committee reported a bill providing for an additional judge in the western district of North Carolina. The additional judge was provided, however, because the sitting judge could not try any cases. He is 76 years old, crippled and feeble, and only now and then tries a civil case when he desires to do so. So that to all intents and purposes we really only have one judge.

Mr. SPENCER. I should think the docket was in a very unfortunate state.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason the Senate allowed that district an additional judge.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think we dealt fairly with the fourth circuit.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I presume the Senator from Iowa would like to state the general proposition underlying this proposed legislation, and then questions affecting the several districts and their merits will come up afterwards. Under those circumstances I shall not interrupt the Senator further.

Mr. CUMMINS. It matters little to me in what order I take up the various districts, for I know that there will be very great difference of opinion in regard to the distribution which we have made of these judges.

I am trying now to impress the Senate with the one fact that we do need additional district judges and that the way in which we are now administering justice throughout this country is shameful. No man ought to lie under the shadow of an accusation for a year or two years if he desires to be tried, much less ought he be consigned to a jail, and, because he is not able to give the necessary bond, to remain there simply because his Government will not provide a judge by whom he may be tried. It is likewise true of civil cases. I have no doubt that very many of the 46,345 civil cases which were pending in July will never be tried. I understand perfectly well that the mere state of the docket, as indicated by the number of cases pending, is not an accurate criterion of the work which the judge of that court will be called upon to perform, but it is the best evidence we have, and we hear from every quarter the most earnest complaints with regard to the trial of civil cases. Every Senator here has heard those complaints. I want to begin this discussion with the understanding that it is accepted as a truth that we do need some additional judicial force, if we are to administer the laws of this country in a way creditable to civilized life.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but, if he will pardon me, the Senate has had before it 8 or 10 bills providing additional district judges. After a thorough investigation those bills have been reported favorably out of the Committee on the Judiciary and have passed the Senate. There were 8 or 10 such bills in the previous Congress and 8 or 10 in the present Congress, as I recall. Why does not the House pass those bills in cases where the judges are really needed?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not either a critic or an apologist for the House. I do not know why it has not done what the Senator from North Carolina suggests; but it is sufficient to say that the House has now passed a bill in which, I think, it cares for every one of the districts which are involved in the Senate bills, and, moreover, it has added to the number some 14 or 15 judges. The House has said that this country needs 23 additional district judges. The Senate committee has reduced that number to 19.

I now desire to get clearly in the minds of Senators our judicial system, so that they may see, without troubling themselves to examine the report of the Attorney General and similar documents, just what we are trying to do. The judicial system of the United States is composed of 1 Supreme Court, 9 circuit courts of appeal, and 86 district courts. I think I am right about that. We have 9 circuits, 86 districts, 34 circuit judges, and 106 district judges. In the main, these judges constitute at the present time our judicial system. We have, in addition, as a part of the Federal judicial system, the Court of Claims, with 5 judges, and the Court of Customs Appeals, with 5 judges. We have also the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and then the ordinary number of police judges and juvenile judges and the like.

This is the judicial system of the country. A glance at this map before you will show you how the country is divided into circuits.

The first circuit is composed of the States of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Maine.

The second circuit is composed of the States of New York, Vermont, and Connecticut.

The third circuit is composed of the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware.

The fourth circuit is composed of the States of Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina.

The fifth circuit is composed of the Gulf States—Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas.

The sixth circuit is composed of the States of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

The seventh circuit is made up of the States of Wisconsin, Illinois, and Indiana.

The eighth circuit, which is the empire in our judicial system, is composed of North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, and New Mexico.

The ninth circuit is composed of the Pacific territory States—Montana, Washington, Oregon, California, Idaho, Nevada, and Arizona.

This bill proposes to add judges as follows: Two judges in Massachusetts. I want to say in the very beginning that while I am loyal to this bill, and I have been directed by the Judiciary Committee to report it, when it comes to the matter of distribution of judges there may well be difference of opinion. I do not want to see the judicial force increased beyond the number which we have named in the bill, and I should have been vastly better satisfied if my attempt before the Judiciary Committee had succeeded, by which the number to be added would have been limited to 14 or 15. Personally, I believe that we have authorized the appointment of judges in some districts which we ought not to have authorized. That is, I think that other districts are better entitled than the ones which have received the approval of the Judiciary Committee, and whenever I am asked about that I, of course, intend to say frankly what my views are; but these matters were all carefully considered in the Judiciary Committee. I do not remember a bill before that committee that received more careful and intelligent and, I think, unselfish consideration. While I did not agree with every act of the Judiciary Committee, I stand for the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator tell the Senate where he thinks the committee made a mistake, and what changes he thinks should be made so as to carry out his ideas?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to go over that part of the work of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is not going to give us his own individual ideas about it?

Mr. CUMMINS. If any Senator here proposes an amendment to the bill, I shall have no hesitation in saying what I think about the proposed amendment; but in the absence of any amendment I do not intend to review the work of the committee. I simply want the Senate to understand that this is a subject upon which there is room for fair difference of opinion in the distribution of these judges.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator made that very elaborate explanation, saying that the committee report does not agree with his individual views touching these matters, following the statement that in Massachusetts they have one district judge now, and it is proposed in this bill to add two more. Was that the reason why the Senator made that explanation?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not altogether. I am frank to say that that is one instance.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator thinks that they need but one additional judge up there, does he?

Mr. CUMMINS. If I were distributing the judges according to my individual judgment, I would have put but one additional judge in Massachusetts; but the committee, for reasons which seemed to it entirely satisfactory and persuasive, assigned two judges to the district of Massachusetts.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the state of the district court docket in the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not recall simply from memory, but I can easily state it.

In Massachusetts, as of date of June 30, 1921, there were 206 civil cases to which the United States was a party. There were 186 criminal cases, including prohibition cases. There were 142 admiralty cases. There were 923 other civil cases. The bankruptcy cases were 1,434. The draft cases were 3,943. The prohibition cases, as distinguished from other criminal cases, were 68.

Mr. ROBINSON. Sixty-eight? That is comparatively a very small number.

Mr. CUMMINS. It indicates very clearly that the people of Massachusetts are making an heroic effort to observe the law.

Mr. ROBINSON. Or that they are very indifferent to it—one or the other.

Mr. CUMMINS. I always draw the conclusion most favorable to morality if I can.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator the aggregate number of cases that are pending in the District Court for Massachusetts? How many cases, all told, are pending in that court?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not that number. It is not added up in that way. The Senator can take the figures that I have given and add them up, but I have not added them.

Mr. ROBINSON. If my mind followed the Senator's statement correctly, there are something less than 1,500 cases all told pending in the district court of Massachusetts.

Mr. OVERMAN. Outside of the draft cases.

Mr. ROBINSON. Outside of the draft cases.

Mr. SHIELDS. Draft and bankruptcy cases.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; outside of the draft and bankruptcy, I think there are about 1,300, I should say.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator before him the information as to where the Massachusetts district court sits? Does it sit at one place only, or at different places in the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think only in Boston, but I am not sure about that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] asked a little while ago for some information of a very interesting character, namely, the number of espionage cases pending. I am able to supply that information from testimony given by the Attorney General in the month of January a year ago. He told us at that time that there had been 736 cases arising under section 3, or section 3 as amended, of the espionage act; that 581 of those had resulted in a conviction, while 315 cases were still pending.

Mr. NORRIS entered the Chamber.

Mr. CUMMINS. I thank the Senator from Montana for answering the question. Possibly the Senator from Nebraska did not hear the answer. I will state to him that the Senator from Montana has just answered the question which was put to me by the Senator from Nebraska, but which I was unable to answer at that moment.

Mr. NORRIS. I was called out, but I got word that the Senator from Montana was going to answer my question, and I came back as soon as I could.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. With the permission of the Senator from Iowa, I will repeat that in the month of January a year ago the Attorney General gave to a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee the following information: That there were 736 cases under the espionage act disposed of, 581 of which resulted in a conviction, and that there were still pending 315 cases.

Mr. NORRIS. What was that date?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. January, 1921.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I should like to ask another question about that matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator state in how many, if any, of these undisposed-of espionage cases the defendants were in jail?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; there is no information about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I now proceed with the analysis of this bill as applied to the map hanging on the wall.

I had just stated, when interrupted by the Senator from Mississippi, that this bill assigns two additional district judges to the State of Massachusetts, that State being a single district. It assigns three additional judges to the State of New York, one in the eastern district and two in the southern district of New York. It assigns two additional judges to the State of Pennsylvania. That State is composed of three districts, and this bill adds a judge to the eastern district and a judge to the western district. It adds no district judge in the fourth circuit, but it does add an additional circuit judge to the fourth circuit—a very desirable and, I think, a very necessary addition.

The fourth circuit has been for years the only circuit in which the Circuit Court of Appeals has been made up of two judges. There are in truth three judges in that circuit now, because when we abolished what was known as the Commerce Court one of the judges of that court was assigned to the fourth circuit, as they were circuit judges of the United States.

In the fifth circuit the bill proposes an additional judge for the northern district of Texas, and, as I recall it now, that is the only additional judge in the fifth circuit. One of the reasons for the addition of a judge in Texas is the partial disability of one of the present district judges, whose ill health makes it impossible for him to do work which a man in sound condition might be able to do.

In the sixth circuit the bill proposes an additional judge for the eastern district of Michigan. The showing for that district seems to me very clear, and those who remember the very rapid and wonderful growth of the city of Detroit will not be surprised that additional judicial force is necessary in that part of the country.

Mr. ASHURST. Before the Senator leaves the discussion of the fifth circuit, he will bear in mind that an additional judge was granted to the northern district of Georgia. The Senator did not mention that.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true. I had not reached that point in the bill, but there is an additional judge authorized for the northern district of Georgia.

Mr. FLETCHER. The State of Texas has four districts and four judges, has it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. It has five.

Mr. CUMMINS. It has five districts and five district judges, who hold court in about 25 places.

I was proceeding simply to make the Senate acquainted with what the bill proposes, and I had just said that we have added one district judge for the eastern district of Michigan. We have also added a judge for the northern district of Ohio. Those are the two additions made to the judicial force in the sixth circuit.

In the seventh circuit one additional judge has been authorized for the northern district of Illinois. In the eighth circuit we have authorized an additional judge for the district of Minnesota. Minnesota is a single district. It is one of the few States having a large population—that is, a population of considerably more than 2,000,000—in which there is but a single district, and one additional judge has been authorized for the district of Minnesota. One judge is assigned to the eastern district of Missouri, one to the eastern district of Oklahoma, and, as I recall it, we have made no further additions in the eighth circuit.

In the ninth circuit the bill proposes an additional district judge in Montana, largely, I think, because of the immense distances which both the court, the litigants, and witnesses must travel in order to reach the places in which courts are held in that part of the country.

The bill proposes an additional judge in the northern district of California, and also one in the southern district of California, making two additional judges for that State.

It proposes also an additional district judge in the State of Arizona, and I think the weightiest reason for the additional judge in Arizona is similar to the reason which prompted us to add one in Montana, because it is almost impossible for a single judge to travel over so wide a territory and do the work which a judge is required to do.

That is what the bill proposes with reference to the additional judicial force. I have not supposed that very many well-informed people would question the wisdom of the substantial additions which we have suggested.

The condition of the dockets throughout the country very clearly demonstrates that these additions will do no more than take care of the work with reasonable promptitude.

It must be understood that the committee treats this matter partly as an emergency, partly as growing out of conditions which we hope will not prevail very long. If the people were to become more law-abiding and not violate the prohibition statutes so frequently, a very large part of the work of the district judges would disappear, and it is not likely that cases similar to those which grew out of the war will arise, when those pending are once disposed of. Therefore I want Senators to know that we have provided that the district judges appointed under this bill shall have no successors, unless Congress in the meantime otherwise orders.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Did the Committee on the Judiciary give consideration to any proposition for the creation of courts of inferior jurisdiction to hear and determine misdemeanor cases?

Mr. CUMMINS. That subject was discussed before the committee; at least, it came to my attention. I do not know that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] proposed a plan of that kind formally, but I think the matter was considered.

Mr. ROBINSON. The complaint has been made that on account of the great increase in the number of misdemeanor cases, particularly those arising under the prohibition laws of the United States, the Federal district courts are being converted into police tribunals, and that the greater portion of their time is being consumed in the consideration of cases of comparatively minor importance.

I wonder whether the committee, in the consideration and report of this bill, went into that subject very fully and passed upon the question as to whether or not it would be advisable to create Federal courts of jurisdiction inferior to that of the Federal district courts, authorized to determine misdemeanor cases of certain classes.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was before the committee at our first hearing, but I do not know whether or not the Senator from Iowa was present. I thought we could dispose of a great many cases by providing such courts. The Chief Justice of the United States was a witness before our committee, and I asked him the question, and it was his opinion that we could not do it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was present at the meeting to which the Senator from North Carolina refers, but I heard more of the suggestion from the Senator from Montana. I still remember that there was no amendment or plan of that sort offered formally to the committee for its adoption.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The matter was considered by the committee in connection with the bill for which this is a substitute. That was a bill providing for what have been described as "roving" judges. It provided for the appointment of 18 judges, to be assigned to the various districts by the Chief Justice of the United States. In support of that bill the Chief Justice himself, as well as the Attorney General and a committee appointed by the Attorney General, appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary. They urged the necessity for additional judges, and descanted at some length upon the increase of business consequent upon the passage of the prohibition laws and other legislation of that character.

In that connection I addressed an inquiry to the Chief Justice as to whether he had given consideration to the project of creating what might be called auxiliary or deputy judges to whom would be assigned the trial of minor cases and other matters coming before the court which might generally be denominated as police court business. I was prompted to make that inquiry because the experience which is now being had by the district courts of the country generally in connection with violations of the Volstead Act is not at all new to those of us in the West who have been familiar with the trial of cases of similar character arising on the Indian reservations, for instance, or upon the military reservations, or in other places within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, but particularly the Indian reservations. Little petty horse-stealing cases, cow-killing cases, liquor prosecutions, or anything of that kind on the Indian reservations come before the United States district court, and it becomes necessary in most of those cases to procure indictments. Prosecution can not be had by information, so that witnesses must travel long distances to the court, in the first place, to attend the sessions of the grand jury. Then they must come back again to attend the sessions of the petit jury, and it is an imposition upon a man qualified by training and learning and experience to act as judge of the district court to place upon him the duty of sitting in the trial of those cases. I accordingly asked of the Chief Justice if he had given consideration to the matter, and he said he had not, and dismissed the suggestion, I thought, rather cavalierly.

It was then taken up by several of the members of the committee, who advanced the argument, first, as my recollection is, that a man who was guilty of a petty offense was just as much entitled to trial before a learned and competent judge as a man who was guilty of murder. Of course no one could combat that question, but the experience of all nations has been that it is a wise thing to put the disposition of petty cases in the hands of men who have not the talent that we would like to see in an Associate Justice or Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. I think we might very properly follow the experience in our Federal judicial system.

Then it was said again, in opposition to that, that the office of Federal judge was one of high dignity and honor, and that it would lessen the office in the estimation of the public generally if another man were elevated to that office whose business was simply to handle petty and inconsequential cases, an argument which I think as flimsy as the other.

Those two reasons were urged against it. The matter was dismissed with such contumely by the Chief Justice and the committee that I did not press it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to answer the Senator from Arkansas, giving my own views. I was not favorably impressed with the suggestion that we might create deputy judges or commissioners for the trial of lesser offenses, for two reasons. I see no reason why it is not entirely within our constitutional power to do it; in fact, I am quite sure that it is.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is, if we appoint them for life.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly, they must be appointed for life.

Mr. OVERMAN. The idea was to appoint commissioners, but not judges to hold for life, and the committee thought if they appointed anybody they would have an inferior court having a hold for life on the office.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt they would have to hold during good behavior, because we have no authority to create inferior courts except under the terms of the Constitution, which provides that judges are to be appointed during good behavior.

There is one great difficulty in assigning the proper jurisdiction to a court organized simply for the purpose of trying the lesser offenses. Our Federal statutes create such a wide range of punishment for misdemeanors that it would be quite impossible to say that the lesser judges should have jurisdiction of misdemeanors, because under many of our statutes, upon conviction of a misdemeanor, a man may be put in the penitentiary for 10 years or less. We also in our statutes provide for fines of wide range and for jail sentences or penitentiary sentences of wide range. I myself would not know how to describe the jurisdiction which the so-called police judges ought to have.

Moreover, there are 86 districts in the United States, including Alaska and Hawaii. We would have to appoint at least 86 additional judges, and even if we were to attempt to get inferior men—that is, men of less legal ability than those we hope to get for district judges—the expense would be much greater, taking the expense altogether, than to add the 19 or 20 additional district judges contemplated by the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the language in the Constitution:

> No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury.

Now, the Supreme Court has construed the words "infamous crime" to mean any crime that is punishable by imprisonment in a State prison, so that whenever and wherever the punishment prescribed for an offense is confinement in a State prison for not more than a year and a day, it must be by indictment by a grand jury and prosecution in court. Therefore it is out of the question to carry on such cases before anything like a court commissioner.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; not a court commissioner, but we could have inferior courts with their grand juries who could try the lesser crimes, but we would not advance any by so doing. We would have greater expense, and I think we would bring the judiciary of the United States somewhat into disrepute if we attempted to create judges of that character.

Mr. OVERMAN. I probably did the Chief Justice a wrong when I stated that he said it could not be done. The idea was in my question whether or not certain judges could be appointed. He said, agreeing with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], that we could not appoint judges for inferior courts to try these cases without appointing them for life.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think we could appoint without appointing during good behavior, which is synonymous with "for life."

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Several months ago I received communications from two judges, one from the ninth circuit and one from the eighth circuit, both district judges. Neither was from my State, however. One of the judges took the position that judges could be appointed to try these misdemeanor cases, and that the tenure of their office might be less than for life. Later he wrote me that a very able lawyer in his State had been investigating the subject, and was rather of the opinion announced by the Senator from Iowa, that the appointment would have to be for life.

He then suggested, as did the judge from the eighth circuit who wrote me, that commissioners might be appointed much the same as the court appoints referees in bankruptcy—that we might authorize the court to appoint commissioners, to take pleas in misdemeanor cases. He stated that from his experience and from his inquiries, he was of the opinion that if a commissioner were appointed—a lawyer, or the clerk of the court, if he were a member of the bar—and that person would address himself to the misdemeanor cases, and the defendants and their lawyers, if they had attorneys, were to be advised that the commissioner was looking after their cases, the overwhelming majority would come in and plead guilty.

The idea of the judge was that this commissioner be authorized to take a plea, to make a preliminary examination, and then report promptly to the judge. His idea was that the judge in that way could be relieved of hundreds of these small cases, and that if there was nothing to the contrary appearing, he would act upon the recommendation of the commissioner and the district attorney, and he might dispose of those cases with very great promptitude and relieve the court of a great deal of the business.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not quite see the force of that, because if the defendant desires to plead guilty the district attorney can present his plea of guilty to the court just as readily as a commissioner could present it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. It occurred to me from my own observation that there are more likely to be pleas of guilty entered in the higher courts than there would be before a commissioner or any deputy or subordinate.

I rose, however, to say that at the time the bill previous to this one was before the Senate I had some considerable talk with a few of the lawyers in my own State. At that time it was suggested that commissioners be clothed with the necessary judicial power, but the objection was made that if those cases were to be heard upon their merits it would necessitate having a deputy clerk, perhaps a deputy marshal, perhaps a court stenographer or the necessary facilities to preserve the record in the case, and all of this would be adding to the expense and probably would not relieve the situation, and that it would be very much better to have the additional judge, in our own State at least, for the purpose of taking care of the large number of cases which were accumulating upon the dockets.

Personally I have no doubt that the committee has done wisely by the presentation of this bill in the form in which it now is, and I think that more dignity will attach to the transaction of this business than would if it were to be taken care of by deputies or commissioners or by a court of any inferior standing than that of the district court itself. More than that, it seems to me that as a deterrent from evil doing the district judge will have more influence than would any one of the inferior courts that we might create.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have not any very large experience with district courts. I am entirely familiar with them as they are in my own country. I know in the criminal courts that 99 per cent of the cases are misdemeanors and of no great importance.

Until 1909, when we adopted our Criminal Code, every one of the misdemeanors was embraced with section 335. I see no reason why a commissioner—I so call him, but I agree with the Senator that he must be appointed during good behavior—can not be so empowered. I think that is the power given to Congress, to appoint an inferior court. Why could he not be given the power to accept the plea of guilty or, if the defendant wanted to waive his right of trial by jury—and let him do it in writing, so that no question might arise—then let the commissioner proceed to give him a trial as a police court does, a summary trial, or if he desires a jury trial, why not let him impanel a jury as a justice of the peace and try him? He then has his right of appeal. I do not think we could cut him off from that. I do not think it would be wise to do it.

I believe that 90 per cent of all these misdemeanor cases now clogging the courts in my country could be disposed of promptly, as well as a large percentage of the criminal matters in the Federal court. I believe we could get an entirely competent man for $2,000 a year. There would be no other machinery. He would be his own clerk, as a justice of the peace, in my State and in many other States, is his own clerk. He would issue his own process. The deputy marshal could impanel a jury for him or summons it if it were demanded.

I can not agree with the Senator from Ohio, who seems to suggest that it would detract from the dignity of the court. The Federal courts become like police courts. You can not get within a block of the Federal court down in my country because of the negroes who flock around there. They have a perfect right to come; they have been asked by the marshal to come. I am not falling out with that, and do not speak disrespectfully; but they look upon it as a great day when they go to court. They literally sit all over the court, from foundation to roof; they are on every step; and one proceeds up and down the stairs with difficulty when going before the jury to testify or before the court to enter a plea.

The court can not be harsh with them. I have heard some folks now and then, who did not understand, say that a negro ought to have the same kind of a trial as a white man; but those who know him do not insist that he shall have that kind of trial and take that sort of punishment. I know that in my section of the country 90 per cent of the criminal business of the courts could be disposed of by police tribunals, leaving the district court a dignified tribunal to try cases of importance, and not compelling men to serve on juries and the court to try cases that ought to be settled by a police tribunal and that could be so settled, I am sure.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The remarks of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] prompt me to recall to Senators a portion of the fifth amendment of our Constitution, which reads:

> No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger.

Of course, we understand full well the meaning of those words, namely, "capital or otherwise infamous crime," the latter term conveying in legal meaning the idea of felony, which is a crime punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary. It is perfectly obvious that a defendant who was accused of violating the prohibition law, where the punishment may exceed one year and be carried out or inflicted in the penitentiary, could not be proceeded against without presentment or indictment by a grand jury.

There is another thought of which I would remind Senators, and that particularly because of the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas, who appears to suggest the erection of inferior tribunals for the trial of so-called minor misdemeanors. Of course, the judge presiding over such an inferior court would be performing judicial functions; the tribunal would be a court, and the presiding judge would be a judge; and in and about the trial there would be the performance of judicial functions.

Mr. CARAWAY. And, if I may suggest to the Senator from California, as Shakespeare said, "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." I do not care whether such an official be called a judge or a commissioner.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Senator from Arkansas will see the importance of what I am saying. The tribunal would be a court, which has been defined to be a place wherein justice is judicially administered. If we turn to Article III of the Constitution, perhaps, the purpose of my rising will be observed. Section 1 of Article III of the Constitution reads:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator will pardon me, I admitted that in my very opening statement. I said that I conceded judges would be appointed during good behavior. I never doubted that.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Then, do I understand the Senator from Arkansas to advance the idea that, should we create these inferior tribunals, then we concede that they would be courts, that the presiding judges would be exercising judicial functions, and that necessarily, therefore, they would have to be appointed for good behavior or during life?

Mr. CARAWAY. I say I think it goes without saying that one who has the power to hear and determine a matter judicially is a court, I do not care what he may be called, and under our Constitution he must hold office during good behavior. I concede that. I do not think any lawyer would contend otherwise.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If the Senator from Iowa will pardon me a moment longer, in respect to the suggestion of inferior tribunals to try misdemeanors, I desire to say that personally I am unalterably opposed to that suggestion or any such court. My views are grounded upon this fundamental conviction of my life, that liberty is far more precious than property. The liberty of the humblest man should be hedged around about and guarded by the ablest judges who can be found. Therefore I am opposed to the idea that so-called minor offenses should be disposed of by men of inferior attainments or courts of no importance.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I suggest that under the same theory, then, the Senator from California is opposed to police courts, for such courts, as ordinarily constituted, are certainly inferior to, we will say, courts of larger jurisdiction.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; but in every State of the American Union, I think, there is the right of appeal from the so-called inferior courts.

Mr. CARAWAY. And there would be in this case.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. There might be.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not think we could take away from a citizen his inalienable right to appeal; nobody would suggest that it could be taken away; but I do not believe that the man who enters a plea of guilty would care to appeal.

I beg pardon of the Senator from Iowa for taking so much of his time; but, if he will pardon me, I should like to make one further observation. I do not know how it is in California, but in my State there are no such things as professional bondsmen, and many men who would enter pleas of guilty, if they were permitted to do so, when they are first arrested will stay in jail for two or three months awaiting the opening of the court. They would have had their cases disposed of and would be serving their sentences or would have gone back home while they lie in jail waiting for trial.

Mr. KING. Waiting for the grand jury?

Mr. CARAWAY. Waiting to be indicted; yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the discussion of this particular subject is very interesting. I have no doubt that our system can be improved, although I feel, as the Senator from California has suggested his feeling to be, that we ought not to be careless or indifferent about the rights of those who are accused of crime. I think we will begin the reform, when we take it up, by amending the Constitution, so that it will not be necessary to call a large body of men to charge crimes of lesser character. I do not believe that the grand-jury system, as found in the Federal statutes, and as we find in a great many of the State statutes, ought to continue in its full vigor. Many of the States have already provided for trying persons accused of crime upon information without an indictment, and I think that that will gradually become, if we ever get courage enough to change our Constitution, the practice of the United States. However, the plan suggested has not been worked out; it has not been proposed by way of amendment, and I rather think that the time we consume in discussing proposed changes of that character is so much time wasted. The committee has not attempted any radical reform of that kind, nor do I believe that any considerable number of Senators want to attempt any radical change of that character.

I have now endeavored to inform the Senate with regard to the assignment of the several additional judges proposed by this bill, and Senators will be in a position now to compare the showing which has been made respecting the business of the various districts, and to ascertain for themselves whether we have assigned the additional judges to the districts to which they ought to be assigned. I have no doubt when we come to that detailed inquiry it will be found exceedingly interesting, and it will be discovered that there is very great conflict of opinion about it.

I pass now to section 3. I desire to explain that section of the bill before I take up section 2. Section 3 is a revision of the Judicial Code, with which I assume all Senators are familiar, respecting the assignment of district judges and circuit judges; that is their assignment, in the case of circuit judges, to district work, or, in the case of district judges, to districts other than their own.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I note that the report of the committee, where the bill as reported is set out, on page 2, section 13, reads as follows:

A district judge for a district may be designated to act in another district of the same circuit—

The words are "in another district of the same circuit." On the other hand, the bill itself, on page 13, reads:

A district judge for a district may be designated to act in another district or the same circuit.

Which is correct?

Mr. CUMMINS. The correct wording is "of the same circuit."

Mr. BROUSSARD. In the bill the words are, "or the same circuit."

Mr. CUMMINS. That is a misprint; that is all.

Mr. BROUSSARD. While I am on my feet may I ask the Senator from Iowa, is it the purpose of this bill to assign a district judge or a circuit judge to another circuit?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is the purpose of this bill to permit the assignment of district judges to other circuits.

Mr. BROUSSARD. To other circuits?

Mr. CUMMINS. To other circuits. That may be done now under some circumstances.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Is it proposed to enlarge that power?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is proposed to enlarge that power.

Mr. BROUSSARD. In other words, is it the understanding of the Senator that a judge from Minnesota may be assigned to Louisiana?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is.

Mr. BROUSSARD. What is the purpose of that provision?

Mr. CUMMINS. The purpose of the present statute as well as the purpose of this proposed legislation is to utilize to the fullest extent the judicial force of the United States, so that we need not create more district judges than are necessary to perform the work.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But it is proposed to create additional judges under this bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly; but if we did not put provisions in the bill that would enable us to utilize the full strength of the judges or mobilize them, in a certain sense, we would find it necessary to add many more judges than it is proposed to add here.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I had thought at the time the eighteenth amendment was submitted that we would have to reduce the number of judges in the United States. I see now that it is proposed not only to add 18 additional judges, but to shift them around and have men tried by judges who possibly are not altogether in sympathy with the ideas of the people over whom they are presiding.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from Louisiana does not suspect that the Committee on the Judiciary proposed this enlargement of the power of assignment in order to inflict upon any community a judge whose sentiments might not be in harmony with those of the people of that community.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Does not this bill provide for that very thing?

Mr. CUMMINS. It can be done now.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Is not that the purpose of this bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. I never heard of such a purpose.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Why not create a sufficient number of additional judges in each circuit to take care of the business of that circuit?

Mr. CUMMINS. Simply because we want to limit the increase as much as possible. We are not courting additional expense. This bill if it is passed in its present form will probably entail an additional expense of $200,000 annually. I estimate the annual expense incurred in the salaries of these judges and in the necessary attendants upon these judges to be about $11,000 for each additional judge; and we want, of course—and I am sure the Senator from Louisiana is in sympathy with that desire—to limit the expense of the Government of the United States as much as possible.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I regard it as fundamental that a judge appointed for a given district is appointed to preside over the cases which arise among the people occupying that jurisdiction.

Mr. CUMMINS. That never has been so.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I think it is absolutely contrary to the principles of our Government to assign a judge from a distant territory to preside over cases arising in another community.

Mr. CUMMINS. The United States found it necessary long ago to abandon that principle. It never has prevailed. Otherwise, we must have a Supreme Court of the United States in every State, and we must have circuit courts of appeals in small communities. All these judges are compelled to try and decide cases which arise long distances from their homes.

At any rate, it is the purpose of section 3 to enlarge the power of assignment of judges so that the judges can be employed to their greatest capacity, and the general idea of the section is this: Possibly I can give better information by simply reading it.

A district judge for a district may be designated to act in another district of the same circuit—

It ought to be "of the same circuit"; it is printed "or the same circuit."

(including territory attached thereto)—

That means such territory as is attached under the law to various circuits—some of the ninth circuit, some of the first circuit, and so forth.

(a) In the place of a district judge who is physically or mentally unable for the time being to perform his duties or who is or who is to be necessarily absent from his district.

(b) In aid of a district judge who on account of the accumulation and urgency of business is unable to perform speedily all the work of his district—

I want Senators to remember that that is practically the law now, and has been for many years.

(c) In aid of a district judge when the public interests so require.

These are the circumstances and conditions under which a district judge can be assigned to work in another district of his circuit, and the assignment is to be made by the senior circuit judge of that district.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Why should not this bill provide that a district judge may be sent from one circuit into another?

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall come to that presently.

Mr. POMERENE. It can be done now. That is, they are sent from our circuit to the New York circuit.

Mr. OVERMAN. It applies only to New York.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the only circuit, however.

Mr. POMERENE. I know; but why should it not be so? I do not know now of any particular case in which there is a necessity for anything of that character, but it seems to me that it might arise.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is precisely what we think. We want the district judges to be assignable throughout the country just as they are now assignable to the New York circuit.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to say to the Senator from Ohio, however, that that is a question on which there is a very serious division of opinion, and was before the committee; and I hope he will reserve his judgment until he hears what will be said upon that subject.

Mr. POMERENE. I can conceive of possible objections to it; but while I agree with the Senator that it should be hemmed in with certain restrictions—I have no doubt about that—it has occurred to me that there might be a good many times when it would be found good policy to do it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope Senators will dismiss the political notion from their minds, for there can not be any politics in this suggestion. It disparages and destroys our respect for the courts of the country to assume or even to harbor the thought that the Chief Justice of the United States or the senior circuit judges of the nine circuits of the United States will exercise their right of assignment in order to accomplish any political purpose. If I believed that to be true, I should want to abolish all the courts. If I could not hold enough confidence in the judicial tribunals of my country to believe that they will act judicially and fairly in order to secure the best results in the disposition of cases pending in the various parts of the country, I should be rather ashamed to be a citizen of the United States.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Would the Senator advocate, for instance, that a law violator in one section of his State should be tried by a judge from another jurisdiction, or that a party charged with an offense in the southern portion of his State should have a judge from the northern portion of his State assigned to try him?

Mr. CUMMINS. We never have made any distinction. We do not know any difference between the northern part of our State and the southern part of our State.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Would it aid in establishing confidence in the courts of the State if such were the case?

Mr. CUMMINS. The confidence never has been impaired in my State. Litigants would just as soon try their cases in the northern district as in the southern district and in the southern district as in the northern district. We have respect for and confidence in both our judges, and it never occurs to us, and I hope it does not occur to anybody that——

Mr. BROUSSARD. I would suggest to the Senator that I am familiar with the laws of the State of Louisiana, and there the constitution guarantees that a man shall be tried by the judge of the jurisdiction, except in certain cases where the accused party may ask for a change of venue. I do not know what the law is in the Senator's State, but I assume that it is the same.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Louisiana suggest that under no circumstances should a Federal judge outside of the State of Louisiana try a case in Louisiana?

Mr. BROUSSARD. No; but there are a number of districts in that circuit, and I claim that one of the judges in that circuit should be assigned to that district.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no more community between the western tip of Texas and Louisiana than there is between Louisiana and Missouri, and therefore there is no more danger in taking a judge from without the circuit than there is in taking one from within the circuit.

Mr. BROUSSARD. That may be; but if that be a fact why not restrict the bill to the circuits?

Mr. CUMMINS. Simply because there are some circuits in which the amount of work is so great that the judges we have added here will be wholly unable to administer justice with the celerity required.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Then the Senator admits that this bill does not meet the demands?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not admit it. On the contrary, I think it does meet the demands.

Mr. BROUSSARD. With this provision; but——

Mr. CUMMINS. It would meet the demands less perfectly, it would be less adequate, if this provision were stricken out. I quite agree to that.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I happen to know, or else the spokesman of the people did not correctly represent them, that this bill with section 2 in it is being supported by a certain powerful influence because they believe that if judges in a certain circuit do not enforce the law according to their ideas they can send some other judge to that circuit to do it. I happen to have been approached by the representative of these people and urged to support the bill with section 2 in it; and he said that if section 2 was stricken out, the bill, so far as they take an interest in it, would be destroyed. It was the idea—and the man is a lawyer, and I understand that he gets $25,000 a year—that they would hold over a judge the constant threat, "If you do not enforce the law according to our ideas, we will put somebody else there who will"; and, if I may say so to the Senator from Iowa, in my section of the country we had a very striking example of sending in a judge who was not in sympathy with your views. Even I can remember when one sat upon the bench, and if you had a right you could not protect it, and therefore you had as well not have it at all. They were men of ability, too, and yet everybody shudders as he remembers the kind of justice that was dealt out under those men. One of them used to be chief justice of my State when they had the right to name a chief justice without consulting the people, and one sat on the Federal bench in my district; and I know, and the Senator knows, and we need not try to disguise from each other the fact that people may have wholly different ideas.

Suppose, for instance, the antilynching bill were to pass. Of course it never was intended to be passed; it was only a bid to induce the negro to continue to vote the Republican ticket; but if it were at some time to become the law, do you not know that there will be a constant threat held over the judges in some sections, "If you do not try these causes according to our view, we are going to get back of the matter with this powerful organization and send a judge there who will try them according to our idea"? That is a threat, and it is a thing that will do more to discredit the judiciary than anything else. It is a constant threat held over the judge that "if you do not try these causes the way we desire, if you do not get the results that we want, we will send somebody here that will." It is a humiliation to which no judge ought to be compelled to submit. Of course the Senator can laugh it away.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am wondering if the Senator has not disposed of his own objection when he said he felt there was no probability, or possibility even, that the antilynching law would be passed.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not think the proponents of it were expecting to pass it. That is just merely an invitation to continue to be faithful.

Mr. POMERENE. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. CARAWAY. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand the Senator to say that there is an organization which intends to hold threats over the judges in connection with their action in cases pending before them?

Mr. CARAWAY. A gentleman coming from the Senator's own State came to me about this bill, and wanted to know if I would support it. I said I could not support it with section 2 in it, and he said, "That is the thing we are most interested in. There are judges who do not enforce the law, and if we have not some power to send other judges into such districts, I do not know what we are going to do," and he followed me clear down the hall to argue with me that if I favored enforcing certain laws we would have to have section 2 in the bill, so that they could get a judge who was in favor of enforcing the law. The Senator from Iowa and I talked about that very matter yesterday.

Mr. CUMMINS. Inasmuch as the Senator has gone so far, I think he must go a little further, and he must not leave all the influences which are supposed to be about Washington under this cloud.

Mr. CARAWAY. Unless the gentleman who came to me and had the conversation should permit me to make it public, I shall have to decline to do it, though I have no doubt but what he has approached a great many other Senators on this same matter. He came to me with that idea. I know there are other Senators who are disgusted with it; I feel certain of that. I know, and the Senator from Iowa must know, that that is the only excuse for that provision in this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to assure the Senator from Arkansas that during all of the consideration of this bill in the committee I never heard a suggestion of that character. No member of the committee made any such suggestion, no one from the Senate made any such suggestion, and no one from the outside made any such suggestion. I do not doubt but that the Senator from Arkansas has been stating the facts accurately, but I think inasmuch as he has disclosed that part of it he ought to take measures so that he would be at liberty to disclose the rest of it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall very gladly communicate with the gentleman, because, while I do not think it was confidential, I have always hesitated to repeat private conversations; I am very much averse to doing that. I am astonished at the statement of the Senator that it has never been suggested that that was one of the ideas behind this provision, because members of the committee have suggested that very thing to me. It has been rather fully discussed and rather fully understood, and not later than 15 or 20 minutes ago a member of the committee discussed that very feature of it with me. I understood that section 2 had been stricken out of the bill, and then reconsidered and put back into the bill. Is not that true?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true.

Mr. CARAWAY. It went out on account of hostility to sending alien judges into districts to try cases, to giving to the Chief Justice the power to send out a horde of judges all over this country to designated places, concentrating in his power the whole judiciary system.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has mentioned two perfectly distinct things. It was presented to the committee and argued very earnestly, and for a time very effectively, by the Senator from Tennessee, that the power of assignment should not be enlarged, because it was better that the judges should be confined in their judicial work to their own States, or to their own districts. That is true; but when I say that it was never even hinted that there was any organization——

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not say that that was suggested in the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. When I say it was never hinted that there was any organization interested in having this section as distinguished from some other provision of the bill, I say what I believe to be the fact. I have heard of that since the bill was reported, but I am sure all the members of the committee will bear me out in saying that no such suggestion was ever made in the committee, and it is perfectly shocking to me to have it thought that the Chief Justice of the United States and the nine senior circuit judges could be approached by any selfish interest in order to secure the assignment of judges to particular localities in the country.

Mr. CARAWAY. I presume the Senator can, and I will let him, choose his own language. I never said anybody could approach the Chief Justice.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under this bill the Chief Justice is the only person who can assign district judges beyond their own circuits.

Mr. CARAWAY. Suppose the Chief Justice is sick or absent; can not an associate justice do that?

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Chief Justice is absent or ill, he must have some one to act in his stead.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wanted to show the inaccuracy of the statement of the Senator that the Chief Justice alone could do it. I did not say there would be any corrupt or selfish motive. It might be the honest conviction of the Chief Justice of the United States that a certain judge was not disposing of the business as he believed it ought to be disposed of. He could send somebody else into that district to do it.

It is personal government, so far as the Chief Justice is concerned. It is wrapped up on the bosom of the Chief Justice to determine whether or not he ought to send judges to certain districts.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is not the Senator from Arkansas willing to put enough confidence in the Chief Justice to believe that he wants to have the judicial business of this country done, and that he will select judges, if they are to be sent out of the circuits in which they reside, with reference to the business to be done? If New York requires an additional judge, he will send one to New York. If Philadelphia requires an additional judge, he will send one there. I can not imagine how the business of this country can be done without such a provision. The Chief Justice has the power now with reference to the second circuit.

Mr. CARAWAY. The judges now can go if they are willing to go. I want to ask the Senator a question. The constitution of my State, and I expect of his State also, has a provision in it about which I want to ask him. The Senator asked me if I had confidence enough to trust to the Chief Justice. I would not intrust the liberties of this country to any one man selected for life, I do not care whether he was the present Chief Justice or one who has gone or the one who is to come after the present one. I have an idea that the makers of the constitution of the Senator's own State provided, as I know they provided in my State, that a man must be tried where he is accused of committing an offense. The makers of the constitution of my State said that there is not power enough under heaven to make a man go out of the county where he is accused of committing a crime to be tried. He has a right to be tried where the offense is alleged to have been committed, to be tried by a jury of his peers, men who know him. He has a right to be tried by the judge of that locality, and you can not force him out of that jurisdiction.

The makers of the Constitution were so jealous of the rights of the individual to a local trial, by people who knew him and knew the conditions, that they wrote a provision into the organic law that you can not remove him for any cause. If it transpired in a county in my State—and I suspect the same is true of the Senator's State—that you could not get a jury because practically everybody had formed or expressed an opinion, it would be thought best to let the man go untried, to let justice be defeated, rather than to give somebody the power to take him out of that jurisdiction, where a jury can be had, or to go out of that jurisdiction and bring a jury in.

Mr. CUMMINS. This does not change that.

Mr. SPENCER. Either side could have another judge. The accused is not entitled to a judge of the district in which he lives. Either the State or the defendant could remove the judge from the bench by a change of venue.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator does not know the constitution of my State.

Mr. SPENCER. Is not that true in Arkansas?

Mr. CARAWAY. Nobody can remove the judge except by impeachment. If everybody knew he was not enforcing the law, unless you could impeach him before the legislature, he would have a right to sit, and nobody would have a right to remove him.

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator mean to say that in the State of Arkansas, if either the defendant or the State makes an application for a change of venue on the ground of the prejudice of the judge, there is no provision by which another judge may be called into that district?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; you can not disqualify the judge. I dare say that in the Senator's own State there is a wise constitutional provision that a defendant can swear that the judge will not give him justice and he can go somewhere else.

Mr. SPENCER. That is not true in my own State.

Mr. CARAWAY. Can he not get a change of venue?

Mr. SPENCER. He does not go anywhere else, but they bring in another judge, and I suspect that is the law in Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I happen to know it is not the law. It is a good guess, but it is not the law. Under this bill, instead of trying to remove the defendant out of the jurisdiction, you give one man the power to send in a judge. Of course, all of us know about how influential and strong a trial judge may be in the Federal courts, with the power to question the veracity of every witness who appears for the defendant, if it is a criminal case, with the power to express an opinion as to the weight of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses; with the power to tell the jury that, in his judgment, the defendant is proven to be guilty of the offense of which he stands charged. If he does say somewhere in the charge, "Of course, you are the sole judges of the weight of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses" that will remove all error. The trial judge may become as much of a tyrant now as Jeffreys was in England when he made his reign the infamy of the courts.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will permit me a moment, the power does not lie, under this bill——

Mr. CUMMINS. I must not stand here and have this immaterial argument go on.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator yield to me for a statement?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a statement.

Mr. SPENCER. Under the provisions of this bill the power does not rest in any single man or any single judge to send a judge from one circuit into another. There must first be the request of the senior judge of the circuit to which the man is to be sent, and then there must be the consent of the senior judge of the circuit from which the man is sent, and when those two combine, then the Chief Justice of the United States makes the designation. How there is any danger in that provision I do not see.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator is mistaken in the bill. No such thing is provided for. There is a clause in the bill allowing the Chief Justice to make the designations whenever in his opinion the public interest requires it. I am not going to interrupt the Senator from Iowa further to go into that.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not find that.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator has not considered the bill. He is not on the committee. If he looks at the bill he will find that it provides as I have stated.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall be glad to have the Senator point out that provision to me.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will do it at the proper time.

Mr. CUMMINS. When asked the question by the Senator from Arkansas, I was about to read that part of the bill which gives to the senior circuit judges the right to assign district judges.

The second paragraph of section 3 provides:

(2) Such designation shall be made by the senior circuit judge whenever he is satisfied that condition (a), (b), or (c) exists.

Mark you, that is when a judge is physically or mentally unable for the time being to perform his duties or is necessarily absent from his district; or—

(b) In aid of a district judge who on account of accumulation and urgency of business is unable to perform speedily all the work of his district.

(c) In aid of a district judge when the public interests so require.

The closing phrase of paragraph 2 is:

Whenever he is satisfied that condition (a), (b), or (c) exists and that the designation can be carried out without such prejudice to the regular work of the designated judge as to make it inadvisable.

This is the provision, if Senators will carry the matter in mind, for the assignment of judges from one district to another in the same circuit.

Section 3 also amends section 14 of the Judicial Code as follows:

A circuit judge may be designated to act as district judge in any district of his circuit or of attached territory in any case where a district judge might be so designated.

That, of course, is for the purpose of utilizing as fully as possible the full strength of the circuit court of appeals. That is, when the circuit court of appeals can spare a circuit judge, that circuit judge can be assigned to the work of the district courts, and the designation is to be made by the senior circuit judge.

(3) This section shall apply to the circuit judges formerly comprising the Commerce Court.

I come now to the point that is particularly objectionable to the Senator from Arkansas.

SEC. 15. (1) A district judge of a district (called herein the home district) may be designated to act in any district of another circuit or its attached territory (called herein the aided district) in place of or in aid of a judge thereof in case—

Now appears the provision referred to by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER]. These things must concur in order to warrant the assignment of a district judge beyond his home work:

(a) The senior circuit judge of the aided district shall certify to the Chief Justice of the United States that the public interests require the designation of an additional judge or judges in such district and that it is impracticable to supply the need from among the judges of his circuit; and

(b) The senior circuit judge of the circuit of the home district shall certify to the Chief Justice of the United States that neither the business of that district nor of other districts in that circuit will suffer by the proposed designation.

Those are the things that must be certified in order to give the Chief Justice the right to make the designation, and then it provides:

Such designation may be made by the Chief Justice, if, in his judgment, the public interests so require.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I think it may be pertinent to the feature of the bill which the Senator is now discussing for me to observe that in the State of Ohio, because largely of the rapid increase in our industrial centers, the litigation in those centers has very largely increased, and the litigation, perhaps, in the rural districts has been correspondingly decreased. About eight or nine years ago our legislature passed a law which authorized the chief justice of the supreme court of the State to take common pleas judges from one county or district and send them into other counties where there was an overcrowded docket. They even go to the extent of taking judges from counties where there is plenty of litigation to occupy their time and arrange an exchange with other counties.

There are 88 counties in the State, and I think in the eight or nine years that system has been in existence there has not been a single complaint against it. I believe my colleague would verify the statement in that behalf. I know it has been eminently satisfactory, not only to the judiciary but to the lawyers and to the litigants as well.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the junior Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I only want to confirm what my colleague has said. We have had exactly this system for a number of years. I am somewhat familiar with its operation, and I have yet to hear of the first complaint that has been made against its operation. It has worked perfectly, to the universal satisfaction of our people.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senators from Ohio have just stated a condition that exists in every State in the Union. There is no such question in this matter. This is the case of sending lawyers from the Atlantic to the Pacific or from one State to another, from far-distant manufacturing States to agricultural States, mining States, or grazing States, where they have different systems of law, where they would be at a loss to administer the law in that particular jurisdiction to which they are going. In a State the same laws apply to every county, and there is nothing more common than an exchange of judges within the same State, administering the same law to the same people and trying them before the same jury. That is not a parallel case.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is difficult to understand the statement of the Senator from Tennessee in view of the fact that for years there has been the right of assignment within the circuit, and the circuit judge could assign a district judge in North Dakota to hold a court in Arkansas, and he could assign a district judge in Utah to hold court in Minnesota. There is as much variety in the nature of the cases which arise in that territory as there is in the entire United States.

I am afraid that we are beginning to think on very narrow and sectional lines. There never has been any complaint with regard to the assignment of judges. The only hope is, at least the only purpose is, that we shall be able to utilize the strength of these judges to the best possible advantage. If the Chief Justice finds that a district judge in Iowa has not sufficient business to fully occupy his time, he can send him to Ohio, he can send him to New York, he can send him anywhere, provided always that certain conditions which are prescribed in the bill are fulfilled.

The suspicion of the integrity of the appointing power or assigning power provided for in the bill is entirely new to me. It comes as the greatest surprise of my senatorial career. I did not know that Senators had any prejudice against the courts of the United States or any suspicion that they would not and do not discharge their duties with the utmost fidelity. It will take me at least a little while to become familiar with that idea, because I did not hear a word of it in the committee and I did not know that it exists in the Senate.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it not a fact that the plan the Senator has been so clearly describing has been in effect for many years in that provision of the law which makes possible the designation of district judges all over the United States into the second circuit?

Mr. CUMMINS. The law which allows the district judges to be assigned to the second circuit is not very old, but I think it has given the highest satisfaction. The judges who have been assigned to the districts in New York have performed their duties in a way that commended them, I think, not only to the people of New York, but to all the people who are familiar with their work.

(At this point Mr. CUMMINS yielded the floor for the day.)

Friday, March 31, 1922.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, when the Senate suspended the consideration of this bill some days ago I was considering section 3 of the measure, and inasmuch as some time has elapsed since the Senate had the matter under consideration, I am tempted to and I will venture upon some repetition, but as little as possible.

This bill in its first section provides for the appointment of 19 additional district judges of the United States. I had pointed out, in my former observations, the districts in which these additional judges were to be appointed and the circuits in which they are to be located. I do not think I need repeat what I said on a former occasion with regard to the necessity of an additional judicial force in our judicial system; at least I will not reiterate what I said before with regard to the state of the various dockets throughout the country.

If the report of the Attorney General, from which my statistics have been taken, is to be relied upon, it must be assumed that there is very great need of additional judges, for we now present the spectacle of both criminal and civil cases remaining undisposed of for years at a time. Just now there are thousands of civil cases which ought to be speedily disposed of. There are even more criminal cases which the lowest conception of the administration of justice requires shall be tried and judgments entered therein without delay.

After pointing out what the bill proposes with regard to the appointment of additional judges, I had passed to section 3, as I thought that logically it should be considered before we approached the consideration of section 2. Section 3 contains the provisions which are believed to be necessary with regard to the designation of judges to perform their judicial duties beyond the districts for which they were originally appointed.

A very considerable debate arose at this point in my discussion, and without referring to the general character of that debate, because there at once developed differences of opinion with respect to this part of the bill, I may say that it seems to be assumed that the bill proposed some very radical departure from the former policy of the country with regard to the designation of judges to perform their duties outside their own districts, and for the purpose of bringing my discussion to a close I take up at this time the present law upon that subject. Some Senators seemed to forget that we had any provision in our statutes authorizing the appointment or designation of district judges and other judges for work beyond their own districts, and I think I ought to make the existing law upon that subject perfectly clear, in order that we may intelligently consider what additional authority is given for the designation of judges.

Section 13 of the Judicial Code provides:

When any district judge is prevented, by any disability, from holding any stated or appointed term of his district court, and that fact is made to appear by the certificate of the clerk, under the seal of the court, to any circuit judge of the circuit in which the district lies, or, in the absence of all the circuit judges, to the circuit justice of the circuit in which the district lies, any such circuit judge or justice may, if in his judgment the public interests so require, designate and appoint the judge of any other district in the same circuit to hold said court and to discharge all the judicial duties of the judge so disabled during such disability.

Thus, as Senators will observe, in the case of the disability of a district judge to continue his duties a circuit judge may designate some other district judge to hold court in the district of the disabled judge, but it will also be observed that it must be within the circuit in which the home district of the disabled judge lies. I proceed:

Whenever it shall be certified by any such circuit judge, or, in his absence, by the circuit justice of the circuit in which the district lies, that for any sufficient reason it is impracticable to designate and appoint a judge of another district within the circuit to perform the duties of such disabled judge, the Chief Justice—

I want Senators to remark that, because it will become a point of argument, and possibly of difference, when we come to consider the bill now before us—

The Chief Justice may, if in his judgment the public interests so require, designate and appoint the judge of any district in another circuit to hold said court and to discharge all the judicial duties of the judge so disabled during such disability. Such appointment shall be filed in the clerk's office and entered on the minutes of the said district court, and a certified copy thereof, under the seal of the court, shall be transmitted by the clerk to the judge so designated and appointed.

I want to emphasize the provisions of this section of the statute. In the event of disability the circuit judge of the circuit may designate a district judge to supply the place of the disabled judge, but that designation must fall within the circuit within which the district lies, and when it is desired to designate a district judge for work beyond the circuit in which his district is, then the designation is to be made by the Chief Justice of the United States. I will point out a little later or more fully just wherein the proposed bill enlarges this authority. But the distinctive characteristic of the section I have just read is that there must exist disability on the part of the district judge whose place is to be supplied.

Section 14 of the judicial code provides—and mark this:

When, from the accumulation or urgency of business in any district court, the public interests require the designation and appointment hereinafter provided, and the fact is made to appear by the certificate of the clerk, under the seal of the court, to any circuit judge of the circuit in which the district lies, or, in the absence of all the circuit judges, to the circuit justice of the circuit in which the district lies, such circuit judge or justice may designate and appoint the judge of any other district in the same circuit to have and exercise within the district first named the same powers that are vested in the judge thereof. Each of the said district judges may, in case of such appointment, hold separately at the same time a district court in such district, and discharge all the judicial duties of the district judge therein. (36 Stat. L. 1089.)

It will be noted that this section provides for the very condition which we are attempting to guard against or to remedy in the present bill; that is, when there is an accumulation or urgency of business, the circuit judge may appoint any district judge to perform his judicial duties beyond his own district, but in the same circuit. So much we have provided in the pending bill.

Section 15 provides:

If all the circuit judges and the circuit justice are absent from the circuit, or are unable to execute the provisions of either of the two preceding sections, or if the district judge so designated is disabled or neglects to hold the court and transact the business for which he is designated, the clerk of the district court shall certify the fact to the Chief Justice of the United States, who may thereupon designate and appoint in the manner aforesaid the judge of any district within such circuit or within any other circuit; and said appointment shall be transmitted to the clerk and be acted upon by him as directed in the preceding section. (36 Stat. L. 1089.)

Section 16 simply continues the power for making changes from time to time.

Section 17 provides:

It shall be the duty of the senior circuit judge then present in the circuit, whenever in his judgment the public interest so requires, to designate and appoint, in the manner and with the powers provided in section 14, the district judge of any judicial district within his circuit to hold a district court in the place or in aid of any other district judge within the same circuit. (36 Stat. L. 1089.)

That means, of course, that the senior circuit judge may designate one of his associates to perform the duties of a district judge whenever the public interests so require.

Section 18 provides:

SEC. 18. Whenever, in the judgment of the senior circuit judge of the circuit in which the district lies, or of the circuit justice assigned to such circuit, or of the Chief Justice, the public interest shall require, the said judge, or associate justice, or Chief Justice shall designate and appoint any circuit judge of the circuit to hold said district court. (36 Stat L. 1089.)

These are the general provisions of the Judicial Code with regard to the designation of judges to hold courts in other places than those in which they ordinarily hold courts.

We have one special act which applies to the subject. In 1913 there was passed an act which applies only to the second judicial circuit. I assume that it was made applicable to that circuit alone because of the tremendous accumulation of business in and about New York City. I read that part of it which seems to be pertinent:

Whenever it shall be certified by the senior circuit judge of the second circuit, or, in his absence, by the circuit justice of said circuit, that on account of the accumulation or urgency of business in any district court in said circuit it is impracticable to designate and appoint a sufficient number of district judges of other districts within said circuit to relieve such accumulation or urgency of business, the Chief Justice may, if in his judgment the public interests so require, designate and appoint the judge of any district court in another circuit to hold a district court within the said second circuit, and to have and exercise within the district to which he is so assigned the same powers that are vested in the judge thereof: Provided, That such judge so designated and appointed shall have consented in writing to such designation and appointment; And provided further, That the senior circuit judge of the circuit within which such judge so designated and appointed resides shall certify in writing that the business of the district of such judge shall not suffer thereby. Such appointment shall be filed in the clerk's office and entered on the minutes of the said district court—

And so forth.

The thing that I wish to emphasize with regard to this special act is that we have not, in the bill now before us, enlarged the powers of the Chief Justice further than to give him the right to designate or assign district judges to any of the circuits of the United States, precisely as in 1913 we gave him the power to assign district judges to any point in the second circuit. That is the substance of the additional power that we have given to the Chief Justice.

The pending bill differs from the special act in another respect. We have eliminated that part of the existing law which requires the consent of the designated judge. In every other respect there is no essential difference between the powers of the Chief Justice under the bill now proposed and the existing law relating to the second circuit.

I take up now, Mr. President, for very brief consideration the amendments which we have proposed to the law which I have just read. They are all in section 3 of the pending bill. I will comment upon them as I read them:

SEC. 3. That sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18—

Which are the sections I have just read—

as amended by the act of October 3, 1913—

I have also read that act or its material parts—of the Judicial Code, be amended to read as follows:

SEC. 13. (1) A district judge for a district may be designated to act in another district or the same circuit—

Senators will remark that there is a typographical error at that point which I will ask the Senate presently to correct. The word "or" should be "of."

another district of the same circuit (including territory attached thereto)—

(a) In the place of a district judge who is physically or mentally unable for the time being to perform his duties or who is to be necessarily absent from his district.

It will be noted that the only change we make in the present law so far as this paragraph is concerned is that we add the provision "or who is or who is to be necessarily absent from his district." I am sure that there can be no reasonable objection to the addition of that contingency for assignment or designation.

(b) In aid of a district judge who on account of the accumulation and urgency of business is unable to perform speedily all the work of his district.

There is practically no change whatever as compared with the present law in that paragraph.

(c) In aid of a district judge when the public interests so require.

That is no enlargement upon the existing law.

(2) Such designation shall be made by the senior circuit judge whenever he is satisfied that conditions (a), (b), or (c)—

And I have just read those conditions—exists and that the designation can be carried out without such prejudice to the regular work of the designated judge as to make it inadvisable.

The last phrase in that paragraph is added, but it is for the further protection of the home district and certainly no one can object to that.

SEC. 14. (1) A circuit judge may be designated to act as district judge in any district of his circuit or of attached territory in any case where a district judge might be so designated.

That is not essentially different from the present law.

(2) Such designation may be made by the senior circuit judge (who may designate himself) whenever he is satisfied that the occasion therefore exists and that the public interests so require.

That is simply a better and more complete expression of the thought of the existing law.

3. This section shall apply to the circuit judges formerly comprising the Commerce Court.

This is new in the present bill, and it ought to be explained, although possibly it is very clear to all Senators. A few years ago we created a court known as the Commerce Court. It was in existence a short time and was then abolished. The judges who comprised that court were circuit judges of the United States, and the bill which abolished the court provided that the circuit judges who composed the Commerce Court should be assigned to the several circuits for judicial work in those circuits. One of the judges was impeached, as we all know, which left four judges of that court, and they have been assigned to the several circuits. There is one assigned to the second circuit, one to the seventh circuit, as I remember, one to the fourth circuit, and one to the eighth circuit. The purpose of the paragraph which I have just read is to subject these judges to the same obligation in the way of designation and assignment as the judges who were regularly appointed as circuit judges and who compose the circuit court of appeals.

SEC. 15. (1) A district judge of a district (called herein the home district) may be designated to act in any district of another circuit or its attached territory (called herein the aided district) in place of or in aid of a judge thereof in case—

That is substantially provided for in the present law—imperfectly, it is true; but it is provided for completely, so far as the second circuit is concerned. This is to be done in case—

(a) The senior circuit judge of the aided district shall certify to the Chief Justice of the United States that the public interests require the designation of an additional judge or judges in such district and that it is impracticable to supply the need from among the judges of his circuit; and

(b) The senior circuit judge of the circuit of the home district shall certify to the Chief Justice of the United States that neither the business of that district nor of other districts in that circuit will suffer by the proposed designation.

Here are the conditions upon which district judges may be designated for the performance of judicial labor in other circuits than their own. In my opinion we have surrounded this power with some safeguards which are not found in the statute as it now exists. They are not found even in the special act which was passed with regard to the second circuit. The bill further provides:

(2) Such designation may be made by the Chief Justice if, in his judgment, the public interests so require.

That does not give the Chief Justice any higher authority than he now has, except that it covers a broader field. It gives the Chief Justice the same authority with regard to all the circuits of the United States that he now has completely with regard to the second circuit, but he can not exercise that power unless the senior circuit judge of the home district—that is, the district from which the district judge is to be taken, and the senior circuit judge of the district to which aid is to be given—shall certify to the matters and things contained in paragraphs (a) and (b).

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a question. Under subdivision (a), for instance, will the senior circuit judge of the district where aid is needed simply certify that there is need of the aid of an additional judge in that district generally, or will he certify that there is need of the aid of an additional judge and point out what judge and from what district he wants him to come, or will he simply certify that there is need of an additional judge in a certain district; and then is it for the Chief Justice to call on some senior circuit judge in some other circuit to ascertain whethere or not he could spare from that circuit a district judge, and then certify the district judge?

How will the Chief Justice be able to designate a particular judge from a certain circuit to be sent to a given district unless there is some specification as to the judge?

Mr. CUMMINS. The practical application of this bill, if it becomes a law, will be found in section 2, to which I am shortly to refer. Necessarily, even at the present time, there must be some communication between the Chief Justice and the senior circuit judge in order to reach a conclusion with regard to the need of additional help in a particular district. At the same time there must be some communication between the Chief Justice and the senior circuit judge of the circuit from which the judge is to be taken in order to ascertain whether, without injury to the public service, that judge may be taken from that circuit, and from what particular district he shall be taken in order to best serve the public interest.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what I have in mind; that section 2 authorizes the Chief Justice "if, in his judgment, the public interests so require" to make the designation. It may be in the practical working out of the act these communications will develop the need and how the need may be supplied; but in subdivision (a) all that is required as to a circuit that is in need of an additional district judge is that the senior circuit judge shall certify to the Chief Justice that there is such a need. The bill does not point out how it is to be supplied or from what circuit a designation is to be made, or anything of the kind. The Chief Justice is given authority to make the designation; but how will he know from which circuit to make the designation unless he follows that up by inquiring in the different circuits?

Mr. CUMMINS. That may only be ascertained by preliminary communication between the Chief Justice and the senior circuit judges of the two districts which are concerned.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to answer the inquiry of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. The bill grants broad and unlimited discretion to the Chief Justice to select from the circuit the judge whom he wishes to select.

Mr. CUMMINS. I take it, Mr. President, that it would be unnecessary to put into the bill specific provisions with regard to every step that must be taken in order to provide for the exercise of the power which we have given to the Chief Justice; but, as I remarked, that is one of the important reasons supporting section 2, to which, as I understand, my friend from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is not devotedly attached; but we will discuss that later.

I now read paragraph (3), of section 15, which is as follows:

(3) For the purposes of this section the District of Columbia is to be deemed one of the districts which may be aided and likewise a circuit, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is to be deemed a district court to which designations may be made, the justices of the court of appeals as circuit judges, and the chief justice thereof as the senior.

The application of that paragraph lies here: Judges of the district court, and in some cases of the circuit court, may be designated for judicial work in the District of Columbia, and judges may be brought, I assume, from any part of the country to aid the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in the work which has accumulated in this District; but it is to be observed that there is no power given to assign the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to labor beyond the District of Columbia.

SEC. 16. (1) The designation provided for by sections 13, 14, and 15 shall be in writing, signed by the judge or justice designating, and shall specify the district aided, the judge designated, and the period of service.

I will not read the remainder of section 3, because I assume that there will be found no objection to the remaining parts of that section. It simply embraces what might be called the administrative portions of the proposed law and provides for presenting and preserving the evidence which shows that a judge doing his work in a particular place has authority under this proposed act to do it.

Section 4 of the bill proposes to create a new circuit judge for the fourth circuit.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIELDS. Before the Senator leaves the provisions of the bill which he has been discussing, authorizing the Chief Justice to designate judges to sit in different parts of the United States, I desire to ask him whether he thinks that power is necessary? The Senator will bear in mind other provisions of the bill creating 19 new judges to relieve the congestion which it was expected the Chief Justice would relieve by assigning judges; and, in addition to those 19, the Senator will also bear in mind there are amendments now pending, I believe, providing for six or eight other judges. If this bill shall pass, there will be some 25 judges, and therefore there will be no necessity of giving this great and unlimited and dangerous power to the Chief Justice to send judges around to try particular cases at particular places. I repeat my question, however, which is, If the appointment of the 19 or 25 new judges which are asked for shall be authorized, will there be any necessity of giving this additional power to the Chief Justice?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think that section 3, amending the several sections of the Judicial Code, is very desirable, even though we add no judge to our judicial force. I think that section is a great improvement in phraseology, and in its effect and in its administrative provisions, if you please, it is very much better than the present law; but I quite agree that if we had added no district judges to our system, in all probability section 3 would not have been considered necessary. However, inasmuch as we are adding very materially to our judicial force, it seems to be wise at the same time to revise these sections of the code. So far as the power of the Chief Justice is concerned, however, there is no considerable or appreciable addition to that power. There is one great change, and that is that when assigning judges to the second circuit under the existing law we must have their assent to the designation, whereas if section 3 is passed as it is now their assent will be unnecesary.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, does not the Senator see that there is a great change here in our judicial system, partaking of a military feature, in that we have a staff and chief of staff for the judiciary, and provide for the staff to be called to Washington to meet, and the chief of staff, the Chief Justice, will assign these men? Is not that an entire change in the system? Does it not partake of a military feature that we ought not to bring into force in connection with the judicial system?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not. I am utterly unable to perceive any approach to a military system. The complete independence, the complete separation of the judicial system from all other departments of the Government, are preserved in this law even more sedulously than in the existing law.

I think my friend from North Carolina has one of those beautiful imaginations which are able to conjure up parallels where they do not exist. No; I am bound to say to the Senator from North Carolina that I have no such apprehension, and do not find in this bill any such suggestion.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to say that I differ with the Senator's statement that the complete separation of powers is preserved in this bill. On the contrary, I will undertake to show that they are very much confused, and that it is proposed to give the Chief Justice both legislative and executive powers; but that really is not the question I rose to discuss. As to an analogy of this to the military organization, what does the Senator think about its being copied after the system now prevailing in England, in which the Lord High Chancellor is the head of the judiciary? Chief Justice Taft, in his evidence before the Judiciary Committee of the House, testifying in behalf of this bill, said that he was the executive head of the judiciary. Now, the Lord High Chancellor of England is both a judicial and a political officer. He goes in and out with an administration. Are we not somewhat copying after the system in England in creating a political as well as a judicial head of the Federal judiciary?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; I see no similarity at all; and I must dissent from the statement of the Senator from Tennessee and declare, as far as my mind can comprehend the question, that under existing law the Chief Justice does not perform any legislative function, nor does the Chief Justice or any other judge perform any executive function, properly speaking. The Supreme Court of the United States appoints its clerk. It may be that the Senator from Tennessee has in mind that that is an objectionable executive function. Every district judge appoints the clerk of his district. That appointment must be made by some one, and I take it that the fact that appointments of that character are made by judges does not indicate that our judiciary is attempting to intrude itself upon either the legislative or the executive branches of the Government.

The appointment of a clerk by a court, while it has some executive characteristics, is not, properly speaking, an executive function; and that is true, of course, of all the officers that may be necessary to make up a completed system. I reply further to the Senator from Tennessee that this bill does not give to the Chief Justice a single function or a single power that he does not already have in character.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, we will disagree about that; but I want to refer to the statement the Senator made awhile ago that the appointment of a clerk was not an executive function. My recollection of the authorities is that all appointments to office are, in strictness, executive acts—executive functions. That is so stated in the textbooks upon the subject of the separation of powers. They all lay down that rule; but our constitutions, both Federal and State, do not follow that strict division of power but authorize the appointing power to be vested in judges and in legislative departments, and, of course, we are bound by the constitutions. As to the appointment of clerks by Federal judges, that is authorized by the Constitution. It is executive but it is constitutional.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree entirely with the Senator from Tennessee; and it may be remembered that in my suggestion I said that the appointment of a clerk is an act of an executive character, but when performed by a judge—authorized, of course, by the law—it does not constitute an invasion of the executive branch of the Government or an invasion of the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. SHIELDS. Because authorized by the Constitution.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee and I will agree upon that.

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly; but that particular authority of the judiciary is conferred by the Constitution.

Mr. CUMMINS. It, of course, is conferred by the Constitution, or it could not be done and would not be done.

I was remarking, when interrupted by the Senator from Tennessee, that the fourth section of this bill provides for an additional circuit judge for the fourth circuit. Senators will recall the composition of the fourth circuit. It consists of the States of Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and West Virginia. This circuit never has had but two regular circuit judges. It is the only circuit in the United States which had not been previously provided with at least three circuit judges. You all know that the circuit judges constitute the circuit court of appeals; and until Judge Knapp, who was formerly a member of the commerce court, was assigned to the fourth circuit, that circuit had but two judges. The committee was of the opinion that the business in that circuit and the conditions which surround it entitled it to a third circuit judge, and section 4 so provides.

I now approach the part of the bill which has seemed to alarm some of my friends upon whose judgment I usually confidently rely, but which, as it seems to me, is not only a desirable part of the bill but, I think, it is a necessary part of the bill if the distribution of our judges throughout the country in order to accomplish more perfectly than is now being done their judicial work shall be successful. I will take the liberty of reading it. Allow me first, however, to remind Senators that section 3 of the bill, as well as the present law, imposes the duty of designation upon two classes of judges. When district judges are to be designated within their respective circuits, the senior circuit judge executes that duty. When district judges are to be designated to points beyond their respective circuits, the chief justice is to perform that task.

I want Senators to remember that this division of authority—and it is a necessary division of authority—requires absolutely, and by virtue of its own arrangement, some kind of consultation between the circuit judges and the Chief Justice. The inquiry of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] made that very clearly apparent. When the Chief Justice has the authority to take a judge from a circuit and assign him to duty outside the circuit, and the senior circuit judge of that circuit has the authority to take a district judge and assign him for duty within the circuit, in order to avoid conflict there must necessarily be a consultation between the Chief Justice and the circuit judges. This consultation might be carried on—I concede that—by correspondence. It could be done by correspondence, but it will not be as well and as efficiently done through correspondence as it will if carried on in the way set out in section 2, and that section I proceed to read:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Chief Justice of the United States, or, in case of his disability, of one of the other justices of the Supreme Court, in order of their seniority, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, and annually thereafter, to summon to a conference on the last Monday in September at Washington, or at such other time and place in the United States as the Chief Justice, or, in case of his disability, any of said justices in order of their seniority, may designate, the senior circuit judge of each circuit. If any of said senior circuit judges is unable to attend, the Chief Justice, or, in case of his disability, any justice of the Supreme Court in the order of seniority, may nominate any other circuit or district judge belonging to the circuit whose senior circuit judge is unable to attend, that each circuit may adequately be represented at said conference.

It shall be the duty of every senior or other circuit or district judge to attend such conference, and to remain throughout its proceedings, and to advise as to the needs of his circuit and as to any matters in respect of which the administration of justice in the courts of the United States may be improved.

It shall be the duty of the senior district judge of each district court of the United States to make, on or before the 1st day of August of each year, a report to the senior circuit judge as to the condition of the business in his district and a recommendation as to what additional judicial force, if any, is needed to dispose of the business of such district with reasonable dispatch.

That provision is made in order that each circuit judge may come to the conference fully informed with regard to the state of the business in every district in his circuit. Now, speaking of the district judge, it provides:

It shall not be sufficient for him merely to state in his report the cases as shown upon the docket of the court, but, after investigation, he shall express his best judgment as to the condition of business existing or likely to arise in his court during the ensuing year. The senior circuit judge, or, in his absence, a judge representing the circuit at the conference, shall present such reports to the conference, with a summary thereof, and his comments thereon.

If this part of the bill becomes a law, there will then be a conference of all the circuit judges, together with the Chief Justice, and each of those circuit judges will be armed with a complete report of the state of the business in every district in his circuit. They will come prepared to confer in an intelligent way, looking to the dispatch of judicial business everywhere throughout the country. I read again:

The Attorney General shall, upon the request of the Chief Justice, report to such conference on matters relating to the business of the several courts of the United States, with particular reference to causes or proceedings in which the United States may be a party.

The Attorney General makes his report only upon the request of the Chief Justice. It would be a very appropriate thing always to make that report, because so large a part of the business pending in the various district courts throughout the country, and in the circuit courts of appeals as well, is business in which the United States is interested; that is, it consists of causes to which the United States is a party. I continue reading:

The said conference shall be presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States, or, in case of his disability, by any justice of the Supreme Court in the order of seniority.

Said conference shall make a comprehensive survey of the conditions of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans and schedules for the assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts where the state of the docket or the condition of business indicates the need therefor, and shall submit such suggestions to the various courts as may seem in the interest of uniformity and expedition of business.

Instead of having occasional and disjointed and disconnected communications between the Chief Justice and the various circuit judges, we have provided for a meeting at which the requirements of all the districts can be considered and compared, and if it is necessary to designate judges for work outside their districts, it can be done with some comprehension of the real needs of the country, and it can be done in no other way.

I appeal to the good sense of Senators, and ask them if they were members of the judicial force and wanted to distribute that force throughout the country so that the greatest efficiency could be secured, would they not insist upon a consultation which would disclose these needs? The needs can not be considered in their absolute sense. They must be considered in their comparative sense. A great many of the courts, at least when they give their account of the business pending before them, will indicate that they need additional force, but there must be a comparison of these necessities, so that the public welfare may be most certainly promoted.

The last paragraph of this section is as follows:

The Chief Justice and each justice or judge summoned to and attending said conference shall be allowed his actual expenses of travel and his necessary expenses for subsistence, not to exceed $10 per day, which payments shall be made by the marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the written certificate of the Chief Justice.

I have read section 2 in its entirety, and will not comment upon it further than to say that it does not increase the power of the Chief Justice in any respect. It simply enables the Chief Justice to do the work which has been committed to him in section 3 more understandingly than he otherwise could perform it. It does not add to or take from the authority of the senior circuit judges in any form. They are left with exactly the same authority that section 3 reposes in them, but it does enable these circuit judges, comparing the needs of their circuits with the needs of other circuits, in a conference of which every senior circuit judge is a member, to arrange the designations or the assignments so that the maximum judicial work will be performed.

I am utterly unable to understand the objection to this section. I can understand how great differences of opinion may arise upon the first section of the bill. Some may think we do not need any additional judicial force. Some may honestly and sincerely believe that we do not need so large an addition to the number of our judges as is provided in that section. Others may believe that we need to add still more circuit judges for the reasonable dispatch of the business which comes before them. All these things I can understand, but I can not understand how Senators who believe that there ought to be additional judges, and who believe that by reason of population and commerce and all other conditions out of which litigation grows there are some communities or localities of the United States which are deprived of sufficient judicial force, and therefore that assignment or designation is necessary from one district to another or from one circuit to another, can possibly object to the provisions of section 2, which are simply intended and the only purpose of which is to make the provisions of section 3 intelligently workable.

Mr. President, I do not intend to further continue my discussion of the bill at this time, but before it is taken up by other Senators I would like to have the opportunity of perfecting the amendment of the committee in the nature of a substitute by making some minor amendments which have appeared to be necessary since the bill left the committee.

On page 13, line 14, I move that the word "or" be stricken out and that the word "of" be substituted in lieu thereof.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. In line 2, page 15, I move to strike out the word "by," which is used twice through a typographical error, so that that line would read, "in that circuit will suffer by the proposed designation."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. In line 16, page 16, there is a misprint. The word used is "cout," if that be a word. I move to strike it out and to insert the word "court."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. In lines 2 and 3, page 17, I move to strike out the words "the chief justice or associate justice allotted to that circuit, or by." That is simply a repetition of language found in another place in the bill.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. In line 8, page 17, I move to strike out the words "this section or."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. In line 22, page 17, after the word "appointed," I move to strike out the comma and insert a period.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. With these suggestions, Mr. President, I give way to other Senators.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa who has charge of this bill and I differ widely upon pretty nearly every proposition that is presented in this bill. We disagree as to the constitutionality of certain provisions of the bill vesting very large and unprecedented powers in the Chief Justice of the United States over the judges of the circuit courts of appeal and the judges of the district courts of the United States.

We differ as to the propriety and the policy of the provisions for the mobilization of the Federal judiciary with the Chief Justice as commander in chief. We differ as to the necessity of designating judges from one circuit to hold court in another circuit, as I believe there are ample judges now to dispose of all the business in the district courts of the United States without such designation. Certainly if the number of judges is increased, as proposed by the bill, there will be no necessity of designating a district judge from one circuit to another, and the provisions giving these vast powers to the Chief Justice, both executive and legislative in character, will be wholly unnecessary and inadvisable.

We differ entirely upon the statement made by the Senator from Iowa when he began his presentation of the bill upon a former day, that there was a shocking condition in the Federal courts of the United States, that there were thousands of cases that could not be tried, that there was a congestion of both civil and criminal business, and that there was a demand for a large increase of judges, although the Senator said in his personal opinion there was no such increase demanded as is provided in the bill as reported to the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, as we differ so widely, I wish to go at some length into the general principles that control legislation of this character before I come directly to the provisions of the bill. I am led to do this because I believe the bill is of a most revolutionary character. I believe it contains the germs, at the least, of the most serious assault that has ever been made upon the integrity and independence of the judiciary of the country. I believe that I can demonstrate that by analyzing the provisions of the various bills from which this one was finally formulated.

Mr. President, the legislation which the Senate is now considering did not originate with the Congress. The bill first introduced in the Senate was prepared under the direction of the Attorney General, with the approval of the Chief Justice, and those high officers advocated its passage before the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The bill now under discussion closely follows that bill in many important particulars, and contains provisions which have a dangerous tendency, conflict seriously with the spirit if not the letter of the Constitution and the long-established policy of the Congress concerning the judiciary, and are revolutionary in their character.

Mr. President, the American people have been afflicted for some years with a mania for changing their form of government, its organic and statutory laws, its matchless common-law jurisprudence, the accumulated wisdom of centuries, and the great traditional policies established by the fathers, under the beneficial and successful administration of which our people have been happy and prosperous and our country grown great and powerful. This compelling desire for innovation approaches a great national disease. It has not been confined to the radicals of foreign birth who give utterance to their seditious and treasonable views in public meetings and certain publications of more or less general circulation. It has affected some of our public men and has appeared in legislative proposals and in the coloring and tendency of legislative and judicial pronouncements with greater or less virulence. It has among certain classes assumed the form of proposals for the overthrow of our Government by violence and bloodshed, but its most dangerous form are pacific measures to be written into law which in the end mean peaceful revolution and the destruction of the wisest system and scheme of government ever invented and put into operation in any age. This pestilential malady has recently developed in most unexpected places, and, I regret to say, is now directed against the independence of the judiciary.

The Constitution of our country and the great principles guiding those who framed it are, I am aware, familiar to Senators, and ordinarily it is a useless consumption of time to discuss them; but it has been well said that when contemplating changes in our organic, statutory, or common law it is always useful to refer to elementary principles that we may have them in mind in providing for what are supposed to be defects in the law and proper remedies for those defects.

The great corner stone of our form of government and the keystone of its organic structure is the principle requiring the separation of the powers of Government—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial—into three great coordinate and independent departments to be exercised by the particular department in which the powers are vested, without interference from the other departments and through different persons and officers. This division and separation of powers constitutes the great checks and balances of our system of government, which it is conceded have saved us from executive usurpation and despotism, tyranny of legislative majorities, preserved the independence of the judiciary, and contributed more than any other principle to the stability and permanence of our institutions and the protection of the civil and political rights of the people.

Mr. Justice Miller summed up the merits of the principle of the separation of the powers of government under our system in the case of Kilbourn v. Thompson (103 U. S. 188) as strongly as ever has been done by any jurist. The justice there says:

> It is believed to be one of the chief merits of the American system of written constitutional law that all powers intrusted to the Government, whether State or National, are divided into the three grand departments—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial; that the functions appropriate to each of these branches of Government shall be vested in a separate body of public servants, and that the perfection of the system requires that the lines which separate and divide these departments shall be broadly and clearly defined. It is also essential to the successful working of the system that the persons intrusted with power in any one of these branches shall not be permitted to encroach upon the powers confided to the others, but that each shall by the law of its creation be limited to the exercise of the powers appropriate to its own department and no others.

I will also read the opening paragraph of the chapter upon the separation of powers, found in Willoughby on the Constitution, where the principle, its importance, and the far-reaching consequences of confusing the executive, the judicial, and legislative powers and allowing individuals of one of these departments to exercise the powers of another department, are stated concretely and forcefully:

> A fundamental principle of American constitutional jurisprudence, accepted alike in the public law of the Federal Government and of the States, is that, so far as the requirements of efficient administration will permit, the exercise of the executive, legislative, and judicial powers are to be vested in separate and independent organs of government. The value of this principle or practice in protecting the governed from arbitrary and oppressive acts on the part of those in political authority has never been questioned since the time of autocratic royal rule in England. That the doctrine should govern the new constitutional system established in 1780 was not doubted. Washington, in his farewell address, said: "The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all governments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism."
> Madison, in the Federalist, wrote: "The accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judicial, in the same hands, whether of one, a few, or many; whether hereditary, self-appointed, or elective, may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny." John Adams wrote: "It is by balancing one of these three powers against the other two that the efforts in human nature toward tyranny can alone be checked and restrained and any degree of freedom preserved." And Hamilton asserted: "I agree that there is no liberty if the powers of judging be not separated from the legislative and executive powers." Webster states the same doctrine when he says: "The separation of the departments (of government) so far as practicable and the preservation of clear lines between them is the fundamental idea in the creation of all of our constitutions, and doubtless the continuance of regulated liberty depends on maintaining these boundaries.
> "Under the influence of this doctrine most of the States in their first constitution incorporated what have since been known as 'distributing clauses.' Thus Massachusetts in her constitution, adopted in 1780, provided that 'in the government of this Commonwealth the legislative department shall never exercise the executive and judicial powers, or either of them; the executive shall never exercise legislative and judicial powers, or either of them; the judicial shall never exercise legislative and executive powers, or either of them; to the end that it may be a government of laws and not of men."

Mr. President, the abandonment of this great fundamental principle means either executive supremacy, legislative oligarchy, or a judicial autocracy, any of which would be intolerable.

While it is perhaps too much to assert that one of the three coordinate departments is of greater importance than the others, yet it is generally conceded that the judiciary is the balance wheel of our system and the great bulwark of the liberties of the American people. If our Government is to last and our free institutions be preserved the judiciary must be upheld and kept separate and independent of the executive and legislative departments. It is the citadel and guardian of the Constitution and has in the last analysis the supreme power of interpreting that great charter of our liberties.

The courts come closer to the people than the other departments. They protect and enforce their civil and political rights. They adjust their most intimate domestic relations. They protect the living and settle the estates of the dead.

They decide their contractual controversies and redress trespasses to person and property.

Placed apart and above political intrigue and strife, the blandishments and storms of popular favor and disfavor, and all struggles for partisan advantage and supremacy that beat upon the other departments, they have justly acquired and hold the confidence of the people to a greater extent than those departments.

Daniel Webster, in discussing the judiciary in the House of Representatives, said:

I look upon the judicial department of this Government as its main support. I am persuaded that the Union could not exist without it. I shall oppose whatever I think calculated to disturb the fabric of government, to unsettle what is settled, or to shake the faith of honest men in the stability of the laws, or the purity of their administration.

The distinguished Attorney General, Hon. Harry M. Daugherty, recently said in an able and eloquent public address in this city:

I believe that this Government will stand as indestructible as our mighty hills and majestic mountains, and that there shall continue to flow from it benefits for our people as copious as the waters of our streams and rivers. I do not believe that any branch of our Government shall fail, but to the judiciary, more than to anything else, must we look for the preservation and perpetuation of our Government. A wise and courageous judiciary, resting on the confidence of the people, will save it from disintegration, revolution, and destruction.

The Congress has no higher and more important duty than to guard, protect, and preserve the independence of the courts and the judges, and keep them absolutely free from all political and other hurtful influences.

Chief Justice Marshall, in speaking of the independence of the judiciary in the Virginia Convention in 1829, said:

The judicial department comes home in its effects to every man's fireside; it passes on his property, his reputation, his life, his all. Is it not to the last degree important that judges should be perfectly and completely independent, with nothing to control them but their God and their conscience? I have always thought from my earliest youth till now that the greatest scourge an angry heaven ever inflicted upon an ungrateful and sinning people was an ignorant, a corrupt, or a dependent judiciary.

I will again quote from Daniel Webster. In the Constitutional Convention of Massachusetts, 1820, speaking upon the same subject, he said:

There is nothing, after all, so important to individuals as the upright administration of justice. This comes home to every man; life, liberty, reputation, property, all depend on this. No government does its duty to the people which does not make ample and stable provision for the exercise of this part of its powers. Nor is it enough that there are courts which will deal justly with mere private questions. We look to the judicial tribunal for protection against illegal or unconstitutional acts, from whatever quarter they may proceed. The courts of law, independent judges, and enlightened juries, are citadels of popular liberty, as well as temples of private justice. The most essential rights connected with political liberty are there canvassed, discussed, and maintained; and if it should at any time so happen that these rights should be invaded, there is no remedy but a reliance on the courts to protect and vindicate them.

The Supreme Court of the United States is, of course, the most important and powerful of all our courts. Its jurisdiction and powers and its successful judicature is beyond the comprehension and grasp of the lawyers and statesmen of other nations. They have no court comparable to it. It has power to determine when the executive and legislative departments exceed their constitutional powers and limitations, and to declare their acts void. It has jurisdiction of sovereign States, and to determine when their constitutions and legislative acts violate the Federal Constitution, and to review the judicial decisions of their highest courts when they concern the Federal Constitution and laws. It has jurisdiction of controversies between the sovereign States and between them and foreign Governments. Its jurisdiction also extends to controversies between individuals and corporations in a large number of most important matters.

It has in numerous instances so wisely and justly determined and settled great questions which have shaken our Government to its very foundation and threatened to disrupt and destroy the Republic as to avert such disastrous consequences.

It is the duty of the American people to uphold it in the high position the Constitution has placed it and keep it separate and apart from everything that would detract from its purity and its power and the confidence in which the people hold it. This can only be done by guarding it from all encroachments, however small and however harmless they may seem, by the other departments, and from all the political influences which follow participation in executive, legislative, or political activities. It is equally important that it be kept within its constitutional limitations.

Mr. President, the dignity, the integrity, and the independence of the district courts and the circuit courts of appeals must also be protected and upheld. The district courts come close to the people, and there should not be even the shadow of dependence cast upon the judges presiding in them. Subject to review for errors of law and fact that may be committed, their judges should be as free, untrammeled, and independent in thought and judgment as the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. They must not be made subservient to or dependent upon the favor of the judges of the higher courts. The people's respect for them must not be lowered and their confidence in them must not be lessened if their efficiency in maintaining peace and order and the administration of justice is to be sustained.

I wish here, at the risk of wearying the patience of the Senate and of being subject to servility of quotation, to again read from the great speech of Daniel Webster upon the importance of the judiciary in our governmental system and the great care that should be taken in shielding it from all influences that tend to lower it in the respect and confidence of the people:

But of the judicial branch of the Government and of the institution of the Supreme Court, as the head of that branch, I beg to say that no man can regard it with more respect and attachment than myself. It may have friends more able; it has none more sincere. No conviction is deeper in my mind than that the maintenance of the judicial power is essential and indispensable to the very being of this Government. The Constitution without it would be no constitution; the Government, no government. I am deeply sensible, too, and, as I think, every man must be whose eyes have been open to what has passed around him for the last 20 years, that the judicial power is the protecting power of the whole Government. Its position is upon the outer wall. From the very nature of things and the frame of the Constitution, it forms the point at which our different systems of government meet in collision, when collision unhappily exists. By the absolute necessity of the case the members of the Supreme Court become judges of the extent of constitutional powers. They are, if I may so call them, the great arbitrators between contending sovereignties. Every man is able to see how delicate and how critical must be the exercise of such powers in free and popular governments. Suspicion and jealousy are easily excited, under such circumstances, against a body, necessarily few in number and possessing by the Constitution a permanent tenure of office. While public men in more popular parts of the Government may escape without rebuke, notwithstanding they may sometimes act upon opinions which are not acceptable, that impunity is not to be expected in behalf of judicial tribunals. It can not but have attracted observation that in the history of our Government the courts have not been able to avoid severe and sometimes angry complaint for giving their sanction to those public measures which the representatives of the people had adopted without exciting particular disquietude. Members of this and the other House of Congress, acting voluntarily and in the exercise of their general discretion, have enacted laws without incurring an uncommon degree of dislike or resentment; and yet, when those very laws have been brought before the court and the question of their validity has been distinctly raised, and is necessarily to be determined, the judges affirming the constitutional validity of such acts, although the occasion was forced upon them and they were absolutely bound to express the one opinion or the other, have, nevertheless, not escaped a severity of reproach bordering upon the very verge of denunciation. This experience, while it teaches us the dangers which environ this department, instructs us most persuasively in its importance. For its own security and the security of the other branches of the Government it requires such an extraordinary union of discretion and firmness, of ability and moderation, that nothing in the country is too distinguished for sober sense or too gifted with powerful talent to fill the situations belonging to it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. There are so few Senators present to listen to the argument of the Senator from Tennessee that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Nicholson	Spencer
Borah	Heflin	Norbeck	Sterling
Broussard	Johnson	Norris	Sutherland
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Swanson
Cameron	Keyes	Overman	Townsend
Capper	King	Page	Trammell
Caraway	Ladd	Phipps	Underwood
Colt	Lenroot	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Culberson	Lodge	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	McKinley	Rawson	Warren
Dial	McNary	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	Moses	Shields	Weller
France	Nelson	Shortridge	Williams
Hale	New	Simmons	Willis

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce that the following Senators are detained from the Senate in attendance upon the Committee on Finance:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], and the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, what have these well-established policies, evident truths, and sound principles to do with the bill before the Senate, you may ask of me. I will go directly to that subject.

The first bill introduced in the Senate and the House, in August, 1921, of the series of bills which the Committee on the Judiciary considered before finally reporting the one before the Senate, prepared under the direction of the Attorney General, and which he and the Chief Justice approved and appeared before the Senate and House committees and advocated, in my opinion violated the spirit, if not the letter, of the constitutional separation of the powers of government, and certainly the long-established policy of the Congress in the creation of district judges, and is the most serious assault that has been made upon the purity, integrity, and independence of the judiciary in many years.

While some of the most obnoxious provisions of that bill do not appear in the present bill, I will briefly refer to them as showing the radical changes and innovations which it was proposed to make in our judicial system, which after all in a milder degree are reflected and appear in the provisions of the bill reported, to which I will come later.

That bill, Mr. President, by section 1 provided for the creation of 18 judges, 2 from each of the 9 judicial circuits, to be known, in the language of the bill, as judges of the district court of the United States at large. They were not attached to any court or required to reside in any district in conformity to the present practice and system.

The second section—and this is found in the present bill—provided that the Chief Justice of the United States, or, in case of his disability, one of the other justices of the Supreme Court, as soon as might be after the passage of the bill, and annually thereafter, should summon to a conference on the last Monday of September at Washington, or at such other time and place in the United States as the Chief Justice might designate, the senior judge of each circuit, or, in his absence, some other circuit judge or district judge. It was made the duty of every senior judge or other circuit or district judge to attend this conference, and to remain throughout its sessions, and to advise as to the needs of his circuit and as to any matters in respect of which the administration of justice in the courts of the United States might be improved. In other words, it did not relate alone to the congestion of business and the assignment of judges, but provided for almost unlimited superintendence or oversight of their circuits.

Mr. President, this section and the one similar to it which appears in the bill that was finally reported might be called the social section of the bill. It is a great social function of the judiciary of the United States, presided over by the Chief Justice, here in Washington or at any other place—at times it may be at White Sulphur Springs in Virginia, or at San Francisco, or at Colorado Springs in Colorado, or any other nice place—to meet and talk over the judicial affairs of the United States and such other matters that they may enjoy. All of their expenses are to be paid, or at least $10 a day and traveling expenses are allowed. Let any Senator examine this provision, and if he can really find any merit in it except that of a social function, I shall be astonished.

I think that the judges ought to have seasons of enjoyment and recreation; but they ought to have them at their own expense and in times of vacation, and not at the public expense, as provided in this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? Will the Senator later on recur to this section?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; I will.

Mr. KING. Then I shall not interrupt the Senator now.

Mr. SHIELDS. I shall be glad to have the Senator propound his question at this time, however.

Mr. KING. I had in mind this inquiry: Would this meeting have any power to discipline in any way or to bring any pressure to bear upon any of the district judges? Would it have any power to make it easier or harder for them? Would it have any authority to assign cases to such a judge, or to deprive him of hearing certain cases? In other words, does the Chief Justice or do the circuit judges under this bill have any authority to supervise, to control, or to direct in any manner the activities of the district judges or of any judges?

Mr. SHIELDS. I shall discuss that subject fully at a subsequent part of my remarks. I think unquestionably the bill grants such authority.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARREN in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not replying to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], but rather to the statement of the Senator from Tennessee, who a moment ago declared that the conference provided for in section 2 is a mere social occasion, I think he would be willing to modify that statement if I were to read again in his hearing what the conference is really for:

> Said conference shall make a comprehensive survey of the conditions of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans and schedules for the assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts where the state of the docket or the condition of business indicates the need therefor.

That is the purpose of the conference. The conference itself does not assign any judge to any part of the country. That is left entirely with the senior circuit judges and the Chief Justice.

Mr. SHIELDS. If the Senator had noticed, I read the very same portion of the bill that he reread. While it does provide in a general way for the discussion of these matters, if we take the whole bill together it is merely colorable.

They do nothing at the time, although there is a provision there that can be used greatly to the prejudice of the independence of the district judges. I shall discuss that later.

This same section contained another provision. I am now speaking of the first bill that was prepared and introduced with the approval of the Attorney General and the Chief Justice. I read:

> It shall be the duty of the Attorney General to report to such conferences at the first and at each annual meeting thereafter all matters which he deems meet for its consideration, and to advise it upon the state of business in the United States courts, and to take part therein as a member of the conference.

Mr. President, you will mark that the Attorney General not only reports upon the business of the United States, but he reports upon all the business pending in the Federal courts, and he is to take part in the conference which, it is said, provides for the selection and designation of judges to the various circuits and various districts of the United States. A more monstrous proposition was never written in regard to the judiciary of any country. Here is a provision that a prominent and powerful representative of the executive department, the counsel for the United States, the greatest and most numerous litigant in the Federal courts, shall appear and report to the Chief Justice and the senior judges of the several circuits, to be a member of that conference, to take part in the selection and designation of judges to try the cases of his great client. I wish to say that that proposition was so abhorrent to the committee that it was not considered for a moment, and was stricken out without debate.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? Did the Chief Justice appear before the committee to advocate that provision?

Mr. SHIELDS. The Chief Justice and the Attorney General advocated the passage of the entire bill, including this provision.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Tennessee recall anything that the Chief Justice said with regard to that particular provision of the bill?

Mr. SHIELDS. The Chief Justice, in the hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee and in the hearing before the House Judiciary Committee, appeared and supported this bill. In the hearing before the Senate committee he referred to this particular section of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. In the hearing at which I was present the Chief Justice advocated the addition of 18 judges, two to be appointed from each circuit, and he advocated the conference to be held in Washington. I may not have been present at the time, possibly, but I did not hear any reference made by him to the paragraph designed to make the Attorney General a member of the conference.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator does remember that the Chief Justice approved the bill as a whole, and asked the committee to favorably report it?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I do not remember that he approved it as a whole, but he appeared there when we were considering the bill, and his remarks were mainly directed to the necessity of an additional judicial force and to the propriety and wisdom of a general conference which would enable the designations or assignments to be intelligently made.

Mr. SHIELDS. In the main, his evidence was in regard to the congestion of the dockets.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the Chief Justice come of his own volition, or was he requested to come?

Mr. SHIELDS. I could not answer that question. I did not know of any invitation.

Mr. CARAWAY. This was the only bill before the committee providing for an increased judiciary?

Mr. SHIELDS. As I remember.

Mr. CARAWAY. And he appeared in advocacy of that bill?

Mr. SHIELDS. I may be mistaken. The House passed the bill first, and it came over to the Senate and was referred to the Judiciary Committee. Whether it was before us at the time the Chief Justice appeared or not, I do not remember, but the Chief Justice advocated the passage of this particular bill, providing for 18 judges for the United States at large, and some one—I rather think it was the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]—spoke of them as roving judges. Of course, with great respect I spoke of it as a flying squadron which the Chief Justice wanted to create to send about the United States to try lawsuits. In any event, I speak of it now in that way.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure no one here desires to disparage the Chief Justice.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will disclaim that at any time. It is no personal attack I am making.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator does not desire to disparage the Chief Justice, nor does the Senator from Arkansas, I am sure, but I think we ought to understand just how this bill came into existence.

The Attorney General, knowing the congestion of business in the courts of the country, asked two or three judges—I do not remember whether it was two or three—and two district attorneys to act as a committee to consider the whole matter, and to report to him a bill which would relieve the congestion of business throughout the country. They considered the subject for a long time, and finally did make a report, and they put their report in the form of a bill, which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] introduced, and which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. We appointed a time for a hearing upon that bill, and at the hearing there appeared the members of the committee who had investigated the subject and made the report to the Attorney General; the Attorney General himself, and the Chief Justice. All of them spoke about States and districts. I do not know how all these people happened to be before the Judiciary Committee. The Senator from Minnesota probably knows, because he was instrumental in bringing them before the committee, but it can not be said that the Chief Justice appeared for any other purpose than to give aid to the Judiciary Committee, and to give what information he could with regard to the accumulation of business in the various parts of the country which needed additional judicial force. I do not recall that anything whatever was said to him, or that he said anything to the committee, with regard to making the Attorney General a member of the conference which was proposed to be held annually, but the Senator from Minnesota will remember more distinctly than I.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. It is not necessary to depend on the recollection of Senators. It is printed here in the hearings, and I will read from the printed evidence, which will fully sustain the statement I made to the effect that the Chief Justice came before the committee and approved this whole bill, and spoke of it as a bill which had been prepared by this committee. He also did the same thing before the House Judiciary Committee. I am not criticizing the Chief Justice. Nobody has any more respect for judges than I. Whether or not it was proper for the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States to appear before a committee of the judiciary and advocate a bill to give him very great and unprecedented power over the judiciary of the United States is a question about which each Senator may have his own opinion. I have mine. That the Chief Justice wanted this legislation, that he did go before the committees of both Houses, that he came before the Senate committee twice, and that he did talk to Senators outside of the committee, doubtless to the Senator from Iowa himself, favoring the passage of this bill can not be denied—I do not think will be denied. The propriety of all this is a question for the Chief Justice. I think it was at least rather unprecedented.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him briefly?

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I think the reason Chief Justice Taft appeared before the committee was that before he was appointed Chief Justice he had sat with the committee of judges and attorneys who formulated the bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think the Senator means before he sat on the bench.

Mr. NELSON. No; before he was appointed.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think he was appointed before he made the speech before the American Bar Association at Cincinnati advocating a bill of this kind.

Mr. NELSON. He met with that committee, to my knowledge, long before he was appointed Chief Justice. The committee was composed of three district judges and the United States attorneys from Chicago and New York, and he sat with them and cooperated with them, and I think that is one of the reasons why he appeared before the Judiciary Committee. That is my opinion. I do not want to say that that is the reason he assigned.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the opening sentence of the Chief Justice when he appeared before our committee on October 5 last? The Chief Justice said:

> I do not consider it a kindness, gentlemen; I consider it an opportunity, because I have always been and am now very much interested in rendering the Federal courts more efficient in the dispatch of business.

Then I would beg to invite the Senator's attention to what the Chief Justice said as it apears on page 12 of the proceedings, the last paragraph. I will not take the time to read it, but therein the Chief Justice avows——

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator knows that those hearings sustain my statement that he appeared twice before the committee, once before the whole committee and once before the subcommittee, and advocated the passage of this bill.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Unquestionably.

Mr. SHIELDS. And I think the Attorney General appeared, and not only that, but the Senator from Iowa failed to state that he brought two of his assistants to that hearing on the bill.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Senator will remember that there were many other judges who appeared before us.

Mr. SHIELDS. There were three on this committee.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Federal judges.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have disclaimed any personal reflection or assault upon the Chief Justice again, but as to his interest in it I do not suppose the Senator from California would for a moment controvert anything I have said in that respect.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly not.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will not ask the Senator whether or not the Chief Justice talked to him out of the committee room in favor of this bill. I am not going to put that question to any Senator.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It so happens that he did not, but it would have been very proper for him to have done so.

Mr. SHIELDS. Every man has his own conception of judicial propriety.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Since my learned friend from Tennessee seems to think there was some impropriety in the Chief Justice appearing before the committee, or that there would have been some impropriety in the Chief Justice speaking to the Senator from Tennessee, or a Senator from any State, I am curious to know wherein lies any impropriety, when the Chief Justice is at the head of the judicial department, and is only anxious to see a speedy administration of the law. I can not see any impropriety.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think I will satisfy the Senator from California about that. The Chief Justice has no more to do with the judges of the district courts of the United States, and with the trial of cases, and procedure in those courts, or the congestion of business in them, than does King George. His interference is purely voluntary and officious, and I will undertake to prove it before I get through.

I did not intend to express my views of the activities of Chief Justice Taft, and what has been said was brought out by questions, but I have stated the facts, the most of which appear in the printed hearings. I did not intend to bring them out, but there is no doubt about them.

If I were to go further I would say that since then the Chief Justice has had introduced in both Houses a bill, revolutionary in its character, for the purpose of limiting the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and he appeared before the House Committee on the Judiciary yesterday and advocated the passage of that bill. It is a very elaborate thing. I have read it and found it revolutionary in its character; but I could not take it all in at one reading. It is 17 pages long. There is more in it than in all the legislation we have had heretofore on the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Practically, it emasculates that jurisdiction and makes the circuit courts of appeal courts of final jurisdiction in many cases, only allowing a review in the Supreme Court by certiorari, heard and determined without oral argument.

I will now go back to the provisions of the remarkable bill I was discussing when the personality of the Chief Justice was injected into this debate. The bill, as has been observed from the language of it, proposed to create a flying squadron of 18 judges, to be known as judges "at large," unattached to any court, a proposition startling in its novelty and potentialities.

It is only equaled by the further provision for the mobilization of these judges under the command of the Chief Justice, to be assigned from circuit to circuit and district to district to hold court in his discretion.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I inquired of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] whether he did not think that this had something of the nature of a military organization in it, like the General Staff. Under the General Staff the soldiers are summoned here by the Chief of Staff, and the Chief of Staff assigns them. Is there not some similarity between the two?

Mr. SHIELDS. I think the Senator likens the Chief Justice to the Commander in Chief, and the senior circuit judges to the General Staff, and the district judges to the men in the ranks.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think they have some similar characteristics.

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; there is a very natural similarity in the Senator's characterization of the bill.

The Constitution authorizes the creation of such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish, but there is no provision for the creation of roving judges, unattached to courts.

Courts are organized entities or bodies vested with such judicial powers and jurisdiction as the legislative authority may confer upon them, with fixed places and times for meeting, and provided with judges, clerks, and other officers ordinarily necessary to exercise that jurisdiction. Judges are merely constituent parts of courts.

Mr. Justice Brewer has defined courts and judges very clearly, as follows:

> Now, under the authority of the United States there are but three courts known in law—the district, circuit, and Supreme Court; and as Congress alone can, by the Constitution, ordain and establish courts, none can exist but such as they create and name. * * * A court is not a judge, nor a judge a court. A judge is a public officer who, by virtue of his office, is clothed with judicial authorities. A court is defined to be a place in which justice is judicially administered. It is the exercise of judicial power, by the proper officer or officers, at a time and place appointed by law.

The bill I am now discussing does not make these judges officers of any court, nor does the appointment to be made by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. These powers, although legislative and Executive, were proposed to be vested in the Chief Justice, an officer of the judicial department. I doubt whether such legislation would be constitutional, but I do not care to discuss that proposition; the policy of the scheme is sufficient to condemn it.

I refer to these things as illustrative of the radical innovations that are sought to be made in our judicial system and how the power given the Chief Justice in the bill before the Senate may be construed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very much interested in the argument the Senator is making. I want to ask this question as a matter of information as much as anything else. It seems to me the Senator is making a very unique argument as to why the bill would be unconstitutional as a law, and he does that mainly by drawing a distinction between judges and courts.

First, let me say to the Senator that Congress has from time to time by various acts provided for the doing of certain things by judges as distinguished from courts, such, for instance, as the issuing of a temporary injunction issued by a judge and not a court. Finally, it is true, that matter is passed upon by a court, but the temporary injunction is first issued by a judge, not a court, as I understand it. We have passed laws which give that authority.

Now, if the Senator is correct, and under the Constitution of the United States Congress only has power to create courts, would it not follow that all such acts, even though authorized by an act of Congress, of judges would be unconstitutional? Would it not follow, for instance, that a United States judge could not issue, and that Congress could not give him authority to issue, a temporary injunction?

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator really has not considered this, because he is an able lawyer, and if he had thought of it he would not have asked that question. I am not insisting on the constitutional question, as I have just said. It is not necessary, because the provision for the flying squadron of judges at large is not carried in the present bill, and I was only referring to it to show how the provisions which do appear for the designation of judges may be construed.

Now, the provision of the Constitution for the creation of judges of the Supreme Court and judges of the inferior courts, of course, is in the ordinary constitutional phraseology. It states general principles and general powers. It does not go into detail, and the powers which those judges have must be found in the common law system which was in force in the country at the time the Constitution was adopted, as is the case with a great many other things with which the Senator is familiar.

The granting of an injunction of attachment is a judicial function, and where we create a judge under our Constitution he exercises the same judicial functions that a judge at common law exercises, subject to statutory changes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the courts have held it is inherent.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not disputing that this is inherent in a court, and I am basing my question upon the assumption that the Senator's constitutional argument is correct. I am not disputing that. He may be entirely correct. It looks unique to me at first blush. It never occurred to me before. However, there are certain things that are inherent in courts, but not in judges as distinguished from courts. When I said injunctions I ought to have said temporary restraining orders.

Mr. SHIELDS. Or the Senator might have used the term "extraordinary process." That is the general expression in such cases.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; some such expression as that. We give judges authority to exercise that kind of jurisdiction, but they never act as a court until later, when the matter comes up for determination before the court as to whether it should be made permanent or not.

Mr. SHIELDS. They can exercise those powers in court or at chambers. They are merely interlocutory and preparatory steps in a case. The final judgment must be by the court.

Mr. NORRIS. If we have given it to a judge as distinguished from a court, is not that true?

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COLT. I understand the Senator from Tennessee to criticize the rotation of judges or the assignment of judges from one district to another.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have not reached that part of my argument. I will do that when I consider the provisions of the bill on that subject.

Mr. COLT. I understood that that is the primary feature of the bill, so far as the transfer of judges from one district to another is concerned. Does not the Chief Justice of the United States assign, and has he not since the formation of the Supreme Court assigned, his associates to different circuits?

Mr. SHIELDS. No; that is done by statute.

Mr. COLT. There is a special provision for it?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; and there is an amendment now pending to the bill before us to repeal that law. The Chief Justice thinks the judges of the Supreme Court have too much to do. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] wants to relieve them of their circuit duties, so they can pay more attention to the duties directly incumbent upon them as justices of the Supreme Court in the hearing of cases on the dockets of that court.

Mr. COLT. When I was appointed district judge of Rhode Island in 1881, I was immediately assigned by Judge Lowell to sit in Massachusetts on the circuit court of Massachusetts. Has not the system of the assignment of district judges from one district to another within the same circuit, under the direction of the senior circuit judge, prevailed for a very long period of time?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; that is the law now and it ought not to be repealed. The power to assign them ought to be left with the circuit judge of the circuit, and I will give my reasons for it when I reach that subject.

Mr. COLT. Would the Senator limit the district judge for the district of Rhode Island to holding court within the State of Rhode Island, which is in the district of Rhode Island?

Mr. SHIELDS. I would allow him to be assigned with his consent to any other district in the first circuit composing four of the New England States. That is the present law, and it has worked well, and there is no necessity for any change in it. I am opposed to giving the power of assignment to other circuits to the Chief Justice without the consent of the district judge.

Mr. COLT. It would seem to me, if the Senator will permit a further interruption for a moment, that his main argument loses sight of the fundamental proposition of the jurisdiction of a Federal court. It is national. It is not State. It knows no State lines. It was designed to relieve suitors from any local prejudices. The very purpose of inserting the provision that suits may be brought in the Federal court between citizens of different States was to emphasize the national idea. In the matter of admiralty, does it make any difference in what district or before what judge an admiralty case is heard?

Mr. SHIELDS. Well, Mr. President, I want to finish discussion of this bill this afternoon. I am willing to yield for a brief interruption, but I can not yield for a general discussion.

Mr. COLT. I do not intend to do that, but will the Senator, in the consideration of the question, give some weight to the national jurisdiction of the Federal court, and that it does not make any difference where a judge lives or of what district court he may happen to be judge?

Mr. SHIELDS. I will get to that later.

Mr. COLT. May I ask the Senator what laws he acts under or administers? He does not act under State laws.

Mr. SHIELDS. He acts under the Constitution and acts of Congress.

Mr. COLT. Does he not administer Federal laws?

Mr. SHIELDS. I am talking about the act creating the district and providing that the judge for it shall be appointed from the district and shall live in it. Federal judges are Federal officers. Those of the inferior courts are appointed for certain fixed circuits and districts. They administer, as do all other judges, the laws of the United States and of the States which are applicable to the cases they hear and decide.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that they were just as careful to guard that as they were to guard the jurisdiction of the court with reference to litigants. A man must sue within the district where he lives.

Mr. SHIELDS. The general principle applicable to juries that a man is entitled to trial by a jury from the vicinage ought to be applied to judges as far as possible.

The provision requiring the Attorney General to report to the conference of judges, called by the Chief Justice, of matters which he deems meet for its consideration; to advise it upon the state of business in the United States courts; and to take part therein as a member of the conference can not be properly characterized by anyone who believes in the purity, impartiality, and integrity of the judiciary. It not only authorizes the interference of the executive department in the affairs of the judiciary through one of its chief officers but actually allows the counsel for the United States, the largest litigant in the Federal courts, to take part in arranging the business of the courts and the selection and assignment of judges to try the cases of his great client.

Concerning the provision for the Attorney General to appear and take part in these conferences, Mr. President, I am of the opinion that the Attorney General should not do so. I am speaking now of the officer generally and not of the particular incumbent of the office at this time.

The Attorney General should not assume that the Department of Justice is a part of the judiciary or that his prerogatives concern the establishment of inferior courts and providing judges for them. I have thought that the Department of Justice or, rather, some of the gentlemen who from time to time temporarily discharge its duties have labored under the impression that that department was charged with an oversight of the judiciary. Some years ago when the first employees' liability act was declared unconstitutional by Judge Evans, of the district of Kentucky, and Judge McCall, of the western district of Tennessee, I read with astonishment a statement made by an assistant attorney that the department had long had Judge Evans upon "the unfriendly list," but that it was surprised at the action of Judge McCall, as "he had been appointed by the then President." This was a most outrageous assault upon the Federal judiciary. I do not remember the name of the man who made that statement, and I am really glad I do not. I hope no one does. Such a character ought to go back to the oblivion from which he sprung. The President ought to have removed him on the day he made the statement, and I hope he did. A member of the Attorney General's staff, arguing for the power of sending district judges from circuit to circuit, as an illustration of the advantages of such a course to the Government, said that the district judges in New York in convictions under the Sherman antitrust law had only imposed fines, but that recently a district judge from a distant State, holding court in New York, had imposed jail sentences. The presumption is that the facts were different in the cases and that the judges imposed the sentences called for by the facts of the respective cases, but that is not the criticism I make of his argument. It is the principle involved, that judges should be designated and selected to try particular cases and to pronounce particular sentences, to which I object. If any Senator can defend such a proposition, he will vote for the pending bill.

Now, let us recur to the bill which is before the Senate. The first section provides for the appointment of 19 judges conformably to the past practice of appointing judges from particular districts where they must reside. These judges are to be appointed because of the supposed congestion of business in the districts and the necessity of relieving congestion supposed to exist. I will later undertake to show that there is no such congestion. I will ask that section 1 of the bill as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary may be included in my remarks without reading, as I desire to have it appear where the new judges are to be appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The section referred to is as follows:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the following number of district judges for the United States district courts in the districts specified in addition to those now authorized by law:

For the district of Massachusetts, two; for the eastern district of New York, one; for the southern district of New York, two; for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, one; for the western district of Pennsylvania, one; for the northern district of Texas, one; for the eastern district of Michigan, one; for the northern district of Ohio, one; for the northern district of Illinois, one; for the district of Minnesota, one; for the eastern district of Missouri, one; for the eastern district of Oklahoma, one; for the district of Montana, one; for the northern district of California, one; for the southern district of California, one; for the district of Arizona, one; and for the northern district of Georgia, one.

Whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of any district judge appointed pursuant to this act the same shall not be filled unless the Congress shall so provide.

Mr. SHIELDS. The second section provides for the calling of conferences of the senior circuit judges of the several circuits at such place as the Chief Justice may designate. I have characterized this section as the social section of the bill. It makes it the duty of the circuit judges to attend such conferences and to remain throughout the session. The Attorney General, upon the request of the Chief Justice, shall also report to the conference as to the business of the several courts of the United States—not as to the cases in which the United States is a party, but as to all of their business. The section further provides:

Said conference shall make a comprehensive survey of the conditions of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans and schedules for the assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts where the state of the docket or the condition of business indicates the need therefor, and shall submit such suggestions to the various courts as may seem in the interest of uniformity and expedition of business.

There is provision for traveling expenses of $10 per day and for subsistence for the judges attending such conferences.

Section 3 has been read by the Senator from Iowa. It provides for the assignment of judges within the various circuits by the senior circuit judges. There was also a provision that the Chief Justice make such assignments, but on motion of the Senator from Iowa that provision has been stricken out of the bill. He thought that was too much, and I did also. The circumstances in which a designation may be made by the circuit judges are as follows:

(a) In the place of a district judge who is physically or mentally unable for the time being to perform his duties or who is to be necessarily absent from his district.

(b) In aid of a district judge who, on account of the accumulation and urgency of business, is unable to perform speedily all the work of his district.

It is not provided who is to determine the existence of the facts which authorized a new judge to be sent into a district to displace the resident judge appointed to hold court in that district and usurp his lawful jurisdiction and powers.

The third section or provision is rather startling:

(c) In aid of a district judge when the public interests so require.

Who is to determine what the public interest requires? The senior judge, in his discretion, when he thinks the public business requires it may remove the judge of the district by sending another judge from another district in States in the circuit to hold court and pass upon the liberties and the property rights of the people of that district.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether the resident district judge shall have any voice under the proposed law in determining whether an exigency exists justifying the importation of a judge from some other State?

Mr. SHIELDS. I have read the Senator the entire provision upon the subject. The old law, as I remember, required a certificate from the clerk before another judge could be assigned to a given district; it was necessary under the old law to furnish some evidence of the need; but under this bill unlimited power is given the circuit judge.

Under the provisions of the bill authorizing the Chief Justice to assign judges from circuit to circuit the judge of the circuit where an additional judge is supposed to be needed shall certify that fact and then the judge of the circuit from which the district judge is to be taken shall certify that he can be spared from that circuit, and when those proceedings are had it is provided—

Such designation may be made by the Chief Justice if, in his judgment, the public interests so require.

Thus leaving it entirely to the Chief Justice in the end.

A judge may be assigned from one circuit to another, not on the certificate of the two circuit judges, but if, in the judgment of the Chief Justice, "the public interests so require." That power is repeated in a subsequent provisions of the bill in these words:

SEC. 18. (1) Any power given by section 13, 14, or 15 to the senior circuit judge may be exercised by the Chief Justice or associate justice allotted to that circuit, or by the circuit judge who, on account of the illness or absence from the circuit of the senior, is acting as such.

Thus giving the Chief Justice the absolute power to assign judges within and without circuits when in his judgment the public interests require. That section, Mr. President, was stricken out upon motion of the Senator from Iowa; but the Chief Justice is still left with the absolute power in his hands to determine when a district judge shall be assigned from one circuit to another circuit, what district judge shall be designated, and how long the designation shall continue in force.

Mr. President, this power to assign judges carries with it the power to select a judge with known preconceived opinions to acquit or convict defendants and to decide civil cases in a certain way. The opportunities for abuse and oppression are apparent, broad, and indisputable. The objection is not that this great power will be abused but that it may be abused, and in judicial proceedings justice requires that courts be constituted, so far as possible, absolutely to exclude all opportunity for favoritism and abuse of discretion and power.

Even now, before this bill has become a law, selfish interests are contriving and conspiring to take advantage of it to control the courts and judicial decisions by securing the designation to try their cases of judges who are in sympathy with them or who have fixed convictions upon the law and the facts. I am reliably informed that the Anti-Saloon League, through its paid lobbyists, has attempted to influence Senators to vote for the provisions of this bill giving the Chief Justice the power to assign judges in his discretion to courts, and, of course, to try certain cases pending in those courts. This is certainly not complimentary to the Chief Justice, for it is an assumption that he can be influenced by the agents of the Anti-Saloon League—a false, unjust, and infamous assumption.

Right here I wish to go a little further into the activities of the Anti-Saloon League in interfering with this legislation. A few days ago, when this bill was under discussion, I stated that there was evidence of pernicious activity upon the part of the paid lobbyists of the Anti-Saloon League to control legislation concerning the judiciary, and especially that of my State. I referred to the fact that when this bill passed the House a provision was made for a district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, but that at the last meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, when I was ill and absent, this provision was stricken from the bill. In the same connection I called attention to the fact that it was generally conceded in Tennessee that Mr. John J. Gore, a prominent lawyer of Tennessee and one of the leaders of the Republican Party of that State, would be appointed judge in the event the office was created, and because he had been opposed to the prohibition amendment the Anti-Saloon League was already waging a war upon him and protesting against his appointment. I called attention to the coincidence between the striking out of the middle Tennessee district and the protest against Colonel Gore, and left it to Senators to infer whether there was any connection between them. I then made and now make no charge against anyone.

Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, described, as I shall read later, in a circular issued by the superintendent of Tennessee as one of the greatest American lawyers and diplomats, stationed here in Washington in charge of this matter, and in whose office, it is said, all legislation in regard to prohibition is initiated, gave out an interview to the Tennessee papers concerning my statement, from which I will read:

Wayne B. Wheeler, legislative agent of the Anti-Saloon League, when questioned about the matter admitted that protests against Gore had been sent to the Department of Justice.

"These consisted"—

Continuing the interview—

"of letters from certain people in Tennessee which were forwarded to me by our State superintendent," said Wheeler. "I merely filed them with the Department of Justice. I don't suppose they ever got to the Senate committee."

Wheeler denied that he or his organization had influenced the committee in striking Tennessee from the bill.

"On the contrary, we believe Tennessee needs and should have the additional judgeship," said he. "If Senator SHIELDS will offer an amendment to the bill to take care of the Tennessee situation, we will use our influence to put it through."

Who are the Senators within my hearing that Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler can control to vote for this bill? Who is it that he is going to use his influence with?

Of course, we will not indorse any candidate who is not in sympathy with law enforcement.

It seems that he thinks that "law enforcement" means the enforcement of the prohibition law, that that is the only law upon the statute books, and that if you are not in favor of enforcing that just in accordance with his views and the bills that are prepared for Senators to introduce and vote for, you are against law enforcement. That is the legitimate inference. I supported the prohibition amendment and believe it ought to be efficiently enforced by reasonable and proper laws, but I deny that the amendment is the corner stone of our constitutional system, that it has priority over all other provisions of the Constitution, or that prohibition is now the chief object of our Government.

I received a letter from Mr. Wheeler concerning this Tennessee judgeship, and I will read it and my answer. I know I am giving entirely too much importance to what Mr. Wheeler says and does; but as he seems to be engaged now in initiating legislation, passing laws, and influencing Senators, and is proposing inferentially to influence the President in appointing judges and the Chief Justice in the assignment of judges, I think I may notice him a little.

This letter is dated March 14 and addressed to myself. I read:

DEAR SENATOR SHIELDS: I notice that you have been quoted in the paper as being under the impression that the Anti-Saloon League was opposed to an extra judgeship in Tennessee. Permit me to inform you that we now are and always have been in favor of having an extra judgeship for the State. As I remember it, the Chief Justice went on record in one of the hearings in favor of it. I have a letter from the United States attorney in the middle district of Tennessee in which he says—

It seems he was interfering with the discharge of the duties of the district attorney down there—

"In this district the docket is fearfully congested, so that it is almost impossible for a case to be called for trial until a year and a half old, and, of course, this greatly militates against successful prosecution.

"So far Congress has failed to pass the bill creating an additional judgeship, and until it does no results in the enforcement of law in this district can be very successful."

It is very clear to me that you need an extra judge in that district, and I hope that you will urge the adoption of an amendment to provide for it. I will gladly do anything I can to aid you in securing this amendment. Our only interest in this measure is to secure, if possible, a better enforcement of the law.

This district attorney, instead of answering that letter evidently calling him to task for supposed dereliction in his duties, wrote an apologetic letter. If I were President of the United States and there was a district attorney who would apologize to any interest for the manner in which he discharged his duty and took a reprimand from it, I would remove him as soon as I heard it.

I replied to Mr. Wheeler's letter as follows:

Your letter tendering to me your assistance in providing a United States district judge for the middle district of Tennessee received.

I do not wish or need your assistance in this matter.

The Senators and Representatives from Tennessee are amply able to take care of all legislation concerning their State, and I resent any interference by outsiders and special interests, especially concerning the judiciary.

A friend of mine sent me a circular that had been issued in Tennessee by one of Mr. Wheeler's subordinates, who I understand was recently imported from Indiana, which is germane to this question. It asks for contributions to aid Congressmen who will support all the laws of the Anti-Saloon League, and to maintain the headquarters here in Washington, but I will let the circular speak for itself. I am going to read just part of it.

A number of Congressmen who hold the balance of power and pile up majorities in Congress come from the Southern and Western States, where money for organization and educational purposes is scarce. They have always had to have help from the national league.

I do not know the southern Senators or Representatives to whom he refers, and think the statement is false.

Again:

In addition to the above the amount from Tennessee for the national league helps to provide for the maintenance of the entire national organization. It also helps to provide for the maintenance of our national office at Washington, D. C., under the very successful management of the Hon. Wayne B. Wheeler, one of the greatest diplomats and attorneys in America.

That word "diplomats" I have always heard used in a different sense, and a man who has on his letterhead, as Mr. Wayne Wheeler has, "Legislative superintendent," is generally called a lobbyist; but that is a nice, euphemistic way to put it.

Mr. SIMMONS. A diplomatic way.

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; that is diplomatic in a circular asking for contributions.

From this office needed legislation is initiated, a constant watch is kept—

Now, mark this, Senators, and govern yourselves accordingly:

From this office needed legislation is initiated, a constant watch is kept on the actions of Congress, and when opposition appears danger signals are flashed to every State in the Union.

The success or failure of national enforcement depends upon the power of our national organization and its Washington headquarters, backed by the States, to defeat the nomination and appointment of enforcement officials, such as United States district attorneys, Federal enforcement officers and agents, United States district judges, and many other applicants for office who are out of sympathy with the enforcement of prohibition. Every State logically must carry its proportionate burden of this expense.

As to whether or not Mr. Wheeler is interested in Federal judges and the appointment of them, the circular issued by his subordinate down there answers very fully; but I have given too much attention to that. I presume everybody knew that such things were going on here before I read these letters.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, the Senator knows that a portion of the legislation enacted by Congress results from the persistent efforts of individuals and organizations. There are lobbyists in Washington and they press their demands to secure and to defeat legislation. They are here and often crowd the corridors, and have been particularly active during the past year. They have infested the Finance Committee rooms, and are even now claiming the attention of the Finance Committee and submitting statements in support of their demands, a record of which, as I am advised, is not kept. They are seeking to secure legislation and to obtain embargoes and tariff rates which would give many corporations a practical monopoly.

Mr. SHIELDS. There is no one who condemns that more than the Senator from Utah and myself; and we make no exceptions in regard to the Anti-Saloon League. Put them all in a single bed together where they belong.

Mr. KING. The ranking Democratic member of the Committee on Finance, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], is not even permitted to participate in the hearings which I have just referred to. When we come to discuss the tariff bill it will be apparent that as to some schedules there will have been testimony given which has not been available to the minority or to any Senators except those who constitute the majority of the Committee on Finance in the Senate. In my opinion this is a most remarkable procedure. It has been suggested that Congress is very responsive to the importunities of various interests in the United States, interests which do not always represent the people or their interests.

Mr. SHIELDS. I know the Senator does not approve legislation by special interest, and I am in full accord with him.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. SHIELDS. I will. I hope, however, the Senator will ask me to yield only for a question, because I want to finish my remarks.

Mr. CUMMINS. It has some of the characteristics of a question, but I can not put it in a word or two.

Mr. SHIELDS. I would like to have the Senator let me finish, for I really am not very well this afternoon.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply want to ask a question or two about Mr. Wheeler.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator will have to go to somebody else. I do not know Mr. Wheeler by sight.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has referred to him.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have given all the knowledge I have.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has referred to him and said something about his solicitude for the passage of this bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. Has he spoken to the Senator about it?

Mr. CUMMINS. He has.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not care to go into the Senator's private concerns about this matter, and I can not yield for that purpose.

Mr. CUMMINS. His approach to me was absolutely appropriate, and I for one do not think that a man who has an interest in legislation ought to be denounced as a public enemy. I think the people of this country have as much interest in what we are doing as we ourselves, if not a good deal more.

Mr. SHIELDS. Does the Senator approve of special interests interfering in the courts of the country?

Mr. CUMMINS. I approve the action of any man coming to me and saying that he would like to have the courts of this country so reinforced that cases which come before the courts can be disposed of. I think it is an entirely appropriate suggestion. The Anti-Saloon League want the prohibitory law enforced. No matter whether we are in sympathy with it or not, we must be in sympathy with that suggestion, and when Mr. Wheeler comes to me and says that the prohibitory law is failing of enforcement, and failing because there are not enough judges to dispose of the cases, I think he is doing a thing becoming to every citizen who believes in the enforcement of the law, and I see nothing inappropriate in such a suggestion. When you have accumulated tens of thousands of criminal cases founded upon the prohibition law, which can not be disposed of, you have reached a condition which I think is humiliating to every lover of law and order, and we either ought to repeal the prohibitory law or we ought to furnish judges enough to enforce it.

Mr. SHIELDS. What I had to say about the representative was directed to his efforts to control the appointment of judges to try cases in which he was interested. I will denounce such efforts by any interests.

Mr. President, what right has the Anti-Saloon League to interfere in the appointment of judges and the holding of courts in this country? Would such interference be tolerated upon the part of capital, of railroad companies, of corporations in general, of organized labor, or of any other special interest? Certainly not. This instance should meet with the severest condemnation. It is nothing less than an effort to fix judges for the trial of certain cases. Jury fixing is infamous, but judge fixing is damnable.

The United States district judges are allowed great latitude in influencing the finding of juries upon the facts of the case. They may call the attention of the jury to parts of the evidence that they think important and express their opinion upon the facts or may advise them on the facts without committing error provided the issues of fact are ultimately submitted to the determination of the jury. This every lawyer knows in a majority of cases is controlling with the jury. This is the reason why the Anti-Saloon League desires a law for the assignment of judges from circuit to circuit, and it will be the cause of contentions between other interests concerning judges to dispose of cases where their rights are involved.

This interest has not hesitated to advocate laws which are believed to violate the constitutional guaranties of the security of the home, the rights of personal liberty and private property, and now they propose to invade the sacred precincts of the courts and pollute the administration of justice by placing judges upon the bench who have at least to some extent prejudged the cases they are to try.

This action of the Anti-Saloon League only illustrates the horrible consequences of vesting this new and great power over the trial courts in the hands of one man. Its blighting effects will fall upon both the high office of Chief Justice and the district courts. The action of the antisaloon interest in favoring this bill simply forecasts that its representatives will attempt to influence the Chief Justice to assign judges selected by them solely for the purpose of trying prohibition cases and without regard to the interest of other litigants of greater importance and the great mass of the business pending in the courts. If this bill becomes a law the Chief Justice may be assailed with applications from all sorts of interests and all sorts of influence in the designation of judges. The Anti-Saloon League and the whisky interest may contend before him. The coal operators may ask for judges to try striking miners and the miners will want a judge who will favor them. Capital and corporations may ask for judges favoring their views upon public questions, and various interests—labor, farmers, and others—may also clamor for representation upon the bench.

Mr. President, I do not for one moment believe that the present Chief Justice or any successor in that high office whom the President of the United States might nominate or the Senate confirm would yield to any such influence or be a party to such corruption; but he should not be placed in a position where even the shadow of suspicion could fall upon him.

The imperial executive power proposed to be given over the judges of the inferior courts is too great to be concentrated in the hands of one man. It is a power no good man ought to want and no bad man should have. The abuse of such a power by the King of England in the appointment and removal of judges of the Colonies was one of the chief causes for the Revolution assigned in the Declaration of Independence.

I hope that the Congress will never approve any measure that will in the slightest and the most remote manner shock the confidence of the people in the purity of the highest judicial officer in the world and in the impartiality of their courts.

I appeal to Senators to favor no policy and no law which will tend to lower the dignity and bring dishonor upon that high office honored and adorned by John Marshall and his learned and illustrious successors.

Mr. President, the bill finally proposed providing for a multitude if judges, 19 in number, without regard for the necessities of business in particular districts, certainly not based upon any uniform rule or system, and for conferences of circuit judges, to be called and presided over by the Chief Justice, to make plans for the assignment of district judges to hold courts out of their districts and out of their circuits, as may there be outlined and determined and, in the end, largely left to the will of the Chief Justice, is subject to many serious objections.

Judges should never be authorized to exercise powers not strictly judicial. Their whole time, with proper seasons, of course, for recreation and repose, and their serious thoughts should be devoted to the duties of their high office. They should be wholly judges, always judges, and nothing but judges. The judicial power is incompatible with any other pursuit in life. All the faculties of every man who assumes it ought to be constantly exercised and confined to the serious consideration of his judicial duties. Above all things, judges should not be charged with the exercise of executive or political duties. I believe that it is the opinion of the bar and the people of the United States, and especially as relates to the Federal judiciary where the tenure of office is practically for life, that when a man accepts a judgeship and becomes a high priest of justice, ministering at the altar, he should be separated from all business concerns and forswear political ambition and preferment.

The power given the Chief Justice to call conferences of the circuit judges, adopt plans, and ultimately himself assign judges is a dangerous innovation of doubtful constitutionality. The Chief Justice and the Supreme Court are, by the organic law constituting that court, given no original jurisdiction over the trial of cases in the district courts, and they have no right to interfere in any manner or to control the proceedings of those courts by moral or other influence. There should be no opportunity for such influence and no semblance of its exercise. It is true there is no provision here for direct control of district judges in the trial and decision of cases, but need Senators be told of the questions which can be discussed by the Chief Justice with the circuit judges in the conferences, and how their views and wishes can be passed down to the district judges? Is not this an opportunity for political influence and power over the judiciary of which a designing man could avail himself in times of great political turmoil?

Would any Senator favor giving the chief justice of the highest court in his State the power to summon the judges of the inferior courts before him in conference to make reports of the condition of the dockets and business of their districts and then, in his discretion, divide up this business and assign and send judges out of their jurisdiction as he might think to the public interest? The people of the States would not tolerate such an assault upon the independence and purity of their courts. They would consider such an arrangement, however honest and patriotic those promoting it might be, a potential political machine subject to great abuse and eventually contaminating the judges with partisan spirit and strife which would destroy the integrity of their courts.

A very serious objection is that the bill confers upon the Chief Justice executive power. The Constitution vests the power to appoint judges in the President of the United States. This bill vests it in the Chief Justice for the time being. The commission of the President authorizes and directs a judge to hold court in a certain district, where he is to reside and where he is known to the people. This bill gives the power to the Chief Justice to modify that appointment and send this judge away from his home to preside over the courts and dispose of the business of other people, to whom he may be unacceptable. The assignment may be for any period—for life. When the judge of a particular district is nominated to fill an existing vacancy the people of the district have the right to protest against the appointment for any valid or sufficient reason, and, in that way, they have a certain choice in the selection of their judge.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator if the bill was not reported to the Senate by a bare majority of the Judiciary Committee, and if section 3, which he has been discussing, was not at one time defeated in the committee?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; it was several times defeated, and brought back at the last meeting of the committee, when several district judges were added, and then, I understand, by only one majority.

The appointment can be made under this bill without the knowledge of the people of the district, without their consent, and without an opportunity to protest. It is an encroachment upon the prerogatives of the Executive, and, worst of all, it deprives the people of the very limited right they have in the selection of Federal judges. It is wrong in principle and it is unjust in practice. While the present bill is not so obnoxious as the one which the Chief Justice appeared before the Judiciary Committee to advocate, it is the entering wedge for the recognition of a bad policy and an assault upon the independence of the judiciary, which may grow and grow and sap and undermine that independence. The powers of government are not only separated into three great departments, but it is the policy of the law that the individual holding office in one of those departments shall not also exercise the functions of another department, for without this they can not be separate and independent and must necessarily be contaminated with political influence.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment at that point?

Mr. SHIELDS. For a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. For a question; yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator says he does not object to the authority of a circuit judge to assign district judges within the circuit. Is there any more danger in giving the Chief Justice the authority to assign a district judge of Michigan to hold court in the adjoining State of Illinois than there is in giving the circuit judge the authority to assign the same district judge to hold court in Tennessee?

Mr. SHIELDS. I think so, and I will discuss that in a few minutes.

This policy forbidding the mingling of the separate departments was violated in the early part of our Government in several prominent instances, but they were condemned by the people, and for many years the objectionable practice has been abandoned. I will read from Judge Baldwin's American Judiciary some of the cases referred to and how they were rebuked by the people:

It may well be doubted if the advantages to be gained by their counsel in such a position are not outweighed by the evil of exposing it to criticism as dictated by selfish considerations. A member of the New York convention thus alluded upon the floor to the measures supported by the Chief Justice and chancellor:

"He regretted that such an opinion and plan had been proposed by the Chief Justice. It must have arisen from the politics of the Supreme Court. The judges of that court had been occupied so much in politics that they had been compelled to press upon the public a system that had nothing else to recommend it than such a relief to themselves from the burden of official duties as would leave them to the free exercise of their electioneering qualifications. But for this the Chief Justice might have shown a Holt or a Mansfield. The elevated character of the chancellor had been often asserted and alluded to. He meant no disrespect to that honorable gentleman. He respected him as highly as any man when he confined himself to the discharge of the official duties of his office; but when he stepped beyond that line, when he became a politician instead of being his fancied oak, which, planted deeply in our soil, extended its branches from Maine to Mexico, he rather resembled the Bohon Upas of Java, that destroyed whatever sought for shelter or protection in its shade."

In the New York constitutional convention of 1821, Peter R. Livingston appealed to the lawyers present to say "whether it has not been the case that when a man in the country of any political standing has had a suit depending at a circuit court, he has not consulted with his counsel to know what judge was to preside at the circuit, and whether he has not been frequently told that a political judge was to preside, and it would not do to let the cause come on." Who, he asked, were the present judges of their supreme court? "Judge Spencer came into office under a Republican administration, Judge Van Ness was appointed by a mongrel council, and the elevation to the bench of Judge Platt was occasioned by the defection from the Republican ranks of a man elected to the senate from the county of Dutchess, who acted the part of a political Judas and sold his party. We have been bought and sold—there is not one of these men who would have been on the bench if our administration had been truly Republican. * * * There is not a man in this convention who is a Republican of any standing or character who would like to have his liberty or property placed in the hands of a political judge of a different party."

The Chief Justice, as the presiding officer of the Supreme Court, is vested with as much power as any officer in our Government, and there should be no extension of it. The consumption of his time in investigating the condition of the dockets of the 86 districts in the United States, and marshaling and assigning 150 judges to various parts of the country to relieve such congestion, if done efficiently, will require much time and deliberation. If not done well, it should not be done at all. To place this burden upon the Chief Justice will require him to neglect the duties of his office and retard the business of the Supreme Court. That court is now, I understand, 18 months behind with its work, and at the adjournment of each year leaves a very large number of importanat cases unheard and undetermined, notwithstanding many of them involve questions which the business of the country—immense interests—and that of the Government concerning its revenues and other activities have been compelled to halt and await determination. The Chief Justice and one of the associate justices have recently in public addresses called attention to the congestion of the docket of that court and advocated measures for the restriction of its jurisdiction, and at their instance bills of a most drastic character have been introduced for that purpose.

The power of assigning judges is not a judicial power and does not in the remotest manner concern the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. It concerns other courts and the rights and duties, personal and official, of other judges. The judicial power is the power to try and determine controversies—lawsuits brought and presented to the court according to established practice and procedure. The power to establish courts and provide them with judges and other officers is a legislative power. Congress alone has this power concerning the Federal courts.

It has long been settled in this country that administrative or other powers nonjudicial in their character can not be conferred upon the judges of courts.

Mr. Justice Harlan, in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson (154 U. S. 484, 485), speaks of the rule that Congress may not impose upon the courts of the United States any duties not strictly judicial as a salutary doctrine, and there are other cases recognizing the existence of the rule. Chief Justice Jay and his associates when the Supreme Court was first organized challenged the constitutionality of the provision requiring them to go out upon the circuit and hold the circuit courts, and when Chief Justice Marshall came into office he concurred with them in the soundness of their contention, but said that as the law had been in force for some 13 years and there was very little business in the Supreme Court at that time they would follow the statute.

If it could be done, the legislatures could so consume the time of the judges as to embarrass them and make it impossible for them to discharge their judicial duties and powers. It is like the taxing power—it is the power to destroy. It would allow political powers to be conferred on judges, which would absolutely destroy their usefulness and the confidence of the people in the courts so necessary to peace, law, and order.

The Chief Justice or the associate justices could as well be authorized to exercise the legislative power of arranging and laying off Federal districts and circuits and fixing the places and times for holding courts as the executive power of providing and appointing judges for those courts. These things are all foreign to their jurisdiction and powers, nonjudicial in their character, and within the constitutional powers and duties of other departments of the Government, but not more so than that of designating judges to hold courts in other circuits, which is practically, as I have undertaken to show, the executive power of appointment.

The assignment of district judges to hold district courts in other circuits, from one extreme part of the United States to another—from the Atlantic States to the Pacific States, from the Lake States to the Gulf States, and from the commercial and manufacturing States to the mining and agricultural States—will result in great confusion and a practical denial of justice in many cases.

There is a radical difference in the constitutions, statutory laws of these States, and the judicial opinions of their courts construing them, and in the laws of contracts, wrongs committed with force, and the vast domain of general jurisprudence. The common law is the basis of the jurisprudence of some States and the civil law in others, and in all of them these systems have been more or less modified by statutory enactments, without uniformity and with innumerable distinctions and exceptions. From an investigation made in the Library of Congress, it appeared that in the five years from 1909 to 1913, inclusive, there was enacted by the national and the several State legislatures 62,014 statutes, and that during the same period 65,379 judicial decisions for publication were delivered by the national and State courts of last resort, included in 630 volumes. This does not include the thousands of opinions delivered and filed for publication by judges of the district courts and the circuit courts of appeals of the United States and by numerous intermediate appellate courts of the States. There are, therefore, on an average, more than 12,000 statutes and an equal number of judicial opinions enacted, delivered, and published in the United States each year. There is no good lawyer in full practice who does not know that it requires great diligence to keep up with the statutes and reported cases of authority of his own State. There is no truthful lawyer who will claim that he can keep up with the legislative and judicial modifications of the law in all the States of the Union. Judges who have fixed salaries have little disposition or time to keep informed of such matters, and they can not and do not do so sufficiently to enable them to go into strange jurisdictions every six months or each year and try and decide lawsuits with intelligence and that certainty of determination which should be present in every judicial decision. A system of visiting or alternating judges would be most objectionable in equity cases, where it is necessary to make successive orders and decrees, often with months of intervals, in the progress of the cause. The judge who heard the argument and made the first decree would probably not be present to follow it up in the subsequent stages of the cause and the new judge could not do so with the clearness necessary to the proper administration of justice. These visiting judges would come with the occasion and depart with the occasion. They would not understand the customs and character of the people whose lawsuits they were called to hear and determine and they would not feel that responsibility that the local judge feels to the people among whom he resides, and, being a mere temporary judge unknown to the people of the district, he would not have and command that cooperation and confidence necessary for the satisfactory and efficient discharge of judicial duties. Permanent judges, under our present system, reside in their districts, are of the people, and their character, probity, and ability are known to the people whose rights they determine and have their respect and confidence.

The policy of providing for permanent judges in each Federal district, followed since the beginning of our Government, is sound and practical and should not be departed from. In temporary emergencies judges from districts near by or in the same circuit may be called on for relief, but they should always come from the same State or the same circuit, so as to obviate the objections I have stated as much as possible. The senior circuit judge should make the assignment required. There can be no controversy but that he is better qualified to do so by his superior and more accurate information of the character and ability of the district judges of his circuit and the conditions of the litigation pending in the several district courts. This is the present law. It has worked well in practice and there is no emergency which requires that it be changed so as to vest this dangerous power in the Chief Justice.

The provisions of this bill, authorizing the Chief Justice to make assignments—substantially appointments—of judges will not meet with the approval of the litigants and the people of the country. They want no centralized control of their courts.

The assignment of judges from district to district and from circuit to circuit without their consent is also unjust and a substantial interference with their tenure of office under their commissions as judges of a particular district. Well might a district judge be willing to exercise the duties of his office in one district but not in another district.

Why should the practice that has prevailed for 100 years of providing additional judges for districts where the business is increased and the dockets are congested so as to require such action be abandoned? It is the only sound, just, and economical way of providing new judges. The Members of Congress, Senators and Representatives, residing in their States and districts, are in close touch with the people, the bar, and the courts, and they know when such congestion and the necessity for additional judges exist, and it is their duty to introduce bills and relieve the situation. The Chief Justice has no such information of conditions in all of the 86 Federal districts of the United States, and it is not his duty or within his prerogatives or power to look after and legislate for such conditions. The duty and the power should be left in the legislative department to provide for the new judges by proper and intelligent legislation, and to the Executive to select and appoint the judges, with due consideration for the opinions and the choice of the people over whom they are to preside, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

This bill provides for more judges than the evidence before the Judiciary Committee shows are necessary to be created, and can not but impress the public that it is the result of logrolling and reciprocal courtesy, which will be hurtful both to the judiciary and the Congress. This is an infirmity that has always found its way into omnibus bills for any purpose when a number or all the States have similar interests, real or fancied.

The subcommittee was of the opinion that conditions causing the existing congestion in some of the courts would soon pass away, and that 12 judges were ample to meet the present emergency, but the whole committee increased the number to 17, for what reason I shall not now undertake to express an opinion.

In that I agree with the Senator in charge of the bill, who has so expressed that opinion in presenting this bill.

The present conditions grow largely out of the increase of jurisdiction of the district courts by various acts of Congress, many of them of questionable constitutionality, creating new criminal offenses against the Federal Government, which have heretofore been speedily and effectually punished by the proper local authorities in the several States. General Crim, Assistant Attorney General, a very able and learned lawyer, in an address recently delivered to the General Assembly of New York, said:

> An enormous percentage of the work being done by the Department of Justice is work that could be done more efficiently and at much less cost by the local government. The burden of this character of work is so great on that department that it is fairly staggering under its load. Unless relieved, bureaucracy is inevitable, with its attendant evils. The percentage of the work which it is doing that could be better done by responsible local self-government is so great that it impairs the efficiency of the administration of those laws which deal with things essentially national in their scope.

Why should it be necessary for a citizen to appeal to the President of the United States to prevent a small still from being operated in New Jersey?

Why should it be necessary for a citizen to appeal to the President of the United States to prevent a man with a jug of alcoholic liquor from selling it at a Sunday school picnic in Virginia?

Why should it be necessary for a citizen to appeal to the President of the United States to punish the larceny from a freight car in the yards of this city of a package consigned to Omaha, Nebr.?

Why should it be necessary for a citizen to appeal to the President of the United States to prevent a printer in a small town in Kansas from printing tons of obscene matter and disseminating but a fraction of it through the mails?

Why should it be necessary for the credulous widow to appeal to the President of the United States to bring to the bar of justice the rascal who has defrauded her out of her money by a stock-selling scheme at New York City?

Why should it be necessary for a citizen to appeal to the President of the United States to prevent an unscrupulous scoundrel in Kansas from selling opium to school children?

Why should it be necessary for a citizen traveling in an automobile from New York to Chicago, who has had his machine stolen at Philadelphia, Pa., to appeal to the President of the United States to have that man punished, when it was taken under the very eyes of a local policeman?

Why is it necessary for a citizen to appeal to the President of the United States for relief where a rascally cashier of a State bank has betrayed his trust and stolen its funds, simply because that bank, a creation of the State, is a member of the Federal reserve system?

Mr. President, if some of the jurisdiction were restored to the State courts there would be no lack of enforcement of law and no congestion in the Federal courts. Take, for instance, the statute making the carrying of a stolen automobile from one State to another a Federal offense. That is a larceny that could be punished in either State. There are more than a thousand cases of that kind pending in the Federal courts now, and this statute should be repealed. There are several other statutes of a similar character. If the Congress will repeal these statutes and restore to the State courts their jurisdiction the Federal courts would have great relief and the expense of additional judges would be unnecessary.

Now, Mr. President, I come directly to the alleged congestion. The Senator in charge of the bill, the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], was shocked, he said, by the delays of justice in the courts growing out of the fact that there was pending in the district courts 142,000 cases on the 30th day of June, 1921. In stating that there were then 142,000 case he was justified from a reading of the evidence introduced before the Committee on the Judiciary when the committee was considering the pending bill. But the facts utterly fail to sustain any such condition of the dockets of the Federal courts.

The statistics show that a very large number of cases reported as pending in the several district courts are cases in bankruptcy, which are really nominal and do not occupy the time of the judge, and a large number of draft cases which can not and will not be tried and ought to be dismissed because the parties are dead or the witnesses are scattered and can not be found and the chief cause for prosecuting them has ceased to exist.

In support of that statement I have the report of the Attorney General made to Congress in December, 1921, and the testimony of Mr. Hayward, the district attorney in New York City, where the largest number of the draft cases are pending. The fact is that by far the greater number of draft cases in the Federal courts are in the States of New York, Massachusetts, and New Jersey. There are very few in the courts of other States. Mr. Hayward admitted that he would never be able to secure many convictions; in fact, I believe he said that he would, perhaps, never secure a dozen convictions in New York.

It is conceded by the judges who investigated this matter, Judge Sater, of Cincinnati, Judge Pollock, of Kansas, and Judge Grubb, of Alabama, that even this apparent congestion is temporary. After those judges had examined the whole situation they made a report at the request of the Attorney General. I was very much impressed with the intelligence and ability of all three of those judges; and, as evidence that they were industrious, energetic, and great judges, no congestion exists in their courts. They have the executive ability to clean up their dockets and they do not want any relief. Their dockets are about as large as those of any of the other judges except those where draft cases appear. Judge Grubb, in speaking of the character of this alleged congestion, said it was largely confined to several cities, and then said:

> I can give the cities. There are Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago, St. Louis, Atlanta—the Atlanta district—California, the San Francisco district, and Detroit. I think those are the principal points of congestion, but there are some others.

The facts are that the temporary congestion can be relieved by the present judges in a few months, and in less than a year these additional judges will have nothing to do but draw their salaries for life.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to suggest at that point, if the Senator will permit me, that the same judges recommended the appointment of 18 additional judges in order to meet this very condition.

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; and I know that the judges were not very proud of their recommendation.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know as to that.

Mr. SHIELDS. I invite the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the statement that the testimony of those who appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary in the hearing had by the committee when considering this bill was not full and was misleading. The witnesses utterly failed to show the real condition of the dockets of the district courts concerning the number of cases there pending for trial and which consume a substantial time of the court.

The statement made that there are pending in the district courts 142,402 cases nominally is true, but the witnesses failed to state that more than half of these cases, judging by the record of previous years, go off without trial; in fact, the figures which I shall present show that thousands of them go off without trial—that is, they are dismissed, discontinued, compromised, nolle prossed, dismissed on motion or demurrer, or judgments are entered upon pleas of guilty, and dead civil cases are retained on the docket. These facts all appear in the report made by the Attorney General upon his official oath for 1921, in which the statement is made that the statistics are carefully revised. This report to Congress was made for the purpose of showing the business of these courts without special reference to this legislation and, I think, is absolutely reliable. I will read from it the pending business in the Supreme Court, the circuit courts of appeals, and the district courts for the fiscal year of 1921.

The number of cases and other proceedings docketed in the Supreme Court for the last fiscal year was 565. The number of cases and other proceedings pending at the close of the year was 367.

The cases and the proceedings disposed of during the year was 608.

It has been a long time since I appeared in the Supreme Court of the United States, and I do not understand what is included in the term "other proceedings." I do not understand the distinction between cases and "other proceedings" in a court that has only jurisdiction to try and determine lawsuits.

The report shows that about one-half of the 608 cases were disposed of without argument, being applications for writs of certiorari dismissed, cases dismissed on motion, and compromised.

The number of cases actually considered by the court was 574, of which 227 were argued orally and 347 submitted on printed briefs; 47 cases were settled by the parties and dismissed without a hearing, and 230 cases were denials of petitions for writs of certiorari. There were, then, less than 300 cases argued and in which opinions were filed, or about 33 cases to each of the nine judges of the court.

This is approximately a correct statement of the work of the Supreme Court for one year, as I get it from a statement furnished the chairman of the Judiciary Committee by the clerk of the court and from the report of the Attorney General.

Mr. President, I may have something more to say on the pending measure. I do not suppose anyone else desires to speak on the bill this evening, and I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that we adjourn or take a recess.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am advised that others who are interested in the bill are not prepared to go on at this time, and I intend to make a motion for an executive session.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin before I make the motion.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator understands that I am not through, but I am yielding that he may make whatever motion he desires to submit. I am not through with my argument and I shall be entitled to the floor when the consideration of the bill is resumed.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT MADISON, WIS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9604) for the acquisition of a post-office site at Madison, Wis., which I send to the desk, together with the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of the act of Congress approved September 7, 1916 (39 Stat., p. 742), which authorizes the acquisition of a site and the erection and completion thereon of a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the post office, United States courts, and other governmental offices in the city of Madison, Wis., at a limit of cost of $550,000, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable site in said city at a cost of not exceeding $350,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The report is very short, but I shall not ask to have it read, unless the reading is called for. I will just state that the bill does not make any appropriation, but simply provides for the purchase of a site out of an appropriation already made.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask my colleague if this is the bill which passed the House?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is the bill which passed the House, and it was reported from the committee to the Senate by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD].

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUANCE OF MEDALS, ETC.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10297) to extend the limitations of time upon the issuance of medals of honor, distinguished service crosses, and distinguished service medals to persons who served in the Army of the United States during the World War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the eighth paragraph under the caption "Medals of honor, distinguished service crosses, and distinguished service medals," Army appropriation act approved July 9, 1918, to the extent that it establishes limitations of time as a condition of issuance or a condition precedent to issuance of such medals and crosses to persons, or the representatives of deceased persons who served in the Army of the United States from April 7, 1917, to November 11, 1918, inclusive, is amended so as to extend such respective limitations for a period of one year from and after the approval of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECOGNITION OF INDEPENDENCE OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Yesterday I offered a resolution the purport of which is that the Senate express a desire that the President shall negotiate treaties with the nations which are interested in the Pacific for the protection of the Philippine Islands as an independent State, and that upon such treaties being negotiated the United States shall relinquish control. I had the resolution lie upon the table, because I was not sure whether it should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations or the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions. The chairmen of both those committees are in the Senate Chamber at this time, and it is immaterial to me to which committee the resolution shall be referred.

Mr. LODGE. If it involves treaties it necessarily goes to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is not that I am looking for additional burdens that the suggestion is made.

Mr. KING. It is my impression that it should go to that committee. I did not want it sent there until I conferred with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], as I wish to respect the dignity of each committee. I ask, Mr. President, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so referred.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock on Monday.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 3, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 31, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, with a knowledge of sin and with a sense of weakness we continue to approach Thee. Vouchsafe to hear our prayer and let Thy blessing rest upon us and our country. Hearken unto the voices that go up silently before Thee that peace may come out of discord, confidence out of suspicion, and bring forth all citizens zealous of good works. Grant, Heavenly Father, that all struggle and strife for better things may be restrained and governed that they shall work out the greatest good and the least harm. May all evil by which man hurts his fellow man come to an end. O let the bright and blessed day come soon, when friendship, fraternity, and fidelity shall abound among all citizens and every fireside shall glow with happiness and contentment. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 282. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to incur obligations for construction and maintenance of roads, bridges, and trails in Alaska, said obligations to be paid from the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

ADDITIONAL HOSPITAL FACILITIES FOR EX-SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10864, the hospital bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10864, the hospital bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 3.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10864.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 317, nays 0, answered "present" 1, not voting 112, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The yeas have it, and the House accordingly resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] will please resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10864) to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau, with Mr. GREEN of Iowa in the chair.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANGLEY: Page 1, line 7, after the word "bureau," insert "by purchase and remodeling or extension of existing plants."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the section.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the substitute is in order until the perfecting amendment has been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois may offer his substitute.

Mr. LANGLEY. He may offer it and have it pending, but we must perfect the paragraph first.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. This is a perfecting amendment. Does it not take precedence of the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the question before the Chair. The question before the Chair is whether the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] is entitled to his five minutes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understood the Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. If a perfecting amendment is offered the question is first on the perfecting amendment. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to recognition for five minutes, unless he desires to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no pride of opinion about the exact phraseology of this bill. I have a considerable feeling of pride that there shall be expedition in the passage of the hospital bill. It was the purpose of the committee to include in the phraseology in which the bill is now drawn the purchase and remodeling or extension of existing plants. Some question has been raised as to whether the language of the bill as printed is broad enough to include that. I offer this amendment in order to make that point perfectly clear, because we want to give to the executive authorities the widest discretion in the hospitalization of our disabled ex-service men.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Did the gentleman's committee have hearings on this measure?

Mr. LANGLEY. We have had so many hearings in the past year and a half that I may say that I dream of them every night. We have heard almost everybody.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS] yesterday pointed out that there were a lot of blue prints and plans existing, and that actual construction work had never been begun upon projects heretofore authorized. Did the gentleman or his committee find out why these hospitals that have been authorized heretofore have not been constructed?

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman's question raises a point that I feel some hesitancy about discussing, but his direct question compels me to say that I do not think there has been as much expedition under the bill which we passed in the last Congress, appropriating $18,600,000, as there should have been. Explanations were made why the completion of the repairs or extension of certain institutions had been postponed beyond the dates originally fixed. The hearings show very clearly that there have been delays. I do not think—if you compel me to say it—that the work done under the bill of the last Congress has been as expeditious and as satisfactory to the country as it ought to have been, and I want to say I do not believe it is the fault of my beloved friend, Col. Edward Clifford, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who has done everything he could to expedite this work. I think it has been due primarily to the division of responsibility for the hospitalization of our sick soldiers. It should all be under one authority. It should be under the man directly responsible to the President, and all be done under the President's supervision, so that we can fix the responsibility on one man instead of on two or three men.

Mr. WALSH. Does this bill do that?

Mr. LANGLEY. This bill does that, and that is exactly what the committee is seeking to do.

Mr. WALSH. I hope it will not be found two months from now that it does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield to my colleague from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the gentleman advise the House whether the Supervising Architect's Office has had anything to do with the delay which has occurred in carrying out the previous appropriations?

Mr. LANGLEY. I would not like to say that. I know delay has occurred, and I think delay which could have been avoided has occurred.

Mr. ASWELL. Why?

Mr. BARKLEY. Where does that responsibility lie? The gentleman says it does not lie with Colonel Clifford.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not think it does.

Mr. BARKLEY. But somewhere in the Treasury Department it does lie.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will say frankly to the gentleman that one man says it lies one place and another man says it lies another place, and I do not know which one is lying. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Is it not a fact that two years ago it was reported to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that the Supervising Architect was from five to seven years behind in the perfection of plans for construction already authorized?

Mr. LANGLEY. I think that is the common knowledge of all the Members of the House.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman and I concur in the belief that divided authority has necessarily delayed the construction of the hospitals authorized under the $18,600,000 appropriation by the Sixty-sixth Congress; but does that divided authority, in the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky, chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, explain in any degree the facts set forth in the report on the progress of the work, by the consultants on hospitalization in the Treasury Department, where it is stated, in regard to the $1,000,000 appropriation for western Pennsylvania, that "preliminary studies are still under way"; and in regard to the appropriation of $1,000,000 for St. Louis, "preliminary studies are still under way"; and in regard to the metropolitan appropriation in New York, "preliminary studies are still under way"?

Mr. LANGLEY. Let me say to my friend from New York that I like all of these gentlemen, and do not like to take a position that this man or that man has neglected his duty—public officials, whether Democrats or Republicans—and especially Republicans.

Mr. KINDRED. This is in no sense a party matter.

Mr. LANGLEY. I know it is not; but the gentleman understands the embarrassment that I am laboring under in going into a matter of detail; but I may say broadly that the present organization, as carried out under our bill of the last Congress, has not functioned up to date—has not accomplished what it should have accomplished.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman know whether the Treasury Department took into consideration the need of getting action in building hospitals immediately as compared with other public buildings?

Mr. LANGLEY. I have been somewhat fearful that under the stress of other business they have not realized the vital necessity of immediate action on hospitalization.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the gentleman's fears are well grounded.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Has the gentleman anything in the conduct of the Veterans' Bureau by the director to warrant him in thinking that if this appropriation is put under him it will be carried out any more promptly?

Mr. LANGLEY. With the approval of the President and the direct supervision which is given him under this bill over the whole matter—yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The President can not build hospitals.

Mr. LANGLEY. The President can direct. He has shown the utmost sympathy with the ex-service men; he has appointed three different commissions trying to solve this problem, and this is the third. He has approved the action of the third commission.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Can the gentleman inform the House what the President has in mind if the matter is turned over to him?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Kentucky have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under section 2 of the bill you are turning over to the President authority to handle this matter in such a manner as he may determine. I imagine that that is the remedy you have in mind to correct this delay. The President will take charge of the situation at once and give such orders and directions as will remedy the situation. Can the gentleman tell us what the President has in mind, the ways and means that he will adopt to get expedition?

Mr. LANGLEY. I know from various talks with the President on this subject and from what I know of his activity and deep personal interest in the matter that he will take every step possible to expedite the situation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What steps? That is what I want to find out.

Mr. LANGLEY. I can not predict, of course, in what manner the Executive discretion will be exercised in advance of the enactment of the law conferring that discretion.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Has the gentleman heard whom the President is going to assign to that duty or whom Colonel Forbes, under the direction of the President, is going to assign the duty?

Mr. LANGLEY. I have not.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. It has not come to the gentleman who is the particular person in the medical department who is going to have charge?

Mr. LANGLEY. I know several gentlemen, faithful public officials, who are going to do their very best to perform their share of the work.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Has it not come to the gentleman to whom a party must go in order to get a contract to build a hospital?

Mr. LANGLEY. It has not.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will.

Mr. MANN. If it would not be improper, I would like to ask a question about the amendment. [Laughter.] Is it the purpose of the amendment to authorize the purchase of private hospitals?

Mr. LANGLEY. The amendment paraphrases the language of the last act. Some gentlemen of the House called my attention to the fact that there was some doubt under the language of the bill as drawn of authority to take advantage of an opportunity to get an existing structure that would be suitable for hospital purposes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means private hospitals.

Mr. LANGLEY. I suppose so—yes; of course, private hospitals.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. In view of the negligence on the part of some one, under the act approved March 4, 1921, giving the Secretary of the Treasury jurisdiction over this matter; in view of the fact that the hospitals have not been even started and therefore many veterans are walking the streets of this country or have gone to an untimely grave on account of this delay, I think the inaction of the Secretary of the Treasury constitutes criminal negligence. Does the gentleman agree with me?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is a mere matter of opinion. The gentleman is entitled to his opinion.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment already pending, is there not?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending, but the Chair can not tell what the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota is until he sees it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I send the amendment to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined the gentleman's amendment, and does not think it is in order at this time, as it is an amendment to be offered at the end of section 1.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on my amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the section, which I desire to have reported.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a few minutes on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Illinois, may we not have the original amendment read before we have the substitute read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say that the gentleman from Illinois offers a substitute for the entire section.

Mr. LANGLEY. Of course, the preferential vote is on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANGLEY: Page 1, line 7, after the word "bureau," insert "by purchase and remodeling or extension of existing plants and."

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN as a substitute for the section: On page 1, after the enacting clause, strike out all of section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the President is hereby authorized to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise, or by the alteration and extension of existing Government hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities and equipment. Such hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities shall include the necessary buildings and auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, approach work, roads and trackage facilities leading thereto, vehicles, live stock, furniture, equipment and accessories, and shall also provide accommodations for officers, nurses, and attending personnel. The acceptance of gifts or donations for any of the purposes named herein is hereby authorized. Such hospital plants shall be of fireproof construction, and the location, cost, and nature thereof, whether for the treatment of tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric or general medical and surgical cases, shall be as the President shall direct."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a good deal of doubt as to where responsibility lies for any delay that may have occurred in the past. I do not think you can solve the difficulty at issue more clearly than by placing the responsibility upon the President of the United States direct. It seems to me that if there is anybody who should be responsible, it is the President. He represents the people of the Nation, and he is as much interested in the proper care of the wounded and sick soldiers as anybody can be. The responsibility should not be any longer in doubt. This bill as reported by the committee, in the first instance, provides that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President, is authorized to do certain things, and then on the next page of the bill they take the authority granted to the President on the first page away from him and vest it directly in the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. My purpose is to see to it that somebody, somewhere, who is responsible to the American people shall be held responsible for the proper care of these men. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman will observe that the language on page 2, to which he refers, merely provides that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau is authorized to accept gifts or donations.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. I know he is authorized to do certain things without any authority from the President. What I am trying to do is this: I am trying to see to it that whoever the President may place in charge, he will be subject to the orders of the President, and not be in a position to give orders to the President. I can tell some of the reasons why the delay occurred in supplying facilities under the $18,600,000 appropriation. That bill authorized the appointment of a board. The board was appointed and that board arrogated to itself supreme power as to location and character of equipment for the care of the men, and they have listened to nobody, not even the President.

I do not want that to occur again. I want the President to be supreme, because I know the President is anxious to care for these men, and I know that he has been embarrassed by the attitude of the board which exists to-day under the former appropriation.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman tell us what happens to the law now in existence? Does this board continue to operate under that?

Mr. MADDEN. It will not continue under this.

Mr. SNYDER. No; but in addition to this, will the board appointed under the previous law continue to operate?

Mr. MADDEN. It will not, except as to what they are already authorized to do, but this will take away from the board all power.

Mr. SNYDER. Does it give the President the power?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Not only over what we are legislating for now but what has already been done?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. My amendment gives power to the President to name any agency of the Government, or another amendment will, that he may see fit to name.

Mr. SNYDER. Does this law supersede the one that is now in existence and take the power from the board that is now in existence?

Mr. MADDEN. It will if another amendment that I propose to offer is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for one minute.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask that it be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWING. Under the gentleman's amendment as I heard it read, it omits the power to purchase an existing plant.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not indicate whether he should have the power to purchase or not, but it does provide this in addition to what the section as reported by the committee provides. The section reported by the committee provides that, with the approval of the President, the Director of the Veterans' Bureau is authorized to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities, either by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise, and I add to that the words "or by the alteration and the extension of existing Government hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities and equipment."

Mr. SWING. Is that language broad enough to cover——

Mr. MANN. The substitute offered by my colleague, as I understand, does not carry in it the amendment just offered by the chairman of the committee, but it will be easy to insert it.

Mr. SWING. That is the point that I desire to know about.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not carry that amendment.

Mr. SWING. Does the gentleman think that this is broad enough to cover a situation which I know exists, where the Veterans' Bureau, in order to get available beds, took a lease on an existing plant with the permission to purchase and expended more than $100,000 in improvements on the property, intending to buy it?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think it would.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Personally I have no objection to the gentleman's substitute, but would the gentleman object, if the substitute were adopted, to adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MADDEN. I will not object.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is all right.

Mr. KINDRED. Is it not a wise proposal of the gentleman to bring about undivided authority and a full and centralized authority in the hands of the President particularly, because it will bring a power fundamentally important to select men who may not only mean well but know their business with respect to a hospital policy?

Mr. MADDEN. It gives absolute power to select.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask that the gentleman have another minute.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to take up too much time of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Reference has been made here to two boards. It has been intimated here that those boards came into existence under statutes. My understanding is that those boards were appointed only by the President, with General Dawes at the head, and one by the Secretary of the Treasury, with Doctor White at the head, and they were simply agencies, one for the President and the other for the Secretary of the Treasury, and under the provisions of the legislation and the terms of this bill neither of those boards would have any statutory existence whatever. It is merely a matter of decision on the part of the President or any other authority as to whether any new appointments would be made or not.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the gentleman has the substitute, I wish he would turn to it.

Mr. MADDEN. I have not it here.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The amendment I want to suggest to the gentleman was after the words "Veterans' Bureau," in line with the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, add "by extending existing plants and."

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. If the gentleman now will allow me to proceed, so gentlemen may understand the effect of the amendment if it should be adopted and get a clear conception and what this amendment means. Section 2 of the bill now provides:

That the construction of new hospitals or dispensaries, or the alteration, remodeling, or repair of all hospitals or dispensaries heretofore or hereafter constructed shall be done in such manner as the President may determine, and he is authorized to require the architectural, the engineering, the constructing, or other forces of any of the other departments of the Government to do or assist in such work.

Now, my amendment to section 2 would read like this:

Any sums allotted hereunder by the President for any additional hospital or out-patient dispensary facilities as he may determine for the most efficient, expeditious, and economical accomplishment of the purposes of this act.

Section 3 provides:

That for carrying into effect the preceding paragraph relating to additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $17,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Now, I propose to offer a substitute for that if this substitute of mine should be adopted.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is not before the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. No; now I am simply trying to explain it and show that there is no embarrassment about the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask that the gentleman have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, I propose a substitute for section 3 of the bill. Section 3 in the bill leaves the manner of expenditure for architect fees and clerks and all accessory expenditures wide open and places no limit anywhere on how much money can be expended for those incidental purposes. The entire amount might be expended for purposes not intended by the act. What I propose is this:

For carrying into effect the provisions of this act the sum of $17,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated; not to exceed 3 per cent of the sum shall be available for the employment in the District of Columbia or in the field of necessary technical and clerical assistance at the customary rates of compensation exclusively needed in the preparation of plans and specifications for the projects authorized herein, and for the supervision of the execution thereof, and for traveling expenses and field and office equipment and supplies in connection therewith.

That is the whole story. We are trying to limit the expenditure of this money, so that it will go to the purposes for which it is intended. That is all I am trying to do.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am very much interested in the gentleman's amendment. Under this amendment the President would have charge of the erection of the hospitals under the $17,000,000?

Mr. MADDEN. He would.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Would the other board cease to be in existence?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It puts it entirely in the hands of the President?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Does your amendment authorize the acquisition by purchase of private or municipal hospitals?

Mr. MADDEN. It does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to state the parliamentary situation. The Chair thinks that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], being a perfecting amendment, is entitled to be voted on first. The Chair doubts whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] would be in order at this time if objected to.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the Chair will hear me, having heard the gentleman from Illinois in advance of a vote on my perfecting amendment, I desire to be heard briefly in reply to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that and at the same time make an objection. If the gentleman wishes to be recognized as against the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the Chair mean to rule that I can not later object to its being considered?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair does not so rule.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that it is properly a substitute and therefore I object, and if it comes up later I desire to be heard.

But I would like to state to the Chair and to the membership of the House that in order to satisfy the gentleman from Illinois I will offer at the end of section 1 the language, "subject to the approval of the President," so that there may be no question about it, because the whole purpose of the bill has that in view.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to move to strike out the last word?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SNYDER. I endeavored to find out from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether, if this bill should become a law, it would supersede the law which is now in existence, which last year appropriated $18,600,000, and which, it has been clearly demonstrated here, has not been expeditiously handled. The affairs of that bureau or that commission seem to be in a more or less dormant condition. It seems to me that no legislation should be enacted here to-day that would create a renewal of the situation. That is the curse of most legislation of this kind that I have observed since I have been a Member of this House. It will create confusion if we continue the board that now exists and then create another bureau under the President. Then we would be operating all over the country in confusion. By all means, if there is any legislation passed now, it should include and take over the power to expand and supervise the expenditure of the amount which was appropriated a year ago. There has not been any language used here this morning that makes it clear to me.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I make this suggestion? A while ago we were informed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that if this amendment should be adopted his design is to offer an additional amendment that will clear up this situation. Will not the gentleman tell us what his amendment is?

Mr. MADDEN. The first amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No; the second amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. The second amendment, to be a substitute for section 2, provides that "Any sums allotted thereunder by the President for any additional hospital or out-patient dispensary facilities shall be expended by such agency or agencies of the Government as he may determine for the most efficient, expeditious, and economical accomplishment of the purposes of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry before the gentleman from Indiana begins.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Not out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to know just what the parliamentary situation is. Is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] offered as a substitute for the section or as substitute for the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois was offered as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. It was to strike out the section and insert a substitute for the entire section, not as a substitute for the perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois so offered it.

Mr. MANN. The Chair did not correctly understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. In any event, the Chair held in effect that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois was not in order at this time, if there is objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Chair will see that it is in order. It is in order to strike out language and insert other language at any time. It is in order to offer an amendment while that is pending to perfect the language. The vote comes first on the amendment to perfect, but both amendments are in order at the same time. There is no possible question about that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Either can be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that it is not only the Chair's opinion, but that of the parliamentary clerk.

Mr. MANN. Then the parliamentary clerk does not understand the situation. Here is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to strike out from section 1 all after the enacting clause and insert that language in lieu thereof. That is in order, although it can not be voted upon until all amendments to perfect the text have been considered.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that it will not affect the parliamentary procedure, whichever way the Chair rules, because the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] will first be voted on, and then we can take up the other.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Pardon me, Mr. Chairman, but it would affect the proceeding if it should be held that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is in any sort of way a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. I do not see how it could be so; but there is a gentleman who has an amendment to offer to the Madden amendment, and he wishes the opportunity to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been corrected by both gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. MANN and Mr. MADDEN] as to the manner in which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] offered his amendment. The Chair finds that it is not offered as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. The Chair misunderstood about that.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the Chair understood me to make a point of order on the substitute, that was not what I meant. I meant that it ought not to be considered now until the perfecting amendments were first discussed and voted upon. There is no question about that.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. A parliamentary inquiry is not in order unless the gentleman from Indiana yields.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I can not yield at this time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. We do not understand here whether the Chair has ruled that the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is in order or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it is in order, as the gentleman from Illinois now states. The Chair misunderstood what the gentleman from Illinois offered.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We could not hear the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, another parliamentary inquiry, in view of the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I do not yield.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] for the purpose of propounding a parliamentary inquiry, and that is what I am doing.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I do not yield now. The gentleman can propound his inquiry later.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to know from the Chair when it is in order to offer an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I do not yield.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am addressing the Chair, not the gentleman from Indiana, and if I can ascertain it I want to know when it will be possible for me to offer an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Kentucky is out of order.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I very much favor the substitute that has been offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. Most of you men who have been here since the Veterans' Bureau was created have become familiar with its acts and its record as to efficiency, and I am sure that no member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that reported out this bill, can say that the record of that bureau for efficiency or good service commends it to this House as being the proper responsible agent to build the hospitals at this particular time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is right when he says we should put this up to the President without tying his hands. If you say in the bill that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau shall do it, then the Veterans' Bureau will do it; but if you say that the President shall do it, he can not come back and say, "You tied my hands and made it so that nobody but the Veterans' Bureau could do it."

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I can not yield. Then the responsibility is on him and on whatever agency he thinks best to do this work. What qualifications has the Veterans' Bureau for building hospitals, will you please tell me? What experience have they had? Their present duties are more than they can carry out. The institution has no responsible head and very little efficient organization. The organization the director has does not perform the duties that the statute imposes upon it. You gentlemen know that the conceded inefficiency of this organization is every day bringing Congress into disrepute with the whole country. That fellow—the director over there—is like a gander in a hailstorm and does not know what it is all about. [Laughter.] He has men underneath him who are giving him bad advice, and he takes it. He has men underneath him whom it seems some power is holding there and whom nobody can remove, who are either dreadfully ignorant or who are not acting in good faith with the administration, and as a result the boys are permitted to suffer for compensation and for hospitalization. The letters that come from that organization to the Members of Congress are little less than scandalous. I have one in my pocket, and Colonel Forbes himself says in substance, "If I find the man who wrote that letter in reply to your appeal for compensation for the boy, I will fire him before the sun goes down"; but the sun has never gone down, and I understand the man has been promoted.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will suspend a moment. The gentleman from Kentucky has been trying for some time to get recognition.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I would like to ask the Chair when it will be in order to offer an amendment to the Madden substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order at any time when the gentleman gets recognition.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, if what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] says is true, the President ought to have removed the head of the Veterans' Bureau before this. He represents the President. He is appointed by the President. Now, I do not like to come before the House and present any recommendation of the American Legion, but I think you will all admit that the American Legion has demonstrated its interest and sympathy for the disabled veterans of the World War.

The commander of the Legion came before this committee and advocated personally that the authority should be placed in the hands of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. He does not hold any brief for the director, and no one has criticised the Veterans' Bureau when it has deserved it more than the American Legion. He told the committee that the authority should be placed in the hands of the man responsible so that he could be held accountable. With your permission I will read you what he said:

> The American Legion hopes that if and when Congress acts upon H. R. 8791, a bill to appropriate $17,000,000 for further hospital construction, that the appropriation will be made to the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau. This for the reason that he is solely responsible to-day for the hospital care and treatment of beneficiaries of the United States Veterans' Bureau. He receives all the criticism, but lacks authority and funds to properly equip the United States Veterans' Bureau to carry on this work. This is not necessarily an indictment of the Treasury Department, nor is it intended to convey the impression that the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is better able to build hospitals, but made only in a spirit of fairness and equity for the reason, as stated above, that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau is responsible, therefore he should have the opportunity to carry on his work unhampered by divided authority and endless red tape.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, we are not making any progress as we are going on now, and I desire to move that all debate on my amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that all debate on the first amendment, offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, close in 10 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TREADWAY. That will have no bearing on the pending amendment, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not interfere with the substitute.

Mr. TREADWAY. And debate will not close on the substitute until action is taken, so that there will be ample time for further debate.

The CHAIRMAN. It will have nothing to do with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and Mr. LANGLEY's motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we have had a great deal of discussion ever since the war began and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance was first established on the delinquencies and shortcomings of that bureau. The expenditures of the Government now for various forms of soldier relief approximate half a billion dollars. That sum will increase as the years go on. We are going to continue to have complaints about the workings of that bureau. This morning I introduced a resolution to change the rules of the House by establishing a standing committee on the Veterans' Bureau consisting of 21 Members of this House. I have no criticism to make of the committees who have heretofore handled that character of legislataion, but it seems to me that the logical thing to do when the expenditures have reached a half a billion dollars, when soldier relief is growing in importance, is to provide a committee of the House whose special duty it will be to study measures affecting the bureau, to look into, as a primary consideration, the proper functioning of that bureau, and to have in charge all of the various matters that pertain to it. If we are to spend more money for the Veterans' Bureau than for the Army, which has a standing committee, if we are to spend more money for the Veterans' Bureau than we do for the Navy, which has a standing committee, if we are to spend more money for the Veterans' Bureau than for any other governmental department of the Nation, it does seem to me that the question is of sufficient importance and dignity to put able Members now on insignificant committees, doing very little, if anything—it seems we should establish this committee and put these capable Members on it and let them solve the questions with which we are continually confronted. They will have the time to study proposed legislation and propose improvements.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman expect to give the special committee the power to appropriate?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then, his criticism goes to the committee handling this legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I tried to make myself clear that I was not criticizing any committee, but my colleague, perhaps, feels affronted because the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has always handled the legislation heretofore. I am sure the committee has done the best it could; it was a new project, and it was experimental. But I will say this: One trouble with the organization of the House now is that it is top-heavy. [Applause.] We have a few committees that handle the more important matters of legislation in this body, and many able Members are marooned on insignificant committees. As far as the Committee on Interstate Commerce is concerned, it seems to me that there are sufficient matters and questions that properly belong to that committee to consume all of its time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that one of the reasons for the creation of the pension committees in the House has been because Congress handles claims of individual soldiers of prior wars, whereas that is not true and will never be true with the soldiers of the last war.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I do not know about that; I have not been here as long as the gentleman. That may have been true, but that is no argument against my proposed plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY was recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky has occupied five minutes in support of his own amendment, and there has been five minutes against it. The time has been limited and I think other Members are seeking recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the point submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is well taken. We are about to embark upon a further hospitalization and construction program, and we ought in a way to profit by the mistake, if it was a mistake, which resulted from previous legislation. If we can now centralize this responsibility in the President and permit him to designate the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, if he wishes to assume that responsibility, or the Secretary of the Treasury, if he wishes to assume that responsibility, or to place it in the hands of some other official, it would be the wise thing to do. Of course, the President would not be able to inspect the plans and go into all of the details, and if we would do this we would avoid repeating the mistakes and the delays and the misunderstandings and the holding up of projects which it is charged have resulted from the previous legislation. It would seem to me if the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois were amended by incorporating the language which the gentleman from Kentucky proposes to be inserted in the original language of the bill, the result will be that the construction of these hospitals, the purchase of them, the extension of them, or the acquirement of further facilities will be much expedited, and that the delay which has resulted from previous legislation can well be obviated. I do not believe that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, with the tremendous burden which he now has in administering the beneficiary provisions of the war risk act, is in any shape to take on this added technical responsibility.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman think that the Treasury Department has nothing to do at all?

Mr. WALSH. They have a bureau in the Treasury Department that has trained technical experts for just this kind of work, and the Veterans' Bureau does not know any more about building a hospital than it does about tearing down a henhouse. That bureau is administering the provisions of the war risk act.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is it not true that the President must have the aid of the members of his Cabinet to run the detail work of the respective departments, and is it not equally true that he must have somebody under his supervision to run this independent bureau, which is on all fours with the executive departments, and does the gentleman expect the President to go out and buy hospital supplies and things of that sort himself? The committee has no such intention as that.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, I have conceded all that the gentleman has said. Of course, the President will not be able to undertake this himself, and I have said that he will have to rely upon somebody; but we will be centering the responsibility upon the President, and we will not be setting up in the Veterans' Bureau another independent department or division which will have to do with construction work. Perhaps, if we relieve them from that responsibility and take away from them whatever responsibility they have in connection with that work now, we will find that it will expedite the dispatch of their legitimate business, which is passing on these claims for compensation and insurance, and the cleaning up of business that has been accumulating there, from time to time. I submit that the plan proposed by the gentleman from Illinois seems to have great merit in it, and I trust the substitute will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the Langley amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Langley amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, which I send to the desk.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is in order now, because we are considering perfecting amendments to the section itself and not perfecting amendments to the substitute, which will come up later. I make the point of order that it is not in order now.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, the amendment is in order. It is only the question of precedence of the votes on the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KINCHELOE: After the words "United States Veterans' Bureau" in the Madden substitute add the following: "by purchase and remodeling or extension of existing plants, and."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, permit me to make a point of order. It seems to me that we ought not to take up the question of an amendment to the substitute until the section itself is perfected. I have given notice that I have another amendment to offer to perfect the section, and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] also desires to offer an amendment. I do not think it is now in order to take up the amendment to the substitute until we reach the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote on the Kincheloe amendment to the Madden substitute will not prejudice the rights of the gentleman from Kentucky in the least.

Mr. LANGLEY. But it seems to me we are crossing a stream before we get to it by taking up the substitute before the section is perfected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels obliged to overrule the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANGLEY: Page 2, line 12, after the word "shall," insert the words "subject to the approval of the President."

Mr. LANGLEY. That is merely to meet the objection offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think that is just what the gentleman wants to do. I take it that what the gentleman wants to do is to make this subject to the approval of the President.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. I understand the bill provides that the work shall be done in the discretion of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. LANGLEY. And I want to put in the words "with the approval of the President."

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants to put in "subject to the approval of the President," but what he does provide by his amendment is that it shall be subject to the approval of the President as to whether this shall be done in the discretion of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. LANGLEY. Perhaps the gentleman is right. Let us insert this in line 5:

Subject to the approval of the President, the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized—

And so forth.

I ask unanimous consent to change that and offer it after the word "and," in line 5, page 2.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means after the word "bureau," although I am not sure. "In the discretion of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President."

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Kentucky decided upon his modification?

Mr. LANGLEY. I am trying to get the advice of various experts on the question. What I want to do is to meet the objection of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and I want to make it clear that the director nowhere in this bill is authorized to do anything without the approval of the President.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why not put the amendment after the word "bureau," in line 13?

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, that is line 12.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; line 13.

Mr. LANGLEY. I acknowledge the error; I had the wrong print. It is line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. What modification does the gentleman wish?

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to make it quite clear this is all subject to the approval of the President, and I propose an amendment at the end of section 1. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] seems to take objection to the amendment as reported by the Clerk, I will withdraw that request and ask that it be put at the end of the section. Strike out the period and insert the language I have sent up, page 2, line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANGLEY: Page 2, line 13, after the word "bureau," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add "subject to the approval of the President."

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. Does the gentleman mean to say that the treatment of tubercular and neuropsychiatric or general medical and surgical cases would be subject to the approval of the President?

Mr. LANGLEY. No. If the gentleman will notice, page 2, line 6, has a semicolon, and in line 6, page 2, there is this further language "and the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized," and so forth. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] criticizes that because he said that we put it under the President in the first instance and did not do it here. Now, my purpose is to meet that objection by striking out the period, insert a comma, and add "subject to the approval of the President." I do not think it will make very much difference, but I do this to humor my friend from Illinois.

Mr. LAYTON. Just a moment, if the Chairman pleases. As I understand his amendment, it is in line 13, to strike out the period.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. LAYTON. I do not think I have concluded yet unless my time is out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman from Delaware had concluded.

Mr. LAYTON. If I understand the gentleman's amendment, in line 13 it strikes out the period and puts in a comma, and then he inserts the words——

Mr. LANGLEY. "Subject to the approval of the President."

Mr. LAYTON. "Subject to the approval of the President." Now, let me read:

Such hospital plants shall be of fireproof construction——

Mr. LANGLEY. Where is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. LAYTON. Page 2, line 8:

Such hospital plants shall be of fireproof construction, and the location and nature thereof, whether for the treatment of tuberculosis, etc., shall be in the discretion of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is a discretionary power.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is not entitled to recognition——

Mr. GRIFFIN. Then I rise to oppose the amendment. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen——

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York can not be interrupted for a parliamentary inquiry unless he yields.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] offers an amendment which he obviously makes to conciliate an apparent sentiment in this House against the Veterans' Bureau and to gibe in with the proposed substitute of the gentleman from Illinois. Now, I compliment him upon his conciliatory spirit, but I am satisfied that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have given special care and long consideration to the problem as to where the power to construct hospitals should be placed. I know, as a matter of fact, that they have had to face this condition—it was true two years ago, and it is true to-day—namely, that the building business of this Government is concentrated in a bureau of the Secretary of the Treasury's office known as that of the "Supervising Architect," and that bureau is from five to seven years behind on existing authorizations. It has been utterly impossible to get any plans through that bureau of the Government, and it seemed a hopeless thing to put further burdens upon it. As the gentleman from New York has intimated, the American Legion was aware of the difficulties——

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Or rather the difficulty of hurrying the construction of these hospitals through the medium of the Supervising Architect's Bureau, and they assented to the proposal that the Veterans' Bureau be given the responsibility to build the hospitals provided in this bill.

Mr. SNYDER. Is not that delay on the part of the architect's office due to the fact that the appropriations have not been made for the authorization more largely than the fact that they have not been able to spend also?

Mr. GRIFFIN. That was not the case two years ago.

Mr. SNYDER. That is the fact.

Mr. GRIFFIN. It may be so.

Mr. FISH. I think the representative of the American Legion made the statement that the objection of the legion was the Supervising Architect himself.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes. That is my impression. It is not the want of disposition on the part of the Veterans' Bureau to utilize the appropriation of $18,600,000 heretofore made. They are bound by existing laws, whereby the task of constructing the new hospitals fell necessarily upon the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. There is where the difficulty has lain. Now, you are not going to help matters, let me venture to say, by putting the burden upon the President, because he will, as a matter of course, turn it over either to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury or perhaps to the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Under the proposal of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], which would centralize this authority in the hands of the President, is it not more probably true that the President will at all times select men who are competent to select sites for hospitals, and that judgment may not reside in the present or any succeeding Director of the Veterans' Bureau?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Well, the President has selected the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, and the President has the power to remove him if he determines that he ought to be removed. You are not helping matters one iota by delegating the authority to the President to do this building. It is outside of his jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Now, my colleague from New York says this amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is along the line of centralization. True; that is one of the reasons why I think we ought to pause before enacting any further legislation of that kind. The evil that we are troubled with to-day is too much centralization. We want to decentralize and distribute the overswollen powers that are concentrated in certain branches of our Government. The Secretary of the Treasury, for instance, has a burden on his back that entitles him to the distinction of being called the Pooh-bah of our Government. I do not know whether he likes it or not, but one thing is certain, his widely diversified powers and responsibilities do not make for efficiency or economy.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia with pleasure, because I know, as a member of the Joint Committee on Administrative Reorganization, he is familiar with the facts.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think the theory of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is correct, but I am afraid if his amendment is adopted it will practically result in placing the authority with the Treasury Department, where it is located now, and where it has not been properly and satisfactorily executed. At the same time, if the gentleman will give me half a minute more, I can not agree that the only alternative to using the Treasury Department is to make use of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. It strikes me that the President ought in some way or other be given the right to select his agents from the entire field of choice. I would like to see this measure amended in such a way as to exclude the Treasury Department and perhaps also to exclude the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, and find some method of insuring greater speed and efficiency than will be possible otherwise.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think that has been done by the perfecting amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY]. He provides that whatever is done in the way of construction shall be subject to the approval of the President. Now, with that as an intimation to the President, he can exercise a veto upon any determination of the Veterans' Bureau, and if he finds that they are unable to perfect the plans or carry them through to a finality he can remove the head of the Veterans' Bureau and appoint somebody else to take charge of the work.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Is it not true under the bill as drawn, and also under the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the President could go anywhere for the service to construct the buildings, inside or outside of Government agencies?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I doubt if that is true; but, if it is true, it is a power that I do not think the President wants, nor do I think it is a responsibility that we ought to place upon his shoulders.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. LANGLEY. Permit me to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I stated yesterday to the committee that the President in a letter signed by his own hand stated that this is the way he wants it done. He wants the Veterans' Bureau, now charged under the Sweet Act with the hospitalization of disabled soldiers, to have control of it, subject to his supervision. I can not see what else on earth can be done.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think we ought to be consistent. We have created the Veterans' Bureau, and we ought to trust them to the limit to carry out the purposes for which they were organized and appointed. I think that ought to be done. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on my amendment be now closed.

Mr. McSWAIN. Oh, no. I have an amendment to offer to it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Very well.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the substitute amendment to the paragraph, if that is in order at this time.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] is recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. I respectfully ask the Chair when it will be in order for the Chair to recognize some one on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds? Will it be in order in this debate some time to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has tried to recognize various gentlemen equitably.

Mr. RUCKER. I am a member of the committee, and yet I have repeatedly tried to obtain recognition without success. No member of the committee has been recognized, apparently, except the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not aware before that the gentleman from Missouri was a member of the committee. Otherwise he would have granted him recognition. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. I thought the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] was recognized.

Mr. Chairman, the debate this morning has taken a course that I least expected. The committee which has had this bill under its charge and consideration had no purpose on earth except to do its duty and provide means for constructing hospitals so badly needed by our soldiers.

Now, the controversy here is turning on the question whether the Veterans' Bureau or the Treasury Department shall control the construction of the buildings authorized under this bill. I, for one, have no criticism to offer of the Treasury Department. I will make no criticism. We all know that though Congress has appropriated the money for the buildings, the buildings have not been constructed. We know that brave men who sacrificed their all for this great country of ours have died and are dying daily for want of proper care and treatment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I say it is a crying shame that such conditions exist.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. This condition which the gentleman complains of has existed for a long time. Is not that true? I merely want to get it on record that it is not anything recent.

Mr. RUCKER. No; it is not recent. We have authorized these buildings for more than a year and they are not yet built. I say we owe a duty to these soldiers and that we ought to construct these buildings. Somebody wants the Treasury Department to do it. I do not care a fig about the Treasury Department. I have no criticism of it, but the Treasury Department has proven that it can not or will not act promptly.

Mr. ELLIS. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. RUCKER. In just a moment. The pending bill provides that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau be charged with the responsibility. Why not? Oh, some gentleman here a minute ago grew somewhat excited and indulged in a veiled criticism of the Veterans' Bureau; but gentlemen ought to remember that one of the easiest things on earth for a man to do is to criticize somebody else having official power and owing official duty. I want to call attention to the fact that the Veterans' Bureau overnight grew from a small bureau to one of magnificent proportions, the greatest bureau in the land. They were untried men, untrained men, dealing with new problems, and, of course, great confusion existed. Under the control of the magnificent gentleman who is now there that confusion has disappeared. [Applause.] I challenge any man in this House to show that the Veterans' Bureau for the last several years has not been efficiently and well administered. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I accept the gentleman's challenge to show that there is inefficiency in the Veterans' Bureau. I will be very glad to submit a number of letters admitting that they have made the gravest mistakes when the facts were right in front of their noses. I will put letters in the RECORD to show their incompetency in this office, if you want me to.

Mr. RUCKER. I believe I have more soldiers in my district than anybody else.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. RUCKER. It looks to me like they were all soldiers, because we are paying pretty liberally; and I want to say to this House that the only confusion that has confronted me in the discharge of my duty to these men—and it is a pleasant duty—the only confusion that exists emanates from the Sweet bill, which decentralized the power and drove a great many soldiers to St. Louis, necessitating correspondence here and correspondence in St. Louis; but as long as the law has been administered by the office here every solitary case I have had has been courteously and efficiently disposed of and administered. I have no brief to speak for Colonel Forbes, the Chief of the Veterans' Bureau, but I believe he is the right man in the right place. [Applause.] I will applaud President Harding as long as he keeps him there and will say to him that it would be misguided judgment if he should ever see fit to remove him as long as that office is conducted as it now is. Somebody says he can not build houses. I will tell you that, in addition to being a magnificent soldier and a good administrative officer, he has had much experience as an engineer, a contractor, and builder. He has had vast experience. He is not a new, untried man. Colonel Forbes told our committee that with this authorization, and this bill enacted into law, he would construct buildings much more quickly and at an expense at least 20 per cent less than the Treasury Department constructs buildings for.

Gentlemen, I sincerely hope that wisdom will guide the action of this House to-day. We have in this country a most deplorable condition—men farmed out into any kind of a shack called a hospital that the director could hire, leased out as it were; and frequently crippled and maimed soldiers, suffering from physical and mental breakdown, are being transported from place to place, exposed to the elements, and dying in trying to get housing where their cases may be administered to. I say it is a shame, and that we should quit squabbling. I have no choice for the one or the other; no preference. All I want is that we lodge this authority in some one man, somebody who is responsible and who will construct these buildings as authorized by Congress to take care of these thousands of dying men who need attention. [Applause.]

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I promised to yield first to my colleague from Missouri [Mr. ELLIS].

Mr. ELLIS. I want to say that I am in full accord with what my colleague has said, and I want to set at rest any controversy as to the authority given to the President in this bill. It seems to me that section 2 is being entirely ignored in this debate. In section 2 authority is given to the President—

To require the architectural, engineering, constructing, or other forces of any of the departments of the Government to do or assist in such work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman whether this is an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. BEGG. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG to the amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: After the word "facilities," at the end of line 2, insert "and to take over all present activities tending to provide hospital facilities."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if the Madden amendment is adopted, it provides that the President is hereby authorized to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities. The point was raised by the gentleman from New York whether it would do away with the two boards that have been created and acting under the President's action. My amendment follows the words "out-patient dispensary facilities, and to take over all present activities tending to provide hospital facilities," and then goes on with the Madden amendment.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Is it the intention under the gentleman's amendment to take over the construction of the hospitals under the previous legislation?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the Veterans' Bureau act the President had authority to take over all hospitals.

Mr. BEGG. That has been disputed, else what is the need for any legislation turning all this over to the President. I am going on the assumption that he has not, because the point has been raised, and the gentleman from Illinois would not offer an amendment if the President had the authority without any further legislation. Every complaint that has been made against any department, either of the Treasury Department or of the Veterans' Bureau, may be raised again even if we localize it. Every man insists that what he wants is speed. If the Madden amendment is adopted and my amendment is adopted taking over all present construction, if the President assigns it to the Veterans' Bureau and in four months he has not had the speed, without any legislation he can take it away from the Veterans' Bureau and put it under the Treasury Department or the War Department. He does not need any added legislation to put it where he wills to get the greatest amount of speed in the construction of available hospital facilities. It seems to me that there can be no argument at all against the Madden amendment, if the speeches that are being made are founded on facts. One man claims that we are not getting action by the Veterans' Bureau, and another complains that he can not get action under the Treasury Department. If you pass the Madden amendment, we give the authority to the man who will be charged with the responsibility, and if he finds that he is not getting action under the Treasury Department let him go to the Veterans' Bureau, already created, or he can give it to a contractor in the city where the hospital is to be built under the Treasury or the War Department, or wherever he wants to put it. So, it seems to me, that if we want to avoid duplication and complexities and knotty problems about which we are complaining now the thing to do is to give the sole power, without any directory orders as to what the President shall do, and that he will certainly get results, and if he does not he alone is to blame.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have two minutes more; I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that the gentleman from Ohio have two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does not the gentleman think that the bill as reported by the committee already confers the power?

Mr. BEGG. I will say that I do not think so, because the gentleman is willing to grant everything anybody offers as an objection. If the gentleman was sure of his ground he would oppose these amendments. I do not believe that there is any guesswork in the Madden amendment, and I know there is guesswork in the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman think the committee after having considered this for a year and a half, having had hearings after hearings and perfected a bill that they think meets the situation, and the only amendment that has been accepted is one that made clearer what they thought was not clear—does the gentleman think that because somebody else has a little different view that he ought to come in here and override the work of a committee of the House?

Mr. BEGG. I will say that there is no intention to override the committee. I think the committee deserves great credit, but the gentleman's bill turns this over to the Veterans' Bureau. A year from now if they do not get results we will be right here in the same position that we are now, whereas if we give it to the President under the Madden amendment he can proceed without any further legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. LYON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. It seems to me that if the Madden amendment is adopted it will only tend to further delay the construction of hospitals so badly needed. There are only two propositions, as I understand it, and that is whether the construction shall be done under the supervision of the Treasury Department or whether it shall be done under the supervision of the Veterans' Bureau. The effect of the Madden amendment will leave it an open question by passing the buck to the President of the United States. As I understand, the President has indicated by a letter to the chairman that he is perfectly willing for the work to be done under the Veterans' Bureau. Now, if it was not the purpose of the gentleman who offered the amendment to leave the construction under the Treasury Department, why the amendment? He knows, and I think every man here knows, that if his amendment had been offered to put the construction back into the hands of the Treasury Department he could not get it through, because we have all seen the effect of what they have done under the other appropriation. But instead of offering an amendment to keep it under the Treasury Department, he offers the amendment to leave it in the hands of the President. I tell you that if you do, those of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds who saw the number of people brought to us by the Treasury Department to convince us that the matter ought to be left in their hands know that there will be drives made on the President of the United States by the Treasury Department on the one hand and by the Veterans' Bureau on the other that will result only in further delaying hospital construction.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYON. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Did not the hearings show that the Treasury Department was simply explaining the record and not asking one way or the other with reference to the doing of this work?

Mr. LYON. After they saw the attitude of the committee, I think the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury did admit that, so far as he was personally concerned, he did not care.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In all fairness, does the gentleman think it is right to say that Colonel Clifford reached that conclusion only because of the attitude of the committee and after the attitude of the committee has been exhibited?

Mr. LYON. Oh, no. I do not want my remarks to have that construction.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is the implication the gentleman's words leave.

Mr. LYON. I do not mean that.

Mr. KOPP. Is it not true that the only departments of the Government that know anything about this subject or that would be competent in any way to take care of it without long investigation and examination are the Treasury Department and the Veterans' Bureau?

Mr. LYON. I think so.

Mr. KOPP. And one or the other ought to be chosen.

Mr. LYON. Yes; and that being so, there is no reason why this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it not fair to suppose that the President would put the administration of the act in the hands of those most competent to handle it?

Mr. LYON. The President has already said whom he thinks ought to handle this.

Mr. KOPP. He has said it in writing, has he not?

Mr. LYON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. There is no opposition to that, if the President sees fit to do it. We want him to put it in the hands of somebody who will act.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds which framed this legislation. Last evening, on account of the large number of gentlemen who wanted to speak in general debate, I forbore addressing the committee at that time. I am not here representing or defending any department of the Government, but I think we should be careful in our criticism of the officers and departments which have been appointed and established, respectively, to carry out legislation passed by Congress. Gentlemen have said that the Supervising Architect is five or seven years behind in the performance of certain work. We all know that the authorizations which were made by Congress in 1913—and they were the last ones that were made for public buildings—have been altogether inadequate for proceeding with building operations during the war and since the war.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I want to say that it is my understanding that plans for all those buildings have been drawn.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; the plans are ready. It is only a question of getting more money from Congress, and we are being importuned in the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee all of the time to make further appropriations for these various projects in order that the Treasury Department may go ahead with the building.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman help the chairman bring about such legislation?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman knows my attitude. We have been considering that matter in the committee, and there has been a desire upon the part of everyone to proceed just as expeditiously as possible, when building conditions in the country are such that the Government can get a fair return for its expenditures.

Mr. Chairman, one would think that the Treasury Department is on trial here for its work in the construction of hospitals. I want to go back a little and trace the history of the matter. The first bill for the construction of hospitals or for the providing for hospital facilities for the soldiers in the late war was that of March 3, 1919. Congress then placed the work of building certain hospital projects, some of which had been started during the war by the War Department, in the hands of the United States Public Health Service, and not in the hands of the Supervising Architect. The next act was that of March 4, last year, under which $18,600,000 was appropriated for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. That is the only sum that has been appropriated which has been expended and used by the Supervising Architect. The Sweet bill authorized the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to allot and allocate certain funds to the Public Health Service for the alteration and completion and remodeling of certain plants such as might be determined upon, and under that authority a large amount of money has been allotted to the Public Health Service.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that even those hospitals constructed under the jurisdiction of the Public Health Service were planned by the architect in the Treasury Department, so that while the law put the responsibility on the Public Health Service the plans were all prepared and supervised by the Supervising Architect in the Treasury Department?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The office of the Supervising Architect loaned some of its technical, architectural, and engineering personnel to the Public Health Service, and they were employed in the work, but the work was conducted under the control and supervision of the Public Health Service.

Mr. BARKLEY. But they could not begin construction until the architect's office had prepared the plans.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There were not many plans to be prepared under the act of March 3, 1919, except for making changes. The gentleman will remember that the act of March 3, 1919, turned over to the Public Health Service certain existing projects which had already been started.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that, because the Dawsonsprings hospital had not been started.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think perhaps the gentleman from Kentucky is correct. There were some new projects, principal among which was the Dawsonsprings sanitarium. We have expended up to this time—and I have made careful search in the various departments to ascertain these facts—or authorized the expenditure up to the present time for hospital purposes by money which has been appropriated for or allotted to the Public Health Service, the Supervising Architect, or to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, who in turn has allotted it to the Public Health Service, a total sum of $30,260,000. The present bill provides for $17,000,000 more, and that will make the total amount authorized or which will have been authorized when this bill is passed to be expended for hospital purposes $47,260,000.

So that we may say that the Congress of the United States has responded generously to the requirements of the disabled and diseased soldiers who returned from the late war. I want to say that in the committee there was no difference of opinion whatever, no disagreement, as to the question of authorizing this appropriation of $17,000,000. We were all in favor of that program, but there was difference in the committee as to how this money should be expended and by whom the preparation of the plans and supervising the construction was to be done, and for myself, together with three or four other gentlemen on the committee, I stated and they stated that we reserved the right upon the floor of the House, if the question arose, to support propositions with reference to the details of this bill. Personally, I think that the substitute suggested by the gentleman from Illinois would be wisely adopted by this House. I would let the President of the United States select the Director of the Veterans' Bureau if he wishes, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department if he wishes, or any other agency he might select, or arrange to have contracts made, as has been suggested, in various parts of the country for the erection of these plants, and I would give the President complete authority to handle this matter in any way that he saw fit.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have not the time. It has been said here that the President has submitted a proposition that the Veterans' Bureau should do this work. The President has O. K'd the general plan of it and approved the authorizing of the expenditure of $17,000,000 for hospitals just as we have. Now, as both the Director of the Veterans' Bureau and the Supervising Architect in the Treasury Department are under the control of the President, there certainly would be no objection to authorizing him to select the agency or the department that he desires to choose for the purpose of doing this work.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If I can have a couple of minutes more.

Mr. LANGLEY. I hope the committee will grant that, because the gentleman is a member of the committee and was very courteous in giving way yesterday and not taking any time in general debate because of the embarrassment of the chairman of the committee in the matter of time, although he was entitled under the practice to time. I have in my hand a letter addressed to me by the President. This letter says—I will send it to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the letter which the gentleman from Kentucky has may be read by the Clerk within my time.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is an added evidence of the gentleman's courtesy which I deeply appreciate.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will read the letter in the time of the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 22, 1922.

Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN LANGLEY: I had yours of yesterday inclosing copy of H. R. 10864, together with a copy of the report of your committee to the House. Apparently the bill is acceptable as drawn and provides the agencies for promptly carrying out the purposes of the bill. I quite agree about the desirability of its early enactment.

Very truly yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Why, Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of this committee, as he apparently did, sent this bill with a report of the committee to the President, and the President wrote him an acknowledgment and stated his views at all upon the measure, I would be very much surprised if he vetoed it in advance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANGLEY. Now, I want to ask the gentleman this, and I will not interrupt him further. The chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds went with me, or, rather, I went with him, to the President and asked him about this bill, and we did that because it was claimed that his approval of the hospital board, headed by Brigadier General Sawyer, was merely perfunctory. We talked with him for 10 minutes and went over the details of the measure, and he said, "I am for the bill as it is drawn." He did not mean that there might not be some minor amendment, but he said, "I am in favor of the agency provided by the bill. Will you send me a copy of your bill and the report so that I can put in writing what I think about it?" That is what happened. I did not send it up there except at his request. I called up afterwards and asked if I could give his letter out for publication, and he said, "Certainly; and if I had known you were going to give it out I would have made it stronger than I did." [Laughter.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is no doubt about that. The President wants legislation passed to take care of these soldiers, and so do we. Now, there has been criticism of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. The only money that was appropriated which he has used was under the bill passed March 4, 1921.

What happened? We amended the bill, and it took months to have it amended so as to authorize the remodeling of existing buildings. Further than that, the President called in General Dawes and asked him and other gentlemen to consider the matter of hospitalization of the soldiers. A little while later—two or three months later—the so-called White committee was appointed. That carried us to the months of June and July, and finally into August, last summer. Then we finally began work upon this hospitalization program and in three or four months this work that has been begun by that committee will be completed. I think the gentleman from New York has some cause to complain. You remember we had pending here and in the other body a bill which related to a hospital that was to be built by the State of New York under an act passed by the Legislature of the State of New York, and that matter was pending there a long time. They have had trouble in New York, I am told, with finding a suitable site up there. There are many things that caused delay for six or seven months in the building program. Let us be fair and reasonable with this department. I think they have done as well as they could have done under all the circumstances. Now, let us place this responsibility upon the one man who can command all of the agencies, all of the officials, all of the departments of the Government for the completion of this program which is so essential and which is so dear to the heart of every one of us. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to hurry the matter along as much as possible, of course. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on section 1 and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. I want to be heard for two or three minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Reserving the right to object, how will that time be divided?

Mr. McSWAIN. I want five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] to the number of gentlemen who are seeking recognition.

Mr. LANGLEY. The Chair will readily understand that I do not want to prevent gentlemen from having opportunity to be heard, especially those who did not get a chance yesterday.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] has an amendment to offer in good faith, and he has been trying to get recognition for an hour or two to offer his amendment. I think he ought not to be excluded.

Mr. McSWAIN. I have an amendment that I wish to offer, and I wish to have a few minutes in which to discuss it.

Mr. LANGLEY. This is an important section. Let us make it 40 minutes. I want five minutes of that time myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all debate on the first section and all amendments thereto close in 40 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, I want to know if my colleague from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] is going to get recognition for five minutes of that time, so that he can offer an amendment?

Mr. LANGLEY. I want five minutes to oppose the Madden amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that an amendment in some instances can be considered only as pending.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, so that it will be pending.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, why not have all the amendments read now for information? I ask unanimous consent that all amendments offered be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the several amendments be read for information. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. GARRETT of Texas: Amend line 15 of the substitute, after the word "personnel," by striking out the period and inserting a comma and the following: "and to furnish all patients who are admitted to said hospital or hospitals with suitable and comfortable clothing whenever it shall appear that such patients are without financial means and not drawing compensation."

Amendment proposed by Mr. McSWAIN: Page 2, line 6, insert "and also to provide proper and suitable recreational centers."

Amendment proposed by Mr. WILLIAMSON: At the end of section 1 insert "Provided, however, That the director, with the approval of the President, may utilize such suitable buildings, structures, and grounds now owned by the United States as may be available for the purposes aforesaid, and the President is hereby authorized by Executive order to transfer any such buildings, structures, and grounds to the United States Veterans' Bureau upon the request of the director thereof."

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the amendment that I have proposed seems to be obviously desirable, and if it were not for the fact that the bill enumerates so particularly the different parts of a hospital that may be constructed or acquired, to wit, such things as tracks, roads, vehicles, and so forth, I would not have thought it necessary that a recreational center should be added. But since so many parts are enumerated, it seems to me, on the principle that enumerating certain things excludes other things not enumerated, the absence of the words "recreational center" might be considered as an exclusion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the main thing I desired to obtain recognition for is this, to say that I believe in centralizing authority and in centralizing that authority upon the person of some officer who may be reached by proper criticism; and the officer that I consider the person upon whom that responsibility should be placed here is the one named in this bill brought in by this committee, to wit, the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. [Applause.]

I claim some little right to be interested in ex-service men, and I think I have shown some considerable activity in their behalf before that bureau. I have had, I reckon, as many claims denied as have been allowed, but I have no criticism to make of the director personally. [Applause.] Why talk about criticizing him and calling him "a gander in a hailstorm" because some one subordinate out of 10,000 employees has written a foolish letter? I have received foolish letters, too. But how about the Treasury Department? A constituent of mine overpaid his income tax in 1919 to the extent of about $1,500. That claim was allowed about the first of the year 1921, as a proper claim for refund. In the year 1921 this man got into such financial straits that he was unable to raise the money to pay the interest on his mortgage debt. After about one year's delay the $1,500, that was in the hands of the Treasurer for two years, and one year after it was allowed as a proper sum of money to be refunded, was paid to him; but when it reached his home in Spartanburg, S. C., that man was already in bankruptcy. The $1,500 would have enabled him to pay the interest on his debt, and perhaps would have saved him from bankruptcy. Talk about "expedition" and about putting the building of hospitals into the hands of a department that deals in such speed as that!

Why, Mr. Chairman, I say let us put the responsibility here, in the hands of Charles R. Forbes, a contractor of experience, a man of ability, a man who commanded a regiment of Engineers in a time of hostilities. He has the ability, and if he has not got it, put somebody there as director who can and will do this, where we can reach him and see that the duty is performed. [Applause.]

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I realize that when the subject matter of legislation has been debated for two hours there is some impatience on the part of the committee to have the speeches cut short.

I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], which meets most of the objections urged by the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], on page 2, has offered an amendment to line 12 which makes the act of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau subject to the approval of the President. We have a legislative duty to perform. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had the duty to investigate and see upon what department this task of building the hospitals should be laid. Of course, in all our legislative acts we could say that the duty should be performed by the President, or such agencies as he should determine, and very glibly say, "Since we leave it to the President of the United States it ought all to be well," but it is our legislative duty to choose the department. It is not proper for this Congress to put upon the President the duty of selecting the department. [Applause.] We created the United States Veterans' Bureau, and put upon that bureau all of the duties relating to the relief of the ex-service men. That department has the duty of hospitalization. It has the duty of determining when the soldier should be given hospitalization. It has the duty of assigning the soldier to the hospital. That bureau has every reason under the sun to have more information concerning the location of hospitals, where they are needed, what kind are needed, and upon what kind of hospitals the greatest stress should be laid in order to give the relief needed at the particular time. There is every reason in the world for giving this power of constructing hospitals to the Veterans' Bureau with the exception that the Veterans' Bureau is not ordinarily a building organization.

The provisions of this bill which permit the Veterans' Bureau and the President to reach out and use any other agencies of the Government for the purpose of plans and architectural drawings, and so forth, meet that objection. So it seems to me it is our clear duty to locate this responsibility in its natural and logical place. When we have done that, then we have answered the criticism that there has been delay in the building of these hospitals. If we pass it on to the President, then the President is compelled to elect and to change from one bureau to another. We have already delegated it in the form of law to the Treasury Department. If we pass this up to the President, then we put upon him the duty and the obligation to hear this question anew and see if a change ought to be made. The committee has decided that this change ought to be made. It is put in a logical place, and it seems to me this committee ought to vote down the Madden amendment so as to locate this clearly and definitely in the Veterans' Bureau. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If I have the time.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state what other departments have building departments besides the Treasury?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The Treasury Department has, the War Department has certain facilities, the Navy Department has certain facilities. I do not know that I could enumerate all offhand where the different facilities are located, but this bill puts the power into the President's hands to draw all of these facilities and put them at the disposal of the Veterans' Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House to a condition existing in the hospitals of this country concerning disabled ex-service men that ought not to exist and that ought to be corrected in the bill that we are now considering. I have offered an amendment to the Madden substitute, which, if the substitute is defeated, I shall offer to the original text of the bill, providing that the disabled ex-service men who are without means, and who when they are admitted to a public hospital are not drawing compensation, shall be furnished by the manager of such hospital with suitable and comfortable clothing so that they may have the privilege of attending Red Cross hut meetings given for their entertainment or of going down town or any other place, mixing among their fellows and not be ashamed of themselves. In the hospital at Camp Logan in my State last November there were about 40 ex-service men out of 257 who did not have sufficient clothing to attend the Red Cross hut gatherings that the people of that city gave to entertain the men and try to make them forget their troubles for a moment. There were 257 men out of about 800 who were not drawing compensation. That was quite a large number. Many of them would never get compensation perhaps. Some of those men were there dying of tuberculosis. They did not have sufficient clothing, and were unable to get compensation because of the fact that the two years had elapsed and they could not connect their disability with their line of service. But I say that the Congress ought to emphasize the fact that no ex-service man—I do not care where he comes from—shall be allowed to remain in such a condition after he is admitted into a public-service hospital that he can not have sufficient clothing to walk the streets of a city or sit down among his comrades in a Red Cross hut, theater, or other gathering and feel comfortable. These men could not do that because they did not have proper clothing. We should not forget that when the draft act stretched forth its strong hand it took all classes of men. It took men who did not have jobs as well as those who had them. It took men from the country as well as from the city, and it took men who when they came out of the service had nothing except themselves. Now, disease has overtaken them along the way. Their people are poor. Perhaps their fathers and mothers were tenants on a farm or in the city—it matters not where. They have been sick for weeks. The Public Health Service admitted them into a hospital. They file their claims for compensation. The physician examines them and says, "You now have tuberculosis, but I can not tell when it developed. I can not tell how far back it goes. Perhaps it began in France."

This soldier believes and the doctor believes, although he can not swear to it, that when the soldier had the "flu" back in France that then and there the germ of tubercular disease was planted, and because of the fact that he was dismissed from the service in apparently good health he can not get relief. His health is broken down and he is in the Public Service Hospital without sufficient clothing. I found one in the hospital at Houston and sat down by his side and talked with him, and he said, "Mr. Congressman, this overall suit is all that I have." He was then pale and about ready to die.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Who is to furnish this clothing?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The Veterans' Bureau, out of money that is appropriated.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Under the gentleman's proposed amendment, who is to provide or furnish the clothing?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. When the bill goes into effect, whoever is in charge of the hospital, whether the Veterans' Bureau or the Treasury Department, the manager of the hospital shall see to it that out of the money which will be appropriated under this bill for the purpose of maintaining these hospitals a sufficient amount shall be furnished for this purpose, just as you would furnish money to build a road to the hospital or for any other activity in connection with the operation of the hospital.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I am asking simply for information. I wanted to know whether you provided that the Federal bureau or the War Department should furnish the clothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, shortly after I arrived at Washington as a Member of Congress I undertook to get the Public Health Service to take over Fort Meade, S. Dak., for the purpose of providing immediate means for the hospitalization of the disabled veterans of the World War. Brig. Gen. Charles E. Sawyer at that time was a member of the Committee on Hospitalization, of which Dr. William Charles White was chairman. I arranged for a conference and furnished him with complete data on Fort Meade and left a folder showing pictures of all the buildings and surroundings. After going over the matter with some care, he declared that with the information at hand Fort Meade would seem to be an ideal location, and promised to take the matter up direct with the President and the Committee on Hospitalization. He also requested data as to what States were included in Public Health District No. 10, in which Fort Meade is located, and the number of ex-service men that had been enrolled from these States. This I supplied him with in the following letter:

APRIL 9, 1921.

Hon. CHARLES E. SAWYER,
Brigadier General, M. R. C., Room 244,
State, War, and Navy Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GENERAL: As suggested by you yesterday when we had our brief conference with reference to Fort Meade as an available institution for the disabled World War veterans, I find that the Public Health Service District No. 10 embraces the States of Montana, North and South Dakota, and Minnesota. The following are the number of service men for the above States:

	White.	Colored.	Total.
Montana	38,851	198	39,049
North Dakota	27,166	97	27,253
South Dakota	30,068	62	30,130
Minnesota	106,407	511	106,918
	202,492	868	[1] 203,350

[1] Total in district.

Upon the percentage basis that you figured yesterday as the approximate number of disabled, you will find that Fort Meade will care for a very large part of this territory, and I trust that you may be able to use the building and equipment for the purposes suggested in my folder, which I left with you.

* * * * * * *

Yours truly,

WM. WILLIAMSON.

This fort was personally inspected by Asst. Surg. Gen. W. G. Stimpson, of the Public Health Service, who made a report thereon on September 7, 1920, reading in part as follows:

ARCADE BUILDING,
Seattle, Wash., September 7, 1920.

SURGEON GENERAL UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,
Washington, D. C.:

We have the honor to report that we arrived at Sturgis, S. Dak., on August 29 and inspected Fort Meade, a short distance—1½ miles—from that town. There is a wide macadam road nearly level, in first-class condition, between the city and the fort. This road winds through a beautiful wooded valley. The fort is beautifully situated on a level plot of land in a cup-shaped depression between the hills, which protects it somewhat from the winds.

There are at present only an officer and 18 enlisted men stationed at this fort, but the War Department has kept everything in excellent condition. The grass is cut, the roads are in fine shape, the woodwork of all buildings is well protected by paint, and even the windows of those buildings that are unoccupied are clean. There is a large amount of equipment in the buildings, including cooking stoves, furniture in the officers' quarters, hospital beds and bedding, and sterilizing apparatus in the hospital. The water supply is obtained from springs in an uninhabited watershed in the mountains, some of which is part of the Black Hills forest reserve, and the rest part of the reservation belonging to the fort. The pipe line has been well constructed and is protected against freezing. A full description of the buildings and grounds is on file at the bureau.

* * * * * * *

The climate of Fort Meade is suitable for tuberculosis. The altitude is 3,400 feet and the air is dry and stimulating. There are few hot days and there are, as a rule, no severe storms before Christmas. After that date there are on an average of six storms during the rest of the winter, but these storms do not usually last over 24 hours. The average annual rainfall is 19 inches and there is a large percentage of sunshiny days.

* * * * * * *

Fort Meade can be opened and used as a hospital with very little delay if a lease is granted by the War Department, especially if the equipment now there is allowed to remain. The post hospital, with a capacity of 75 patients, will be ready to use with a small amount of additional equipment. Ambulant cases can be placed in the barrack buildings without alteration, so that the post could be made available for over 125 patients in a short time. If it were found after trial that use of the post for hospital is a wise move the barrack hospital could be converted into hospital wards, as many of them as are necessary, and temporary wards can be erected for ambulant cases of tuberculosis; if, on the other hand, the continuation of the post as a hospital should prove to be inadvisable, the place can be closed, as no expense would have been incurred for alteration of buildings; the only cost would be that which was necessary for its operation while in use.

Respectfully,

W. G. STIMPSON,
Assistant Surgeon General.
CHAS. L. STRATTON,
Assisting Constructing Engineer.

It has also been visited by Col. C. R. Forbes, Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and he has repeatedly assured me that the fort can be reconditioned at small public expense and made into a very satisfactory hospital plant and training school for the disabled veterans. He also informs me that he desires to take charge of the fort and utilize it for hospital and training purposes just as soon as funds are available, provided he can secure an Executive order directing that the fort be turned over to the Veterans' Bureau for the purpose.

Should the pending bill become law hospitalization will be transferred from the Treasury Department to the Veterans' Bureau. As the bill carries an authorization for an appropriation of $17,000,000 for caring for the disabled veterans there will be ample funds available for carrying out the reconditioning of Fort Meade by the director. As stated, the War Department has steadfastly taken the position that it has no authority under existing law to turn the fort over to another department, nowithstanding that it admits that it has been practically unoccupied for more than ten years and wholly unoccupied since 1914 but for a few caretakers. If my amendment is adopted there will be no longer a question of authority involved, as it expressly authorizes the President, upon the request of the director, to transfer any buildings, structures, and grounds that may be available for the purpose contemplated by the bill.

In a late conference with Secretary of War John W. Weeks he stated that the War Department could not now utilize Fort Meade, and that there was little likelihood of its being needed by his department for an indefinite period, if at all. He also advised me that so far as he was concerned he would be very glad to turn it over to the Public Health Service or the Veterans' Bureau at any time that a request might be made for it from the proper source.

Practically every Legion post in South Dakota is strongly urging that the fort be turned into a hospital and training school at the earliest possible date. In this they are joined by many of the posts in adjoining States. The proposed conversion of Fort Meade into a hospital is also indorsed and strongly urged by John H. Dykes, chairman of the national legislative committee of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War.

There is urgent necessity for the early utilization of this fort for the benefit of the disabled. Adequate hospitalization has already been too long delayed, and much unnecessary suffering has been caused in consequence. There has been an insistent and practically unanimous demand by the disabled soldiers within my State for accommodations at the fort. Here the surroundings are delightful, the water supply abundant and pure, and the buildings themselves all that can be desired. There is ample space, many fine trees, and a beautiful mountain stream near at hand. Both the commander, Fred B. Ray, and the adjutant, David F. Heffron, American Legion, Department of South Dakota, are familiar with the location and have inspected the buildings. These men have given their unqualified indorsement to the proposition of converting the fort into a home for the disabled soldiers. What I want to make certain of is that the authority of the President to transfer the buildings and grounds at Fort Meade from the War Department to the Veterans' Bureau, in the event of this bill becoming law, shall be unquestioned.

Mr. Chairman, there was so much confusion at the time the amendment that I offered to section 1 was read that I do not believe the proviso was heard by a great many Members of the House. I therefore will read it again:

Provided further, That the director, with the approval of the President, may utilize such suitable buildings, structures, and grounds now owned by the United States as may be available for the purposes aforesaid, and the President is hereby authorized by Executive order to transfer any such building, structures, and grounds to the United States Veterans' Bureau upon request of the director thereof.

Now, gentlemen, I have studied the pending bill very carefully and I find that the language in the bill is identical, so far as authority is granted to spend money for construction work is concerned, with the bill passed by Congress by the act of March 4, 1921, and also under the act of March 3, 1919. It is also identical so far as authority is granted to utilize existing available structures owned by the Government. The War Department has held that the Secretary of War, under existing law, has no authority to turn over any buildings or structures not used or occupied by the department to the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I will.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to say to the gentleman that I was not aware when the bill was drawn that the War Department had made such a ruling. I thought the President had sufficient authority to do what the gentleman's amendment seeks to do, and I see no objection to it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The chairman informs me that he has no objection to the amendment.

I have consulted with other members of the committee, and without exception they are in favor of the amendment. I discussed the amendment with Colonel Forbes, and he stated that he was in favor of it, and the chairman tells me that he had a conference with him at which he stated that he thought the amendment would strengthen the bill and make a better measure out of it. Under the bill as it stands there is no authority to use any part of the fund provided for or appropriated in this bill for anything but new construction. You can analyze the language as carefully as you will and you can not find any authority in any part of it for taking over existing buildings and hospitals. All the money appropriated is to be used for new construction. There are buildings in this country and hospitals in control of the War Department that can be turned over to-morrow that are in a fine condition. Tuberculous patients can be placed there now and be given immediate attention.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not section 2 provide for what the gentleman seeks to provide for in his amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I think not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It provides for remodeling or repair of all hospitals or dispensaries heretofore or hereafter constructed.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That only refers to hospitals now under the control of the Veterans' Bureau or the Public Health Service in the Treasury Department.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The committee has accepted an amendment to the Madden substitute, and an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky to section 1 of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Those amendments do not go to the proposition I am trying to get before the committee at this time. I told you a moment ago that the War Department holds that they have no power to transfer any buildings to the Veterans' Bureau, and my amendment will cure that defect. I have a letter from the Secretary of War which takes that position.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I will.

Mr. MANN. This bill is practically in the language of the existing law so far as maintaining additional structures is concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Practically in the same language.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been limited.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I desire to submit the following for the information of the House.

The improvements upon the grounds consist of macadam drives, shade trees, and the buildings and structures listed below. These are all in fine physical condition and could not be built to-day for twice their original cost. Accommodations for at least 1,250 beds can be arranged for in the hospital and various barracks with practically no expense except the additional furnishings required:

LIST OF BUILDINGS.

1. Band stand.

2. Officers' quarters. Size, main building, 44 by 37; wings, 28 by 15; brick and stone; slate roof; electric light; steam heat; water and sewer; 5 water-closets; 4 wash sinks; 5 washstands; 2 laundry tubs; 4 baths; cost of building, $25,000.

3. Officers' quarters. Size, 34 by 58; 2 wings, each 15 by 34 feet; brick and stone; slate roof; steam heat; electric light; water and sewer; 4 each water-closets, wash sinks, laundry tubs, and bathtubs; cost of building, $24,001. Suitable for hospital purposes.

4. Officers' quarters. Size, 41 by 58; reinforced concrete; tile roof; steam heat; electric light; water and sewer; 4 water-closets; 4 wash sinks; 4 washstands; 4 bathtubs; 4 laundry tubs; cost of building, $24,018. Suitable for hospital purposes.

5. Bachelor officers' quarters. Building, 97 by 33; each wing 24 by 48 feet; foundation, stone and concrete; walls, brick; roof, slate; steam heat; electric light; water and sewer; 9 water-closets; 3 wash sinks; 9 washstands; 2 laundry tubs; 9 bathtubs; cost of building, $41,626. Suitable for hospital purposes.

6. Hospital. Size, 46 by 55; 27 by 45; 34 by 50 feet; walls, brick; foundation, stone; roof, slate; electric light; hot-water heat; water and sewer; 8 water-closets; 9 wash sinks; 12 washstands; 6 baths; fully equipped with all modern hospital appliances; cost of building, $44,708.

8. Bakery. Size, 28 by 51 feet. Built of stone; slate roof; stove heat; electric light; water and sewer; 1 wash sink; 2 ovens, capacity 864 pounds bread; cost of building, $4,879.

9. Bowling alley. Size, 100 by 18 feet; wings each 3 by 16 feet; built of brick, stone, and concrete; stove heat; electric light; two alleys; cost of building, $5,012.

10. Gymnasium. Size, main building, 42 by 64 feet; each wing 34 by 52 feet; foundation, stone; walls, brick; roof, slate; steam heat; electric light; water and sewer; 2 water-closets; 2 urinals; 1 wash sink; 5 washbasins; 2 showers; cost of building, $24,757.73.

11. Fire station. Walls, brick; foundation, stone; roof, slate; floor, concrete; electric light; size, 25 by 43 feet; cost of building, $1,969.

12. Noncommissioned officers' quarters. Size, 31 by 32–29 by 39 feet; foundation, stone; walls, brick; roof, slate; stove heat; electric light; water and sewer; 2 water-closets; wash sinks; washstands and bathtubs; cost of building, $5,218. Suitable for hospital purposes.

13. Band barracks. Size, 76 by 39 feet; foundation, stone; walls, brick; roof, slate; electric light; steam heat; water and sewer; 4 water-closets; 2 urinals; wash sinks and washstands; 2 laundry tubs; 2 bath showers and bathtubs; cost of building, $24,964. Suitable for hospital purposes.

14. Three single barracks. Size, main building, 37 by 110 feet; wing, 37 by 64 feet; foundation and walls, stone; roof, slate; steam heat; electric light; water and sewer; 8 water-closets; 6 urinals; 2 wash sinks; 14 washstands; 3 showers; 4 bathtubs; cost of each building, $31,420. Suitable for hospital purposes.

15. Single barracks. Building, 110 by 27 feet; each wing, 36 by 27 feet; walls, brick; foundation, stone; roof, slate; electric light; steam heat; water and sewer; 8 water-closets; 4 urinals; 2 wash sinks; 14 washstands; 4 laundry tubs; 4 shower baths and tubs; cost of building, $45,850. Suitable for hospital purposes.

16. Two double barracks. Size building, 39 by 72 feet; two wings each 39 by 103 feet; foundation, stone; walls, brick; roof, slate; electric lights; steam heat; water and sewer; 16 water-closets; 12 urinals; 4 wash sinks; 28 washbasins; 8 showers; 6 bathtubs; cost of each building, $67,410. Suitable for hospital purposes.

17. Administration building. Size, 92 by 44 feet; foundation, stone; walls, brick; roof, slate; steam heat; electric light; water and sewer; 3 water-closets; 2 urinals; 5 washstands; cost of building, $29,180. Suitable for hospital purposes.

18. Four brick stables. Size, 155 by 67 feet; foundation, stone; walls, brick; roof, slate; floor, clay, concrete, and brick; electric light; water and sewer; cost of building, $17,375.

19. Four stone stables. Size, 156 by 67 feet; walls and foundation, stone; roof, tile; floor, clay, concrete, and brick; electric light and water; cost of building, $18,468.75.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the numerous amendments that have been adopted and agreed upon, it seems to me there is very little difference between the suggestions of the committee and the so-called Madden amendment.

Under the Madden amendment, as I take it, the method of procedure that the committee recommends can be adopted, if such is the judgment of the President. Therefore I think that we will accomplish more for the welfare of the hospitalization needs of the veterans by adopting the Madden amendment. We are all agreed on one point. There is only a division of views as to the manner in which we shall accomplish the purpose at which we are aiming. We all want the very best service possible for the hospital needs of the veterans. There is absolute unanimity of agreement upon that point. The difference that has appeared here in debate to-day is simply as to the method of obtaining this object. We have followed the requests of people interested in legislation for the veterans in some of our previous bills, and when you decentralize authority, to my mind, you ruin the object for which the legislation is proposed. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BURROUGHS] yesterday pointed out marked difficulties that we are having under the decentralization method of caring for veterans. We never have had in my experience since the adoption of the war-risk insurance act as poor service in New England as we are getting to-day. Every New England Member can furnish a similar list to that furnished by the gentleman from New Hampshire yesterday. The authority is in no one place, and that is what I am afraid we are getting ready to do if we do not centralize the authority for construction. There is under the Government authority ample ability to construct the needed hospitals. Why establish a new system of architectural and constructive methods? That is what we would have to do, and as a result we would delay the needs of the hospital plans just that long. It seems to me that such a body as would necessarily have to be created under the Veterans' Bureau would mean just that much longer delay in caring for the needy soldiers. The demand is for immediate construction, not the establishment of additional machinery. Therefore, in view of the experience that we have had under the decentralization system of the Sweet bill, it seems to me we should at least place this authority in the hands of the President solely, and let him choose the instrumentalities under which the construction shall proceed. [Applause.]

In expressing the views I have I am offering no criticism aimed at the head of the Veterans' Bureau. On the contrary, I regard him as an efficient executive, already overburdened with duties. In my judgment the best results for the veterans will be obtained and in the shortest space of time by giving all the authority to the President.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I agree absolutely with the statements which the gentleman from Massachusetts has just made with his reasoning, but not with his conclusions; I arrive at the opposite pole. On October 10, 1921, I offered a resolution in this House asking for a special committee to investigate what had become of the $18,600,000 that we appropriated on March 4 a year ago, because not one bed had been furnished to any disabled soldier. Colonel Forbes, although in no way to blame, was popularly supposed to be responsible for the situation, was being criticized to me, and, I presume, to every other Member of Congress. I made an investigation personally of the situation. I went to the Treasury Department and spent more than an hour with the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury having this matter in charge. I was introduced to the chairman of the Board of Consultants, and I was able to arrive at a conclusion in my own mind as to where the responsibility lay. I then proceeded with a number of Members of Congress to put Colonel Forbes through a cross-examination as to what could and should have been done with this money, and he demonstrated satisfactorily to us that with that amount of money and the facilities which he should have been able to borrow from the Treasury Department he would have had 30 to 50 per cent of the beds which the money appropriated by Congress would have furnished occupied, instead of having these men dying in the streets and subjected to the misery and cruelties to which they have been subjected in some of these private hospitals, and I do not except the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, whence they have been driven to the streets, and where they called in a sheriff to quell a riot because they could not keep order in the tuberculosis ward in the soldiers' home. The President wants the power put with the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. We know what he wants, and we are satisfied that it is the only place other than the Treasury Department for this power to repose. We have tested the Treasury Department, and on account, not of the fault of any one man, but on account of the peculiar system there adopted, on account of the wishes of these physicians to do an ideal sort of job, while overlooking the emergency, forgetting that men were suffering and needing attention, nothing was accomplished while our soldiers died neglected. It seems to me we should take the responsibility of placing the direction of this construction under Colonel Forbes, with power in the President to supervise and to veto anything that he thinks improper. [Applause.]

May I add that the Members of this House who assisted me in the investigation were SAMUEL S. ARENTZ, of Nevada; ROY O. WOODRUFF, of Michigan; and LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM, of Massachusetts.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, a billion dollars for aviation and not a plane on the firing line; $18,600,000 for beds over a year ago and not a bed for a sick soldier! It seems to me that we will be making no mistake in placing this responsibility where it belongs, namely, in the Veterans' Bureau. We are all of one mind. There is no question about the sentiment of this House. We are all in favor of voting $17,000,000 for these sick men, and you know and I know that there are other $17,000,000 to follow when they are needed. We are all of one mind, but we differ as to methods. We did not get results a year ago in the Treasury Department. Let us try the Veterans' Bureau. We have heard some unkind things said here this afternoon about Colonel Forbes. There is not a man in this House who does not believe that Colonel Forbes is honest. There is not a man here that does not believe that Colonel Forbes is a fine executive, that he is skilled, that he is sympathetic, that he is capable, that he has a big heart. There is not a man here who does not know that he has been giving of himself night and day to this service. If there are ills in the Veterans' Bureau, and we all know there are, they should be laid at the door of Congress. I want to say to you that this decentralization and the sending of the files all over the country has caused more trouble to you and to me and to the boys that we are trying to serve than anything else in connection with the Veterans' Bureau. I hope that Congress will wake up some day and rectify the mistake. The Sweet bill is a good bill; it is doing good service; but there were some mistakes, and they ought to be corrected. That is a matter for Congress. I do not like to see Congress in a discussion of this kind criticize those who are not to blame. I believe if we turn the $17,000,000 over to the Veterans' Bureau, under the direction of Colonel Forbes, under the supervision of the President of the United States, we will get results. Let us try it. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I am exceedingly sorry that my good friend from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] chose to say what he did say about Colonel Forbes. Some of you know perhaps, and many of you may not know, that Colonel Forbes was a soldier in the Boxer rebellion, that he was an overseas soldier in the late war. He went over the top time and again. He was gassed three times, in addition to being wounded. One time his lung was almost burned out with gas, and he was burned with mustard gas until his entire body now is in a sensitive condition. He told me this himself, and he gave me the details. He is at this moment suffering as one of our overseas veterans while you are criticizing him. Do you believe that a man like that, a soldier like that, can not be trusted, who has his whole heart wrapped up in the cause of his sick fellow soldiers, would betray them or fail to do all he can to help secure treatment of the sick men who were over there with him? Gentlemen, it is preposterous, and you ought to be ashamed of yourselves to treat him this way. [Applause.]

I say it is an outrage. Gentlemen, of course there are mistakes everywhere that can not be helped. I have been in the executive departments some years myself, and in a new bureau like that there are bound to be errors. But it is not the fault of Colonel Forbes. He has worked as hard as any living man, trying his utmost to make provision for these sick and disabled ex-service men to whom we owe so much.

The gentleman from Massachusetts is mistaken when he says that with the amendment agreed upon the section reported by the committee and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois are practically the same. They are not the same. The committee in trying to perfect the measure has accepted certain minor amendments, but the main proposition still remains, that the President himself can not carry out the details of this work any more than he can carry out the details of the work of any department; and you might just as well provide that the President shall run the State Department, now so ably run by the distinguished Secretary of State, or say that any other department of the Government shall be run directly by the President. It can not be done as an administrative proposition. I have followed the gentleman from Illinois. I followed his committee; I always vote regular. But this committee has worked hard and long and has brought in here this present bill, and is willing to accept amendments suggested by the gentlemen which apparently improve its details. That is what the five-minute rule is for. I say I think the Members of this House ought to stand by the committee and vote down the Madden amendment, because that amendment means that the Veterans' Bureau, now authorized to have charge of the hospitalization of these men, shall be cut out from the consideration of the main question, which is the quickest way to construct these hospitals. That is all I have to say, boys, except as I stand by your committees I hope you will stand by mine. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The Chair would like to state the parliamentary situation. There is an amendment to perfect the text by the gentleman from Kentucky. There is also an amendment by way of substitute to the first section offered by the gentleman from Illinois, to which the gentleman from Ohio has offered an amendment. There has also been read for information, but not yet offered, an amendment by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON]. There is also offered an amendment to the amendment by the gentleman from Texas, and an amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair should say those two last amendments have been read for information but not yet offered. The vote first comes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky and then it will be in order for the gentleman from South Dakota to offer his amendment.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. May we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky: Page 2, line 13, after the word "bureau" insert the words "subject to the approval of the President."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to offer my amendment, and ask the Clerk to report it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 1 insert: "Provided, however, That the director, with the approval of the President, may utilize such suitable buildings, structures, and grounds now owned by the United States as may be available for the purposes aforesaid, and the President is hereby authorized by Executive order to transfer any such buildings, structures, and grounds to the United States Veterans' Bureau upon the request of the director thereof."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McSWAIN. No; the amendment is to the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman. It is an amendment to the text, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McSWAIN: Page 2, line 6, after the word "personnel" insert the words "and also to provide proper and suitable recreational centers."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG to the amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: After the word "facilities," at the end of line 2 of the Madden amendment, insert "and to take over the present activities tending to provide hospital facilities."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 15 of the substitute, after the word "personnel," by striking out the period, inserting a comma, and the following: "and to furnish all patients who are admitted to said hospital or hospitals with suitable and comfortable clothing whenever it shall appear that said patients are without financial means and not drawing compensation."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois as amended by the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were—ayes 73, noes 70.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. LANGLEY and Mr. MADDEN to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 81.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the construction of new hospitals or dispensaries, or the alteration, remodeling, or repair of all hospitals or dispensaries heretofore or hereafter constructed shall be done in such manner as the President may determine, and he is authorized to require the architectural, engineering, constructing, or other forces of any of the departments of the Government to do or assist in such work.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: On page 2, strike out lines 14 to 20, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. Any sum allotted hereunder by the President for additional hospital or out-patient dispensary facilities shall be expended by such agency or agencies of the Government as he may determine for the most efficient, expeditious, and economical accomplishment of the purposes of this act."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in connection with this amendment, now that we have placed the responsibility on the President, this gives him the power to name any agency that he chooses to name to carry out the purposes of the act, and I think it may be fairly said, with the responsibility on the President, if one agency named by him fails to function he will see that some other agency is named that will function.

Now, what is the purpose of the act? The purpose of the act is to supply facilities for the care of the wounded and sick soldiers. Complaint has constantly been made that these facilities have been retarded, that we have not had the action that we should have from the agencies that have had charge in the past. This certainly centralizes the responsibility. It centralizes the power, and the amendment that I offer is logical, in view of the adoption of the amendment that had already been offered by me. Here is an opportunity to place the responsibility, and there is no restriction on the right of the President to place that responsibility in the agency that he may name. He will not, if this amendment is adopted, be compelled to come back to Congress for further legislation if the agency indicated by him fails to function, whereas under the bill without this amendment no action could be taken by anybody in the world, not even by the President, to force action on the part of the agency that has the responsibility under the act, without coming back to the Congress for further legislation.

Now, what we want is expeditious action. This offers the opportunity for that expeditious action. We are all in favor of doing everything we can for the veterans who are wounded or sick. No one is more anxious to do it than I, and I have been importuned time out of mind by men who have not been able to get the facilities to which they were entitled. Here we offer the opportunity to place the responsibility somewhere, and I am willing to place that responsibility on the President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the Members will take the time to glance over section 2 of the bill they will observe that it does exactly what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] contends ought to be done. It says that the construction of new hospitals or dispensaries—I think the word "enlargement" ought to be in there, preceding "remodeling or repair of all hospitals"—shall be done in such manner as the President may determine, and he is authorized to require the architectural, engineering, constructing, or other forces of any of the departments of the Government to do or assist in such work.

Now, it simply means, Mr. Chairman, if you are going to tear all to pieces this bill which the committee has labored on earnestly, and had hearings on day after day for nearly a year, and which the President states that he wanted done, and let anybody who has not paid attention to these hearings—I do not care whether or not it is the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, for whom I have the highest regard—to try to rewrite in a day on the floor the bill reported by this committee, I do not think it is the thing to do.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Does the gentleman propose to insert the word "extension" between the words "alteration" and "remodeling"?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; either that or the word "enlargement," I do not care which. I propose to offer that amendment. I do not want my remarks to be construed as in anywise reflecting upon the Committee on Appropriations. But there are 435 Members of the House and only 35 members on the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman will not assert that I am the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LANGLEY. No; but the gentleman is the distinguished chairman of it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, I only heard the Madden amendment read from the desk, and I may be inaccurate in my recollection concerning it; but the only difference, if I recall it correctly, between that and section 2 of the bill is that the bill as reported by the committee would confine the President in employing architectural and engineering assistance to the departments of the Government, while under the Madden amendment he can go outside of the departments of the Government.

Mr. LANGLEY. It would mean he could go out and employ private individuals.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is all the difference, is it not?

Mr. LANGLEY. What effect would that have on the existing law and the section of the Revised Statutes limiting it to competitive bidding?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Understand me; I am not speaking from any advocacy or any opposition to the Madden amendment at the present moment. I want to find out just what it is before I vote on it. But, if I understand it correctly, the bill would limit the President in selecting departments of the Government for the architectural and engineering work, whereas the Madden amendment would enable him to go outside and select people outside the Government service.

May I first ask the gentleman if I am correct about that?

Mr. MADDEN. It would. And in the next section I have a limitation on the amount that can be expended for the architect's fee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from Tennessee that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is a lawyer, and I used to be accused of being one myself. He knows that the general rule of construction is that whenever you impose a specific duty upon a specific individual the general law governing that necessarily applies. The general law provides for the manner in which these buildings may be constructed and provides that it shall be by competitive bidding except in the case of a public exigency. That is section 3709.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does not the Madden amendment confine the President to the use of governmental agencies?

Mr. MADDEN. I think the Madden amendment places too great a limitation upon him.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The Madden amendment certainly confines the President to the use of Government agencies. It is in terms written that way. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

Mr. LANGLEY. Not to be taken out of my time, if you please.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: On page 2, strike out lines 14 to 20, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. Any sum alloted hereunder by the President for additional hospital or out-patient dispensary facilities shall be expended by such agency or agencies of the Government as he may determine for the most efficient, expeditious, and economical accomplishment of the purposes of this act."

Mr. LANGLEY. That is practically the same proposition. We are all, of course, in favor of its being expeditious; but it is practically the same thing that is in this amendment, and the gentleman apparently simply wants to get in a substitute drawn by himself instead of the proposition of the committee.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield to allow me to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. RAYBURN. I had understood that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was intended to mean exactly the opposite; that it was intended to restrict the President rather than to allow him to go on the outside.

Mr. MADDEN. I made a mistake in answering the gentleman from Tennessee. It is intended to restrict.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think the gentleman made a mistake in answering. In so far as the expenditures upon actual construction are concerned, under the Madden amendment they will be expended through such department of the Government as the President may designate.

Mr. MADDEN. That is true.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. MADDEN. But the work——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But as to the drawing of plans, as to the engineering, then the President can go entirely outside the Government and employ private persons.

Mr. MADDEN. I think he could, but then the next section restricts the amount that can be expended for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments numbered 43, 47, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 58, 59, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 82, 91, 112, and 113, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had requested a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL HOSPITAL FACILITIES FOR THE EX-SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes more. I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. KOPP. The committee drew this bill, as the gentleman knows, in accordance with the wishes of the President, that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau should be intrusted with this building, subject to his approval. Now, the statement has been made by the gentleman from Illinois that if the Director of the Veterans' Bureau should prove incapable of doing this work, or should not perform it properly, the President could do nothing until he came back to Congress and asked us to change the law. Is it not a fact that the President can at any time remove the Director of the Veterans' Bureau and employ a new one?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly. Anybody with any ordinary sense knows that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. He can not remove him.

Mr. LANGLEY. My long experience in the public service enables me to say that the appointive power, with the exception of civil-service employees, is coequal with the power to dismiss, so the gentleman from Illinois is not correct.

Mr. MANN. As far as the original provision and the Madden amendment are concerned, do they not both authorize whatever governmental agency has charge of this to have the work done outside?

Mr. LANGLEY. They may do it, yes; except there is a general law to which I called attention a little while ago, section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that all work must be done subject to competitive bidding except in the case of a public exigency.

Mr. MANN. Here is the law which supersedes any law on the statute books. It says the construction, and so forth, shall be done in such manner as the President may determine.

Mr. LANGLEY. Of course the gentleman knows that the President must enforce existing law under his oath of office.

Mr. MADDEN. But this will be the existing law that he obeys when he determines how it shall be done.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman is a lawyer, I believe, and he knows that all acts must be construed in pari materia, and he knows the President would not violate existing law.

Mr. MANN. I am not saying that he would. I can not see any difference between the two propositions.

Mr. LANGLEY. I can.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Ohio that the gentleman from Kentucky has an amendment which is preferential.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "the," insert the word "extension."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN add the following: "Provided further, That the director, with the approval of the President, may utilize such suitable buildings, structures, and grounds now owned by the United States as may be available for the purposes aforesaid, and the President is hereby authorized by Executive order to transfer such buildings, structures, and grounds to the United States Veterans' Bureau upon the request of the director thereof."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order that there is no such words as the "Veterans' Bureau" in the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. WILLIAMSON: At the end of the amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN add: "Provided, That the President may utilize such suitable buildings, structures, and grounds now owned by the United States as are available for the purposes aforesaid, and the President is hereby authorized by Executive order to transfer any such buildings, structures, and grounds to the United States Veterans' Bureau upon request of the director thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment to section 2.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after section 2, the following: "Section 3——

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from South Dakota asked to offer an amendment to section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. That will take precedence. The Chair understood that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio was to section 2. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WILLIAMSON: At the end of section 2 insert the following: "Provided, That the President may utilize such suitable buildings, structures, and grounds now owned by the United States as may be available for the purposes aforesaid, and the President is hereby authorized by Executive order to transfer any such buildings, structures, and grounds to the United States Veterans' Bureau upon the request of the director thereof.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman from South Dakota a question?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This authorizes the President to transfer any building owned by the Government of the United States to be used for hospital purposes if in his opinion it is satisfactory for hospital purposes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. At the request of the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. DYER. He might ask for the Capitol.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If that is the gentleman's idea, I am in considerable sympathy with his purpose, but this is a law presumably being made to last a long time. Whether it is desirable to place the power in the hands of the President of the United States that would enable him to transfer the Capitol to the Veterans' Bureau for hospital purposes is a proposition that I am not quite sure I am ready to commit myself to.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. He may transfer such buildings, structures, and grounds as are available, and the Capitol or the House Office Building would not be available.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It would be if Congress was not in session. You are putting a tremendous control in the President's hands over public buildings.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. It might be helped by putting in the word "suitable" after the word "available."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman what specific purpose he has in mind by adding this amendment, what conditions actually exist?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The language of this bill is identical with the law already in force, and the Secretary of War holds that he has no authority to turn over any building to the Veterans' Bureau for hospital purposes. The object is to give the President authority to turn over such buildings as are not being utilized in the War Department to the Veterans' Bureau. There are certain buildings to-day that could be utilized by the Veterans' Bureau, but the War Department says that it has no authority to turn over any building, although the Secretary of War is entirely willing to turn it over.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Some camps——

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Camps and any other building that would be suitable for hospital purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Are these buildings that the gentleman thinks should be turned over now in active use by any other department of the Government?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. They are not, and have not been for many years.

Mr. MANN. Why would it not be perfectly proper, then, to add, after the words "United States," the words "not otherwise in active use"?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I am willing to accept that modification.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think that would be a desirable amendment.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Illinois a question? It may be desired by the Veterans' Bureau to take Fort Porter, which is located in the city of Buffalo, for hospital purposes. The War Department may be willing to surrender it. It now contains a battalion of soldiers.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that the battalion of soldiers would be removed before it was turned over, in any event, and if a battalion of soldiers was removed it would not then be in active use.

Mr. MacGREGOR. That is what I wanted to get at.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Recently the President, by Executive order, transferred a portion of Jefferson Barracks, Mo., a military reservation, to the Veterans' Bureau for the purpose of putting up a hospital there for wounded soldiers. Would this amendment which the gentleman suggests interfere with that?

Mr. MANN. I will be frank to say that I do not know.

Mr. DYER. It says "not being used for any other purpose."

Mr. MANN. I suggested the words "not otherwise in active use."

Mr. DYER. This is in active use, of course.

Mr. MANN. Then they would not transfer it while it is in active use.

Mr. DYER. They have already done so.

Mr. MANN. That is already settled then. That is under existing law. Existing law provides for certain transfers, but it was held by the War Department in the case the gentleman from South Dakota has in mind that the existing law does not cover the fort up there, and he desires to cover it. I do not think it would be wise to permit the President to turn over the Capitol Building for any such use.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in my amendment after the words "United States" the words "not otherwise in active use."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, do I understand the modification reads "not now otherwise in active use"?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No; "not otherwise in active use."

Mr. WINGO. My understanding is that there are about four Army posts that the War Department thinks might well be dispensed with, and that Congress does not agree to that. If this amendment should be adopted with the language suggested, leaving out the word "now," all on earth they would have to do would be for the Secretary of War to remove the troops and quit using those four posts for the time being, and then the President could make an order abolishing those Army posts even though Congress does not want it done.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Oh, I do not think there is the slightest danger of anything of that kind being done by the President of the United States.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not think the President will carry out the recommendations of the Secretary of War in respect to that?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I think the President will turn over buildings only, not being used by the War Department.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman know of any Army posts not now in active use?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes; Fort Meade, in South Dakota.

Mr. WINGO. What other one?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That is the only one that I have in mind now.

Mr. WINGO. If that is what the gentleman has in mind, would it not be safer legislation to specifically authorize the President, if he sees fit, by Executive order to turn over for hospital purposes that fort, specifically naming it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I do not think that we should specifically require the President to occupy or utilize any particular fort. I do not think the Congress should say what particular structures should be utilized, but if the Veterans' Bureau finds Fort Meade available and makes a request for it, I think the President should be authorized to turn it over.

Mr. WINGO. Heretofore the plan has been in the last Congress, when they wished to turn over Fort Logan H. Roots, in my State, to specifically by act of Congress, in one of the hospitalization bills, authorize the President to transfer it from the War Department for hospital purposes. I suggest that the gentleman's amendment takes control away from Congress, and under it they can abolish Army posts anywhere in the United States. I do not care particularly myself. There is no Army post in my district.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota as it is proposed to be modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. WILLIAMSON: At the end of section 2 add: "Provided, That the President may utilize such suitable buildings, structures, and grounds, now owned by the United States, not otherwise in active use, as may be available for the purposes aforesaid, and the President is hereby authorized, by Executive order, to transfer any such buildings, structures, and grounds to the United States Veterans' Bureau upon the request of the director thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota to modify his amendment in the manner indicated.

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by adding the word "now," so that it will read "not now otherwise in active use."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment by Mr. WINGO: After the word "not" and before the word "otherwise," in the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota, insert the word "now."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. I have an amendment at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, after the word "work," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "and to employ individuals and agencies not now connected with the Government, if in his opinion desirable, at such points as he may consider reasonable."

Mr. LANGLEY. An amendment has just been adopted adding certain language after line 23, so the gentleman's amendment should come after the amendment.

Mr. FISH. That is agreeable; let it come at the proper place.

Mr. WALSH. It is in the proper place.

Mr. FISH. Then line 20, after the word "work." The purpose of the amendment is to give authority to the President. There seems to be some dispute over that point, to go out and make these contracts with private builders. If this bill is anything at all it is an emergency measure, and where the White committee fell down is in the fact they did not employ the biggest contractors in the country, such as George A. Fuller and others, and get this work done in eight months. There are a number of big contractors in the country to-day who can take hold of these matters and complete these buildings inside of eight months, and that is the purpose of the amendment. I do not believe the chairman will have any objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will say I think the President has that authority under present law, and therefore, to make it entirely clear, I have no objection to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the Clerk's desk which I ask to have reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. NORTON: Insert after section 2 the following:
"SEC. 3. When the expenditure herein provided for exceeds $3,000, other than lands bought or the compensation of persons employed, the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau shall make contracts for buildings to be erected or remodeled or work to be done with the lowest and best bidder after advertising for proposals for not less than two weeks or more than four weeks in a newspaper in general circulation in the county where the building is to be constructed or the work performed."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment. I will say to the gentleman that I think perhaps if he modifies it to provide that the President shall make the contract——

Mr. NORTON. I will change it in that respect. I will modify it afterwards.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman ought to modify it before he discusses it.

Mr. NORTON. I will modify it in that respect. I ask unanimous consent that it may be modified as suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. NORTON: Insert after section 2 the following:
"SEC. 3. When the expenditure herein provided for exceeds $3,000, other than lands bought or compensation of persons employed, the President shall make a contract for buildings to be erected or remodeled or work to be done with the lowest and best bidder, after advertising for proposals for not less than two weeks or more than four weeks in a newspaper in general circulation in the county where the building is to be constructed or the work to be performed."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the entire fault found by Director Forbes with what has been done was mainly for the reason that this was purchase and hire work, as it is called. In other words, that of this $18,600,000 more than one-third was spent without any contract of any kind whatsoever. Now I will call attention to what Mr. Wetmore and what Director Forbes said on this subject before I proceed. I asked:

What did you finally say was the portion spent of the $18,600,000 by contract and the portion spent by purchase and hire? You have made two or three statements, and I do not remember what the final statement was. Was it 30 per cent or 40 per cent?

Mr. WETMORE. I mean 30 per cent of the cases.

Mr. NORTON. I mean what per cent, taking the entire amount of the appropriation?

Mr. WETMORE. I do not know. I can not say what per cent of the appropriation. Mr. Von Nerta, who is present, has the figures.

Mr. VON NERTA. Of the contract at the present time it is about 65 per cent; under purchase and hire, 35 per cent. Two additional hospitals, however, will go under the contract—Tuskegee and Perryville—and then the percentage will be 80 per cent contract and 20 per cent purchase and hire.

Then a few lines below:

Mr. NORTON. Then it might run $5,000 or $6,000 a week that he had the authority to spend, or more?

Mr. WETMORE. It might. The idea I am trying to convey to the committee is that these men are not hampered from lack of proper authority in getting along with the work.

So, gentlemen, you see that $6,000,000 at least of this $18,600,000 was spent by what they call "purchase and hire," without any contract being made. Now, I am not charging that was wrongfully spent; but the opportunity is too great for any Congress to allow. Let us see what Director Forbes says on the subject.

I read:

Colonel FORBES. No. I want to make myself clear on that. The method of purchase and hire of buildings is all wrong. I think the only way to award a contract is to call for competitive bids and award the contract to the lowest responsible bidder.

Then down further he says:

You could go to many reputable concerns and engage them to draw your plans and you could call for bids among reputable people and you would get a reputable bid, and you would have your work done on time and in such a manner as would pass inspection.

That is the opinion of the man that you are now putting in charge of this work. He said if you made a contract it would be done and you would get reputable work. I do not know what he means by it. Further on, and in answer to a question by Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska, Colonel Forbes said:

My dear sir, the Treasury Department is doing the work themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Colonel Forbes says:

The only way to do honest work in any class of business is by competitive bids.

That is the expression of the gentleman you are now putting in charge. Then he goes on to say:

The term of purchase and hire is used with a view to expediency, but there is no expediency, as a report will show.

Now, gentlemen, it has been stated that this work is covered by general statute. I make the statement that it is not covered in any way whatsoever at the present time by general statute. There is not any statute on the books requiring any part of this work to be done under contract. The statute referred to has nothing to do with this kind of a contract. The only work of this nature that requires a contract is where you build lighthouses. They are specifically provided for. Gentlemen, you know that not a city in the United States would think of making a contract even for work to cost $500 without advertising for bids. I do not say it is wrong, but the opportunity for wrongdoing is too great.

You are putting on the President the expenditure of this enormous sum, $17,000,000. The President should be protected at least to the extent that this money should not be expended until bids have been asked for and received. Therefore I think it would be unwise and unsatisfactory to pass any bill of this nature through the House involving this enormous expenditure and say to any man, "You can expend this money without any contract whatsoever."

To remedy emergency cases I have inserted the limitation of $3,000 and requested advertisement for only two weeks. They have been almost two years doing nothing. Two weeks is none too long. A protection should be placed here. The section of the Revised Statutes which has been referred to by the chairman of the committee [Mr. LANGLEY] does not apply to this matter in any way whatsoever. I wish I had the time to read it. I would like to ask for further time in which to show that this section does not apply at all in this case. It applies only when you are purchasing things for a department, and then you have to advertise for competitive bids. But by purchase and hire all this work can be done under the bill we have here. Strange as it may seem, there is no law to require bids for this work. I would like to see you point to any statute, with all the work that is going on here and throughout the United States, that requires a person to advertise for bids of any kind whatsoever when a building is to be constructed; not when it is to be furnished, but when it is to be constructed. I would like to see the statute covering that subject. I say there is not a city in the Union, not one, when $500 is to be expended where they do not require an advertisement to be had and let the contract to the lowest bidder. Therefore I think this amendment should go into this bill to protect every man who votes for it, and especially to protect the President. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make one suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] and others. The gentleman's amendment provides that the President make a contract on everything over $3,000. I suppose that means a great many different items under the provisions of this bill. The Madden amendment, which so far stands as the action of the committee, provides that the President shall select agencies for the acquirement of these hospital facilities. It does not pretend to say—it would be abhorrent to say—that the President should give attention to all the details in the acquirement of these different facilities; and I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that it seems to me odd, if not absurd, to say that the President himself shall make contracts in all of these cases.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. NORTON. It seemed perfectly absurd to me that it should be placed under the President direct. I thought it was better the way it was in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the House acts, and acts contrary to my opinion, I will not say it is absurd, because I am not so fresh as to say that when the House has done anything it is absurd. I only say in advance, it seems to me absurd. Now, if the House wants to say that the President, with all the duties he has to perform, shall give attention to the making of a contract if you buy furniture, or do plumbing, or acquire a building, or build a chimney, or do anything of that sort, very well. But it seems to me it is adding a good many burdens to the President. I have no objection to the principle involved.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman is making an excellent argument. I wish to thank him for confirming the argument I made a little while ago against the Madden amendment for putting too much of a burden on the President.

Mr. MANN. I am not opposing the amendment. The Madden amendment is all right. It provides that the President shall have authority; and thereupon one opposed to the Madden amendment offers an amendment to it, to make it ridiculous. I think we should vote down that ridiculous amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUMPHREYS: On page 2, after line 20, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 4. That the foregoing hospitals and other facilities shall be available for veterans of the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion suffering from neuropsychiatric and tubercular ailments and diseases."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman who is in charge of the bill a question.

Mr. LANGLEY. Do you mean the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]? [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Anybody who can give me this information. When we passed the other bill last year for the $18,600,000 it carried this provision as section 6. I was wondering why it was dropped out of this bill?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Our committee adopted an amendment substantially, I think, in the same language.

Mr. LANGLEY. I did not quite catch the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. My amendment is the same as section 6 of the other bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Then I rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the Chair to the fact that I have a committee amendment to be proposed as section 4 of this bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. In my time will the gentleman read that?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Let us hear this amendment read first.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be read in the time of the gentleman.

Mr. LANGLEY. This is the amendment adopted by our committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That all hospital facilities under the control and jurisdiction of the United States Veterans' Bureau shall be available for veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine Insurrection, and the Boxer Rebellion suffering from neuropsychiatric and tubercular ailments and diseases.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The amendment that I have offered ought to be adopted in the place of the one the gentleman offers. His amendment provides that all hospital facilities under the control and jurisdiction of the United States Veterans' Bureau shall be available. We do not know just where the President is going to put this, as I understand it. I have offered mine exactly as it was before, and it says that the foregoing hospitals and other facilities shall be available for veterans of the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, and the Boxer Rebellion suffering from neuropsychiatric and tubercular ailments and diseases. That is exactly the language in the bill that we passed before.

Mr. LANGLEY. I was conversing with one of my colleagues back there and did not catch exactly the wording of the gentleman's amendment. I do not want to be put in the attitude of failing to offer the amendment in accordance with the instructions of the committee. I have not the slightest preference as to who shall offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in the present parliamentary situation the gentleman's amendment, being offered as section 4, would not be in order until after section 3 has been read.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It may be either section 3 or section 4. I have no desire to be the author of this myself. I had just as lief that it come from the committee. All I want is to have it in the law. If the gentleman will offer it I will withdraw mine.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am going to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi withdraw his amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will offer mine as section 4 when we get to it.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order after section 3 has been read. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That for carrying into effect the preceding paragraphs relating to additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $17,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: At the end of the section add: "Not to exceed 3 per cent of this sum shall be available for the employment in the District of Columbia and in the field of necessary technical and clerical assistance at the customary rates of compensation, exclusively to aid in the preparation of plans and specifications for the projects authorized herein and for the supervision of the execution thereof, and for traveling expenses, field-office equipment, and supplies in connection therewith."

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a perfecting amendment to this same section.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman offers it as an amendment to the amendment it is not in order.

Mr. KINDRED. I want to amend the $17,000,000 by proposing to make it $35,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order at this time. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard just a moment on the amendment. It seems to me it is too much of a limitation upon the power that the bill proposes to confer upon the President. I can not see the necessity of the limitation fixed in the amendment offered by the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. If I may be heard upon it I wish simply to say that under the language of section 3 there is no limitation whatever on the amount that can be expended out of the $17,000,000 for architects' fees and for clerks or inspectors or anything needed in the preparation of the plans. I am only seeking to preserve as much as possible of the $17,000,000 that we are appropriating for the construction of hospitals, and not to have any large sum out of that amount spent for clerical hire and other things in connection with the preparation of the plans.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Why should there be any expense at all except for traveling expenses?

Mr. MADDEN. It costs money, no matter where you are; but if you let it alone and place no limit on it, nobody on earth will know how much they will spend for that purpose.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Under this bill they can not go out and hire architects outside of some branch of the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. Seventeen million dollars is at their disposal, and they can employ as many people as they like in the building of these hospitals.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman means in preparing the plans.

Mr. MADDEN. In any way they like.

Mr. KINCHELOE. My experience is that they spend enough.

Mr. RUCKER. They could not do it without the President's consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 25, strike out "$17,000,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$35,000,000."

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard very briefly on the proposal to increase the amount of the appropriation carried by this bill, for the reason that the 6,000 beds which were provided by the Sixty-sixth Congress in the appropriation act carrying $18,600,000, will not take care of the 9,000 neuropsychiatric and tubercular and other cases not now under treatment in Government-controlled hospitals, but "farmed out" in State or private institutions, but will leave 3,000 of these patients unprovided for.

The estimate of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau is for 6,200 additional beds. This appropriation of $17,000,000 at the rate of cost of each bed provided under the $18,600,000 appropriation, namely, about $3,500 for each hospital bed, will provide for about 5,800 hospital beds. Therefore, it is clear that under the program of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau we will be short, even after this appropriation is expended and we have 5,800 beds—we will be short approximately 3,000 hospital beds. I submit that before a single hospital which is provided for in this bill will be completed and available there will be, under the same ratio of increase of neuropsychiatric cases and tubercular cases—25 per cent increase in each year—and on the basis of the existing 9,000 cases unprovided for, there will be 2,500 additional neuropsychiatric and tubercular cases each year. We are now providing for a little over 5,000. Therefore, before a single hospital will be available under this appropriation we will again be confronted by criticism and misunderstanding by the people of this country as to the motives of this Congress and this great Government.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we have to provide not only for the increase in new cases, as pointed out, but these cases will continue to increase, according to the actuaries of the Government, until 1929, but we will also have to provide for between 10,000 and 11,000 ex-service men who are now occupying unfit shack hospitals like that on Staten Island, the Forest Hills Hospital, which has been a disgrace to the Government. I hope that my amendment will be adopted providing $35,000,000 to establish and equip the hospitals that are actually and urgently needed, in order to properly hospitalize and care for these worthy wards of the United States Government.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. The gentleman proposes to increase this appropriation to $35,000,000. The director himself asked for $16,000,000 and $800,000 for the special enlargement of certain buildings. The committee added $200,000 and made the appropriation $17,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 3, line 23, page 2, to strike out the words "authorized to be."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 23, strike out the words "authorized to be."

Mr. MADDEN. To that, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is not authorized to make appropriations.

Mr. WALSH. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has followed the rule. This is an amendment from the floor.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has as much right to interfere with the Appropriations Committee as the Appropriations Committee has to interfere with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that apparently the amendment has the effect to make a direct appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. That is the purpose of the amendment, to dispense with the necessity of waiting for a deficiency appropriation bill. There have been delays, and here is an opportunity to obviate them. I offer an amendment which makes a direct appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman hold that it would have been in order in the first instance for the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to have reported a direct appropriation?

Mr. WALSH. No; it would be a violation of the rules of the House by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report a bill in the way that it will be if my amendment is adopted.

I am offering this amendment from the floor, and I am not a member of either the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment, which I have sent to the desk as a new section, and I am offering it as a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANGLEY: Page 2, after line 26, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That all hospital facilities under the control and jurisdiction of the United States Veterans' Bureau shall be available for veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion, suffering from neuropsychiatric and tubercular ailments and diseases."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10864, to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments thereto, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the so-called Madden substitute to section 1 of the bill, and on that I shall demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote upon the Williamson amendment to section 2 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The other amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the Madden amendment as a substitute to section 1.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the so-called Madden amendment having been reported as an entire substitute for section 1, if the amendment should be defeated in the House, then section 1 as reported to the House from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will remain in the bill as reported by that committee, will it not?

Mr. LANGLEY. But it has been amended.

Mr. MANN. But the amendments were not reported to the House. The only amendment reported to the House in respect to section 1 is the Madden amendment, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a new section. Certain amendments were agreed to in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union before the substitute was voted on, but they are not reported to the House and are not now before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois is correct. If the substitute be defeated, then the only proposition before the House will be the section as it was originally reported by the committee.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Madden amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, after the enacting clause, strike out all of section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the President is hereby authorized to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau, by the purchase and remodeling or extension of existing plants and by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise, or by the alteration and extension of existing Government hospital and outpatient dispensary facilities and equipment. Such hospitals and outpatient dispensary facilities shall include the necessary buildings and auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, approach work, roads and trackage facilities leading thereto, vehicles, live stock, furniture, equipment, and accessories, and shall also provide accommodations for officers, nurses and attending personnel, and to furnish all patients who are admitted to said hospital or hospitals with suitable and comfortable clothing whenever it shall appear that such patients are without financial means and not drawing compensation. The acceptance of gifts or donations for any of the purposes named herein is hereby authorized. Such hospital plants shall be of fireproof construction, and the location, cost, and nature thereof, whether for the treatment of tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric or general medical and surgical cases, shall be as the President shall direct."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, and on that the gentleman from Kentucky demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 168, answered "present" 1, not voting 124, as follows:

So the substitute as amended was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Linthicum (for) with Mr. Dyer (against).

Mr. Vare (for) with Mr. Sanders of Indiana (against).

Additional pairs:

Mr. Kline of New York with Mr. Campbell of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Butler with Mr. Riordan.

Mr. Volk with Mr. Vinson.

Mr. Smith of Idaho with Mr. Gallivan.
Mr. Funk with Mr. McDuffie.
Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] vote?
The SPEAKER. He did not.
Mr. LINTHICUM. I desire to recall my vote of "aye," and ask to be recorded as "Present," as I am paired with the gentleman.
Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I was not in the Hall listening——
The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. TOWNER. As I understand it the amendments upon which a separate vote was not demanded were adopted in gross. Is that correct?
Mr. MANN. There was one other amendment.
Mr. TOWNER. I know that is true, but that is not the point.
Then, Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order by an inquiry of the Speaker. It was stated by the Speaker before this vote was taken that the original text of section 1, if this amendment was defeated, would be that part of the bill adopted by the House.
Upon that proposition I desire to raise this question: The amendments being adopted in gross, and the Langley amendment having been adopted as one of the amendments adopted in gross, this vote being completed now, it stands as one of the amendments that has been adopted and confirmed by the House, and therefore section 1 does not revert to the original form but remains as amended by the vote that we took.
Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.
Mr. WALSH. When were those amendments reported to the House?
Mr. TOWNER. Those amendments were reported to the House by the Chairman of the committee, who reported all the amendments that were adopted by the committee.
Mr. WALSH. You struck out all those amendments by agreeing to the substitute, which was reported to the House.
Mr. TOWNER. The substitute was reported to the House, but these amendments were also reported to the House.
Mr. MANN. Oh, no.
Mr. WALSH. Did we not perfect the text of section 1, and after we had perfected it——
The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman clearly. Will the gentleman please repeat that?
Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], I was propounding an inquiry as to what took place with respect to the agreement to perfect the text of the bill. After that was done we agreed to the substitute for the perfected text, and that was adopted by the committee and reported to the House. Now, the House has rejected that substitute, but the amendments have never been reported to the House.
Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question in the time of the gentleman from Iowa?
Mr. TOWNER. Yes.
Mr. DOWELL. What is the use in perfecting the text unless it is to be used in the event the substitute is not adopted?
Mr. WALSH. If the substitute is voted down in the committee, the perfected text goes to the House. But if you have adopted a substitute and say, "We prefer this as the perfected text," then those amendments go by the board.
Mr. DOWELL. There would be no use in perfecting the text unless it would be to use it in the event the substitute is not adopted.
Mr. TOWNER. We are here now in the House to consider what was done by the committee. We have considered the question and voted upon it, and voted down the substitute; but we voted, when we voted on the amendments in gross, to perfect the text of section 1. We perfected the text by the Langley amendment. Otherwise we are placed in a ridiculous position. We can not perfect the bill, and the amendments adopted in the House go for nought.
Mr. WALSH. How could we vote on the perfecting of the text if we had agreed to adopt the substitute?
Mr. TOWNER. That has nothing to do with the action of the House.
Mr. LANGLEY. I want to assure the gentleman from Iowa that, whatever took place in the Committee of the Whole, we have voted on it in the House in such a way as to take care of all controverted points.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman assumes, I think, that those amendments were adopted in gross. The only amendments which were agreed to in gross were the amendments which were reported to the House. Suppose some gentleman offers an amendment in Committee of the Whole and some other gentleman offers an amendment to the amendment, and the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, but the amendment as amended is disagreed to. Would the gentleman claim that the amendment that had been agreed to and reported to the House was adopted?
Mr. TOWNER. That is entirely different.
Mr. MANN. I contend that it is the same thing.
Mr. TOWNER. It is not, Mr. Speaker. We agreed upon certain amendments to the text of the bill. Now we are in a situation where the substitute has been stricken out, and yet we agreed to the amendment that the committee agreed to when we agreed to the amendments in gross. There is no way in making effective the action of the House in overruling the Madden amendment unless the House may have the same right the committee had in perfecting the text of section 1, if it is to become part of the act.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TOWNER. Yes.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the House any right to act upon any amendments except those reported to it?
Mr. TOWNER. These amendments were reported to the House.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, no.
Mr. TOWNER. If anybody had asked for a vote on that particular amendment it would have been the duty of the Speaker to order it reported.
Mr. MANN. It was not reported.
Mr. TOWNER. An amendment can be reported to the House only by the chairman of the committee reporting the bill and stating that certain amendments were adopted in the committee. His language is general. He does not particularize. The Speaker then asks if a separate vote is demanded on any amendment, and as to the others, and all the others, they are put and voted on in gross.
Mr. WALSH. What would have become of these amendments if the House had adopted the substitute?
Mr. TOWNER. The House, if it had adopted the substitute, would have negatived those amendments, I answer the gentleman.
Let me state that again, Mr. Speaker, because I think the Speaker did not hear: If the House had adopted the substitute in their action just now all this matter would have been done away with, but it has not done so. But we have reverted to the original text. How? To the original text, as this House has decided it should be amended by the amendments adopted in the committee and also by the House.
Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TOWNER. Yes.
Mr. KINCHELOE. If the House is not able to consider the amendment to the original text, then by the same analogy it would not have the power to consider section 1 without amendment?
Mr. TOWNER. Exactly.
Mr. REED of West Virginia. Is it not true that when the Madden substitute was voted on it was a substitute for the perfected text and not for the original?
Mr. TOWNER. Why, certainly.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Was not the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois a substitute for the entire original first section of the bill as amended?
The SPEAKER. Yes.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then, if the ruling of the Speaker is to stand and the House is now to be permitted to vote only on the original text of the first section, how does the original text get here at all from the Committee of the Whole? The committee did not adopt it. The committee never even voted on the original section. The committee adopted the amended section. And therefore, as the substitute was a substitute for the amended section, either the amended text of the first section comes back from the committee, or no part of the amended section at all comes back. As I have said, the Committee of the Whole never passed on the original first section upon which we are now asked to vote—not at all. The committee voted only on the text of that section as amended. Therefore, if anything comes back here from the committee it must be the entire amended first section.
Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, in all this matter we have to revert to the original practice of the House of Representatives. At first there was no printing. There was an original bill which was in the hands of the Speaker. That bill was handed to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and went into the hands of the Clerk. When amendments were adopted it was not only done orally but by writing in the amendments so far as they perfected the bill, and when a substitute was adopted, the amended section being stricken out or indicated to be stricken out, the substitute which was adopted was attached to it. Under those circumstances when the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole reported the bill to the Speaker he reported a distinct entity, a bill written out, with its amendments written on it, the striking out, made and shown, and the substitute standing in its place. I suggest this only because while I am conscious that under the present practice it is supposed that nothing is reported except what remains, yet the report being made formerly by the committee of the original bill written out and presented to the House with all its amendments, I think we ought to consider that this is done so now, in order to get to any sensible conclusion. [Applause.]

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the proposition might present itself to us in this way: When we were voting in the committee we were voting on a certain choice. Now, what was that choice? It was a question whether we would take the Madden amendment or whether we would take the perfected text. That was the choice. Now, if the ruling of the Speaker is correct, we are to vote upon a different choice, namely, a choice between the Madden amendment and the original text, and we have the anomalous situation of a vote in the House which is supposed to be upon the same proposition that we voted upon in the committee, but which, as a matter of fact, is an entirely different proposition, and we are being asked to vote upon a proposition which is essentially different from the proposition that was presented to us in the committee, which, it seems to me, is an illogical result. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Speaker will remember that this identical question was presented to Mr. Speaker Clark, and he held that where the House turns down a substitute adopted in the Committee of the Whole it leaves the legislation in exactly the same condition as it was before the Committee of the Whole adopted the substitute.

The SPEAKER. Can the gentleman cite the Chair to that decision?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not remember the case, but that was his decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The decision was that where the House turned down a substitute that had been adopted in the Committee of the Whole it left the legislation in the identical situation in which it was before the substitute was adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That is, that it leaves it with the amendments in?

Mr. BLANTON. If the amendment is a mere substitute, the amendment would not go in.

The SPEAKER. No; but in this case the section had already been amended.

Mr. BLANTON. That would leave the amendments in it in exactly the same situation it was in before the substitute was adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes the gentleman would cite the Chair to that case.

Mr. BLANTON. I remember distinctly the decision, but I can not cite the case.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] was on the right track, but he did not go back far enough to get all the facts. When the Committee of the Whole began its consideration of the bill it was in a certain shape. There was then an opportunity to vote whether a given section remain in that shape or whether certain amendments should be added to it. Certain amendments were temporarily added to it, but immediately after they were rejected when the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union struck out all that it had done and substituted in its place something else known as a substitute amendment. When the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reported back to the House he correctly reported that the committee had had under consideration a certain bill and had directed him to report it with certain amendments. He reported the fact that the final action of the committee was the adopting of the substitute amendment in place of what was already in the bill. The House rejects the substitute and then we go back to what the original bill contained, for that is all that the House has any knowledge of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that the Committee of the Whole adopted a substitute in place of the original text. Is it not a fact that the Committee of the Whole adopted a substitute in place of the original text as amended?

Mr. TILSON. The action of the Committee of the Whole was to strike out the original paragraph and every amendment thereto, the Committee of the Whole preferring the substitute to the original text or to the original as amended, for the Committee of the Whole had its choice and could have adopted it in any form. The completed work of the committee was the substitute, and its final action alone is reported to the House.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true that the House has to act on the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. How do you get rid of the amendments which the report of the Committee of the Whole House submitted?

Mr. TILSON. By agreeing to or rejecting them. The Committe of the Whole House on the state of the Union itself got rid of the perfecting amendments by finally rejecting them in adopting the substitute.

Mr. DOWELL. No; it offered a substitute which the House rejected and you have the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole House, and there is no way except upon the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole to accept the amendments to the text.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the House can not agree to something that has never been reported to it, and when the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union makes a report he does not say "I report a bill with certain amendments that have been agreed to and certain amendments that have not been agreed to." The gentleman from Iowa would have one believe that the House, when it has voted upon amendments in gross, voted to agree to a lot of amendments with a proviso that if the substitute was eliminated, then the amendments were in it; that if it was voted down in the House, therefore we have agreed to these amendments. Certainly the House is not in a position where a vote it has already taken must depend on the vote which follows it. The situation is as I have stated. In my judgment the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa, reported the bill back to the House with certain amendments. The amendments were among those with the substitute for the first section of the bill. It makes no difference what was done to the section in the Committee of the Whole, the effect of it was to strike out the language as proposed in the bill, and whether there were amendments or no amendments to it the House or the Speaker has no means of knowing, because the substitute is simply one amendment. If the House rejected that one amend-, ment the text is left in the bill, because we do not report a negation or a negative to the House. It seems to me, having rejected the substitute which the committee agreed to and which it could have agreed to without amendment, we are not dependent on amendments which were agreed to in the committee and which the committee immediately negatived because that is the report to the House.

My recollection is that the present Speaker has ruled on this very question a few months ago. I do not recall the bill, but I have an impression it was the Sweet bill with the Wason bill incorporated in it. We were threatened with a tangle at that time which the Speaker eliminated by ruling that the original text of the bill was restored by voting down the substitute.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. In this particular case, what was the substitute for the original text? It is not at all impossible to suppose that the committee would have voted for the substitute not because it was a substitute for the original proposition, but a substitute for what was amended and therefore voted for this proposition. Now, the amendment which was adopted as a substitute has been voted down. Under the gentleman's contention, we can not have the question before us as it was presented to the committee and we certainly ought to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the gentleman from Iowa will appreciate the fact that the Chairman, when he reports to the House the final action of the committee, does not report the successive stages, as pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois. If we have a dozen amendments and amendments thereto, it is only the final action of the committee that is reported.

Mr. DOWELL. Was it not the final action of the Committee of the Whole when they adopted an amendment perfecting the text?

Mr. WALSH. It certainly was not, because we disregarded that when we adopted the substitute.

Mr. DOWELL. We offered a substitute for that, but we leave the text amended.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Is there any other means of this body, which is technically a separate body from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, gaining any information in respect to what the Committee of the Whole House did than through the Chairman of that committee?

Mr. WALSH. There is not.

Mr. BEGG. Then the Chairman reported that we had adopted this amendment which was a substitute for the paragraph, and in making that report, did he make any reference whatsoever to the action that the committee took on the original paragraph before we struck it out?

Mr. WALSH. He did not, because that was a negative action. It was all superseded by the action of the committee in eliminating its previous amendments, which were adopted. To do otherwise would get into the field of speculation. Those amendments may have been eliminated by other action of the committee. The committee in its final action adopted the substitute.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, unless the Speaker is desirous of hearing this discussion, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts just one more question to finish up the questions that I have asked. That being true, that we can not get any information from this committee other than by what comes from the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the only way that we can find out, technically, that the Committee of the Whole House did amend the original paragraph, would be to somehow get back into the Committee of the Whole House and have him instructed to report further. Is that true?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that is done by a motion to recommit.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLE. It appears that some amendments were adopted in the Committee of the Whole House and that the Chairman did not report them. Is there any reason why he should not give the rest of his report?

Mr. WALSH. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I made the usual report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to inquire whether the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole could make a supplementary report.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not believe that he could after the House has acted.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire again to make my suggestion, which is that the whole report in theory is before us. The original bill is here with the amendments written into it, and the vote simply has eliminated the substitute put there; but when that substitute is taken away the original bill with those amendments written into it is here. The report was not made from the minutes but from the bill itself.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order. The Chair understood the gentleman from Iowa to raise the point of order whether or not the first section stands without the amendments or with the amendments.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the Chair ruling on that. I thought the Chair had ruled upon it. No point of order is pending. There is an amendment pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman made a parliamentary inquiry, but the Chair supposes that the action of the clerks will probably depend upon the ruling of the Chair. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] first asked the question, the Chair was referred to a citation and answered the gentleman according to the precedent, that the original section would stand. During the roll call the Chair looked up that precedent. It was the only precedent that he could find. That is a precedent back in 1852, and it does not now seem to the Chair to entirely cover the matter. The Chair is informed by the parliamentary clerk that once or twice the present occupant of the chair has ruled in accordance with that precedent, but on reflection and on hearing the argument the Chair is disposed to rule the other way.

This seems to the Chair to be the status: When the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House reports, he simply reports that there are sundry amendments. The Chair would suppose that if the Chairman reported in extenso, he would report every amendment which had been adopted by the committee all through the bill. Therefore, there would appear before the House in that event just what action the committee took. It seems to the Chair that he would then have reported these amendments to the first section. All rulings ought, as far as possible, to give expression to the will of the House. There can be no question that the will of the House in committee and the vote of the House was as between this section as amended and the substitute.

It was not between the original section and the substitute, and therefore in equity we should wish to give effect to the action of the committee and let the House exercise the same option the committee exercised. There is this objection which the Chair sees, which is both a technical one and a real one, and that is that these amendments to the section were nullified by the vote adopting a substitute for the whole section, and at the same time, as the Chair suggested before, if everything was reported that amendment would be reported. It seems to the Chair that that is the alternative that was before the committee, and that ought to be the alternative before the House. It seems to the Chair that it would be fair if the House could vote upon every question that comes up in the committee provided somebody wishes to and demands a separate vote. That would not have been done this time, because the Chair misled by stating that the amendment to the section was not before us. But in the future, if the House choose to ratify this ruling, then the House could always decide whether they wanted the original section, the section as amended, or the substitute. If anybody demanded a vote on a substitute, then somebody should demand a vote on the amendment also and have a vote on the substitute and a vote on the amendment, so that the House could decide whether it wanted the substitute or did not want the substitute, or whether it wanted the original section as it stood, or the original section as amended, and therefore the Chair reverses his previous ruling.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Have the amendments been voted upon?

The SPEAKER. They have.

Mr. WALSH. And it is not too late to ask for a separate vote upon some of the amendments to this amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is too late now, and the Chair regrets it is too late, partly by the action of the Chair.

Mr. TINCHER. I understand under the ruling of the Chair on this proposition that henceforth if a section of a bill is stricken out and there are five or six perfecting amendments to that section and amendments to this amendment, of course, I have a right as a Member of the House to demand a separate vote on any amendment that prevailed in the committee, but that where a whole section with amendments was stricken out in the committee, according to my process of reasoning, if it did not prevail in the committee, that failure deprives me of my right to a separate vote in the House on the amendment, because it was voted out by the committee. I do not care particularly about the precedent, but I am interested to know that henceforth when a committee reports in a bill with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill do pass, that I have got to look into the past and see what amendments were adopted, and again, subsequently, where the House reverses the committee on an amendment where it voted for the striking out of a section. Also may I suggest that under the rules perfecting amendments are voted on first——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I understood the Chair to say that the fact that he had unintentionally misled the House with reference to the effect of the vote on the amendments in gross would prevent a separate vote being demanded on amendments reported by the committee to the original text. Now, the House having voted in gross on the amendments under the belief that they were voting on the amendments included in section 1, which were stricken out by the substitute, would not the ruling of the Chair now give any Member a right to demand a separate vote upon an amendment agreed to in the committee to section 1?

The SPEAKER. No. Of course, it does not follow if the Chair had not ruled that way and made that request. The Chair has no idea of what this amendment is, and, of course, he has no bias on the question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under the ruling of the Speaker, how does the situation now stand as it will go into the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The first section will be adopted as amended. The Clerk will report the other amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMSON: At the end of section 2 add the following: "Provided, That the President may utilize such suitable buildings, structures, and grounds now owned by the United States, not otherwise in active use, as may be available for the purposes aforesaid, and the President is hereby authorized by Executive order to transfer any such buildings, structures, and grounds to the United States Veterans' Bureau upon the request of the director thereof."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] practically in the same form, but not quite, was agreed to as an amendment to section 1, and is in the bill. Fearing that the substitute would prevail, he offered it to section 2. It is not desirable to have it agreed to twice in the bill. The only thing to do is to vote it down. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Kentucky opposed to the bill?

Mr. KINCHELOE. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Does any gentleman who is opposed to the bill desire to offer a motion to recommit?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. If not, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] is recognized to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill H. R. 10864 to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with instructions to report the same back immediately, with the following amendment: On page 1, line 7, after the word "bureau," insert "by purchase and remodeling or extension of existing plants and."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. That is already in the bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. No.

Mr. MANN. Yes; that is already in the bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Under the ruling of the Chair it is in the bill.

Mr. MANN. It is in the bill under the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understood the Speaker to say that hereafter he would rule that way, and did not understand that it was already in the bill. Of course, if it is already in the bill, I do not desire to press my motion to recommit, and therefore I gladly withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the title to conform to the text.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to amend the title to conform to the text. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. LANGLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ELECTION OF A MEMBER TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Mr. HARRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER, of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, elected to the Committees on Railways and Canals, Revision of the Laws, and Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article contained in the Infantry Journal of January, 1919, prepared by myself, on the subject of land settlements for ex-service men.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article on land settlements for ex-service men. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, in the Infantry Journal of January, 1919, there appears an article which was written by myself while in France during the month of September, 1918, and in view of its relevancy to the question of land settlement, which is covered by the provisions of the bill passed by this House respecting the adjustment of compensation for former service men, I am hereby inserting said article in the RECORD for the information of the Veterans' Bureau and the country:

EDITOR INFANTRY JOURNAL:

The August number, containing the contribution by Secretary Lane respecting after-the-war employment for the boys in khaki, has been accidentally brought to my attention. Speaking for myself and many serious minds in the service, I thank Secretary Lane for bringing up the subject, even in military circles, as it indicates a true statesmanship. After a rather intimate association with hundreds of young men from several of the Southern and Middle West States, and having often heard this question spoken of by the men in my company, I conclude it may be interesting and probably helpful for your readers, including Secretary Lane, to have a few words indicating the soldier's point of view on the question of post-bellum employment.

Let me preface these statements by a personal reference to show that I have no personal interest except that of our country's well-being. I am already established at the age of 43 with a family, a profession, and about 400 acres of South Carolina soil.

A majority of the boys in the service appear to be from the farm, true, certainly, as to the line. Maybe the town boys predominate in the Quartermaster Corps and other auxiliary branches. Naturally most of these farm boys will take up their work with their families, will later marry the neighborhood girls, and soon become leaders in their respective communities.

But many of the boys from the cities express a desire to become farmers, and this desire should be encouraged. Another class to be dealt with consists of boys from the tenant class. These boys have the national and natural desire to become landowners. Therefore we have a group composed of city-raised would-be-farmers and the sons of tenants. Just exactly how to present to these men the plans to be formulated by the Government commission suggested and how to aid these boys to become transformed from soldiers who are daily clothed, fed, and trained by superior officers without having even to take thought for themselves, into self-reliant, energetic, and progressive farmers is a most complicated problem.

I have thought that the camps and cantonments constructed at considerable expense throughout America may be used as powerful educational and industrial centers for our boys during the period of demobilization. The Nation not only has the right but perhaps the duty to summon the illiterate and untrained and to require them to submit to such discipline and instruction as may be necessary to rid the Nation of ignorance and to give the masses high ideals. The problems of education and social uplift are big enough to challenge our most heroic spirits, and we trust that the peace to be made at the end of the present war will make it unnecessary for a long time to come to use a national military crisis to stir all the people to a great self-denying effort.

There is a mere detail not to be overlooked in respect to settling ex-soldiers on the farm in new country, such as cut-over lands, recently drained or irrigated lands. These boys, because of close association in Army life with large numbers, have their social feelings highly pitched, and they will not be content to be isolated in sparse and lonely new country.

The new lands need boys and they need the new lands. The two must be brought together. Somehow the prohibitory isolation must be eliminated. How can it be done? By taking a hint from French community life and arranging and planning for farm villages. There the men live close together and from thence go out to their several fields. In this way cooperation in labor and the purchase and use of farm machinery will be encouraged. These communities may be started by inducing some tenant farmer, preferably one with several daughters, to set up a sort of boarding house in the new lands where the ex-soldiers may find food, shelter, and companionship.

In a little while they will be bringing girls from every quarter of America to become wives, and maybe even from France. After a man is married, he loves the farm more than ever. Then the problem of shelter, fuel, and the eternal "three times a day" become imminent and preeminent. Farm life permits the husband and father a regularity of habit and opportunity to be continuously with his family found in few other callings. Thus what begins with a boarding house soon becomes a village and soon the schoolhouse, the church, the lodge, the singing society, the music club, and the library will appear, and thus the ideal commune of patriotically educated and pure-minded people is established.

Our leading educators may be called upon to aid the Government in planning and executing a system of intensive education at said camps, modeled somewhat after the intensive military training carried on there during the war. These courses of instruction in farming, draining, irrigation, road building, and all the branches of mechanical industry may be conducted on the elective principle, so that the men may concentrate their thoughts for a few weeks or months in preparation for civilian service. These places will thus become labor employment bureaus to which application may be made and from which will go out streams of trained, earnest, vigorous young manhood to overcome and more than overcome the loss, consumption and destruction incident to war. By the qualification card system those most efficient and best prepared would go first, and others would follow as outside demand and their own training progressed.

This idea could be extended even beyond the period of demobilization and the camp sites used for several years thereafter for educational purposes.

Another suggestion. If some such plan of encouragement be authorized by law, would it not be well to have the matter presented to the soldiers for their consideration as soon as possible? Why? In order that they may begin to plan and save their money. I think some sort of savings-bank system should be inaugurated in conjunction with military service here. In fact, the boys need very little money, but it is practically impossible either to save or remit it to their families or banks in America.

It is therefore uselessly squandered. If the boys could be assisted to save fifteen, twenty, or thirty dollars a month, they would have enough to buy stock and farm tools, and habits of economy would be encouraged, and habits of extravagance discouraged.

In conclusion I can truly bear witness to the fact that our boys have their desires set upon achieving success in civil life commensurate with what they are doing under arms. They will come back with a vast fund of information otherwise impossible and undreamed of. They will come back with trained and disciplined minds, with strong characters, and with patriotic resolutions unknown to the people of America, except to the generation which followed Washington in the field, which moved in quick response to the flaming words of Patrick Henry, which thought out and felt that religion of democracy whose high priest was Thomas Jefferson. Americans are proud, wherever they are scattered over the earth at duty's post, to think how powerful in resources America is. Their hearts leap with joy to hear themselves hailed in many tongues, even in the tongues of German prisoners, as the saviors of civilization and humanity. Imagine their pride to find that even the street urchins in the remotest foreign cities pronounce with confidence and affection the name of Woodrow Wilson. But, above all, Americans feel and realize that the greatness of our composite Nation is not a social greatness merely, is not a geographical greatness, is not an industrial greatness, is not a military greatness, but, above all, is a moral grandeur. Because we are right, because we speak for mankind, because justice even between friend and foe is our guide, we find the minds and the hearts of all broad-minded, unselfish men and women everywhere willing to follow our leadership, wishing to share our country's blessings and willing to bear their part of the burden. We must be wise enough to profit by the mistakes of other great nations, such as Rome and Germany. The general diffusion of intelligence and virtue by education is imperative. Peace has her glories. The uplift of all the people, the according to every man the products of labor, equal and exact and speedy justice before the law, are problems that call forth energy equal to that now in the power of those working so effectually to conduct the war to a victory not only of glory but, greater still, of justice and a long-enduring peace.

JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
Captain, Infantry, United States Army.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RANKIN, for two days, on account of attending memorial service on the landing of the last of overseas dead; and

To Mr. MCSWAIN, for two days, on account of attending exercises in honor of the last soldier dead to be brought to America.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9979. An act to amend an act entitled "An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs."

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that March 29 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 9606. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for payment of charges due on reclamation projects, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 263. Joint resolution authorizing the purchase of land for cemeteries for American military dead in Europe and the improvement thereof.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of appropriations for the contract auditing division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the legislation for the contract auditing division. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, in speaking of the contemplated appropriation for the War Department for the coming year, I called attention on March 22 to the fact that the appropriation for the contract audit section had been cut from $1,300,000 to $1,000,000 and that this cut would seriously hamper the investigation of war contracts and the recovery of millions to the United States Treasury.

I called attention briefly to the need of not only continuing the work of investigation but of expanding it, and inserted a letter I had written to Secretary of War Weeks on the subject.

I now desire to insert a letter received from Mr. Weeks with certain inclosures explaining about the work of the war audit section and in answer to my letter to him:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 27, 1922.

Hon. EDWARD J. KING,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In reply to your inquiry of the 20th instant regarding the amount of funds that may be available for use in continuing the present audit of war contracts from the total provided in H. R. 10871, Army appropriation bill, for the field service of the Finance Department, I desire to advise you as follows:

The bill in question, now before the House of Representatives, provides the sum of $1,000,000 for the compensation of clerks and other employees of the Finance Department for field service and is $267,000, or 21 per cent less than the estimate for such purpose contained in the budget submitted by the President. In view of this reduction it will be necessary to eliminate or greatly reduce as of June 30 next the activities of the Finance Department connected with the auditing of war contracts unless additional funds are provided or the enlisted personnel of the Army be continued at 150,000, this in order that the personnel available for the ensuing fiscal year may devote their entire attention to disbursing functions in order to keep abreast of current requirements. The number of employees it would be possible to retain on finance duties will be so limited that only a small proportion can be assigned to the audit of war contracts.

The personnel of the Finance Department is composed of two groups, civilian employees and enlisted men. The latter are stationed principally at posts, camps, and stations with other units of the Army, their number being regulated on a pro rata basis dependent upon the size of the Army. The civilian employee is on duty in the larger offices in cities and other points where it is uneconomical to place soldiers. Their number is determined by the amount of funds appropriated by Congress.

If the present bill reducing the Army to 115,000 men becomes a law it will be necessary to reduce the present enlisted quota of the Finance Department from 709 to 369. The latter figure represents the exact proportion of men the Finance Department will be entitled to for an Army of 115,000. The present quota, 709, is slightly in excess of the normal quota, due to the demands made on the Finance Department. If the Army is reduced to 115,000 it will not be possible to favor the Finance Department with any excess. The reduction therefore of enlisted men will amount to 340. Likewise, if the item of $1,000,000 for civilian employees is not increased the reduction in the civilian force for the ensuing fiscal year will be from 905 to 715, a loss of 190 employees. The total combined force, enlisted and civilian, if the present bill becomes a law, will amount to 1,084, in contrast with a minimum of 1,614 estimated as required for the ensuing year based on an Army of 150,000. Should the Army be reduced to 115,000 the minimum field requirements for the Finance Department will be a total of 1,228, of which number but 369 can be enlisted; the remainder, 859, will have to be civilians. Under the contemplated bill it will be possible to employ but 715 civilians, or 144 less than the number actually required. This reduction of 144 will necessarily most seriously affect the contract audit work and materially reduce, if it does not entirely eliminate, the personnel now engaged in that activity.

To provide for this deficiency there should be added to the present item in the bill $201,600 if the Army is reduced to 115,000, or $267,000 if the Army remains at 150,000.

I appreciate your interest in this matter, and as you have requested detailed and complete information respecting the audit of war contracts, the necessity for its continuation, and the enlargement of the work for coordination with the Department of Justice, in order that the interests of the Government may be protected, I inclose herewith a brief survey of the work accomplished in auditing war contracts by the Finance Department and the results obtained by them to date.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN W. WEEKS,
Secretary of War.

The following statement shows the sums found due, recovered, and so forth, by the contract auditing activity of the Finance Department:

(a) Grand total amounts found due to date		$33,106,974.44
The present status of these cases is as follows:
1. Actual recoveries in money and property or by deduction from claims awards	[1] 1,839,295.25
2. Indebtedness acknowledged by contractor who offers compromise or return of missing property in kind	55,328.98
	1,894,624.23
3. Charges against contractors which will apparently require legal action to recover and have been reported to Department of Justice or General Accounting Office for such action	4,370,014.49
4. Amounts included in reports of audit, but found to have been covered in previous claims settlements	1,196,909.11
5. In process of collection, directly or through other War Department branches, held pending reinvestigation, etc	25,645,426.61
Pay of employees engaged in contract audit from Aug. 1, 1920, to date	297,752.52

(b) In addition to the $1,894,624.23 above, $10,574,154.95 was reported as collected by individual offices upon completion of contracts or settlement of property accounts previous to the establishment and organization of the contract auditing activity.

(c) There are, in addition to the reports included in the above statement, reports of audit totaling approximately $2,000,000 on hand in the office of the Chief of Finance, which have been received from field activities and which are being given a final check before action on them will be taken.

Total of (a), (b), and (c), $45,681,129.39.

The total number of contracts audited since August 1, 1920, is 15,489.

TYPICAL EXAMPLES OF WAR CONTRACTS AUDITED BY THE CONTRACT AUDIT SECTION, OFFICE OF CHIEF OF FINANCE.

1. A contract was made by a bureau of the War Department for the disposal of a large amount of a special kind of supplies. An audit of this contract was made by the contract audit section which developed

[1] Complete data on reductions made in claims settlements as a result of audits not yet available.

the fact that the amount being received by the United States was very much less than the true value of the property sold, and that the United States was being put to expense for the purpose of converting the property from a condition in which it was to be paid for under the contract at a higher price to a condition in which a lower price was applicable.

The Department of Justice took up this case with a view to recovering any funds wrongfully withheld from the Government, the amount of which will be subsequently determined.

2. A contract was made by a bureau of the War Department for the disposal of a very large quantity of surplus raw material. An audit of this contract has indicated that the contractor has underpaid the Government in the amount of $1,854,076.04.

This case is now in the hands of the Department of Justice.

3. Production contracts made by a branch of the War Department with a large corporation for a certain class of war material. An audit of these contracts has demonstrated that this contractor was paid about $9,600,000 for which (as far as the War Department records show) no services were rendered or property delivered.

This case has also been given to the Department of Justice, who will call upon the contractor for an accounting for this sum.

4. Contracts with a corporation where materials were supplied to contractor by the Government and not accounted for by him in finished articles delivered or materials otherwise returned to the Government. The amount found due from this contractor is $1,371,368.02.

This case is being prepared for transmittal to the Department of Justice.

5. A contractor had two contracts with the Government, one of which provided that the contractor should be furnished Government material, and the other contract provided that the contractor should furnish his own material. An audit of these contracts showed that the Government material had been used on both contracts. The amount involved is approximately $700,000.

This case is now the subject of correspondence between this office and the contractor.

6. On a contract for the sale of surplus war supplies, when shipments were made to Government arsenals, the Government was to pay the freight. An audit showed that under this provision the Government had paid approximately $30,000 in freight to private manufacturers.

The same contract provided that the price to be paid for the material was to be determined to a considerable extent by commercial sales during the period of the contract. The contractor furnished statements covering the amount of such sales, which were used as the basis upon which he made his payments to the Government. When an audit of the contract was undertaken and the contractor was called upon to show the correctness of these figures, he stated that they were made without first-hand knowledge on his part, but had been obtained from a third party, and that he understood that the basic papers upon which these figures were based had been destroyed. The approximate amount involved is $2,200,000.

This matter is being made the subject of further investigation.

7. Audit of contract with Gray & Davis (Inc.), Cambridge, Mass., shows a charge of $37,395.43. This was a terminated contract and was referred to the Claims Board for remark. The Claims Board in final settlement deducted $34,812.64. The difference between these amounts was accounted for when the property report was completed.

8. Audit of a contract with Eddystone Munitions Co. shows a charge of $14,731.62. The matter was referred to the War Department Claims Board for information as to whether deduction was made in settlement. This office was advised by the Claims Board that liability of contractor was not known when settlement was made, and accordingly no deduction had been made. Attempts are now being made to collect this amount.

9. As a result of an audit of contracts for the manufacture of certain articles of equipment, it was found that the contractor was indebted to the United States in the sum of $44,527.51 on account of Government-owned material not accounted for. A cash collection was made covering the value of this property.

10. The Finance Department recovered $71,093.39 in cash as the result of an audit by the contract audit branch of a number of ordnance contracts between the Government and the Republic Iron & Steel Co.

11. T. A. Gillespie on one ordnance contract overused Government material valued at $98,984.61, which was determined after a complete audit of the contract. The amount due was collected by the Finance Department.

12. A contract was placed with the Washington Steel & Ordnance Co. for machining 14-inch high-explosive shells. Forgings of the value of $104,450.89 were delivered by the United States to the contractor's plant for use under this contract. The armistice intervened before work was started on this contract, and these forgings had apparently been lost sight of. The audit of the contract disclosed that the forgings were still on hand at the plant, and that while the department had been advised in November, 1918, that the forgings had been shipped to the contractor, no action had subsequently been taken toward recovering the material, which has since been accomplished as result of the audit by the office of the Chief of Finance.

13. Wessel, Duval & Co. entered into a sales contract with the Government to sell surplus nitrate of soda on a commission basis. In auditing the contract it was found that the full amount due the Government had not been turned over and there was still due $8,657.29. The report on audit was submitted to property audit branch for collection February 24, 1922, the matter was taken up with the contractor, and settlement effected March 16, 1922.

The above cases are quoted as typical of many hundred contracts already audited, and are illustrating the reasons why a complete audit is vitally necessary for the public interest.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who spoke on this bill may have 10 legislative days in which to extend their remarks.

Mr. WALSH. Not 10 days. I would not object to five days, and it must be their own remarks.

Mr. LANGLEY. I modify my request in that way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on this bill have five days in which to extend their own remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 3, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

579. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill to amend section 126 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as amended; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

580. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill to authorize the President, in his discretion, to retire certain officers of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRAND: A bill (H. R. 11115) to amend section 12 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 11116) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1869, as amended; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 11117) to authorize the President, in his discretion, to retire certain officers of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 11118) to provide for the deportation of certain undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. MOORE of Virginia: Resolution (H. Res. 315) relative to Philippine independence; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. PATTERSON of New Jersey: Resolution (H. Res. 316) providing for six months' salary to be paid the widow of Joseph C. Lee; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. CONNALLY of Texas: Resolution (H. Res. 317) amending the rules of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 11119) granting a pension to Martha J. Corrie; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 11120) granting a pension to Carrie M. Zumwalt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 11121) granting a pension to Arthur Gross; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 3, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, as the recipients of Thy mercies we realize our dependence upon Thee, and look unto Thee this morning for Thy help. Grant unto us such knowledge, such wisdom, that according to Thy good pleasure results shall be realized, and in this day of happy outlook, with the singing of birds about us, may gladness fill our hearts and may we rejoice in opportunities of service to Thee, to the land we love, and to all the interests of humanity. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10864) to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities, and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 9979. An act to amend an act entitled "An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs"; and

H. J. Res. 282. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to incur obligations for construction and maintenance of roads, bridges, and trails in Alaska, said obligations to be paid from the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

HOSPITALIZATION OF EX-SERVICE MEN.

The bill (H. R. 10864) to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities, and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau, was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ASHURST. Is it the soldiers' hospitalization bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is. The Chair may be in error in referring it to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CURTIS. I think if it is a bill making appropriations it ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations. If it has reference to a transfer of hospitals, it should go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ASHURST. It is the bill which has just passed the House, and which appropriates $17,000,000 for the construction of hospitals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair it should go to the Committee on Appropriations, and it will be so referred.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to give notice that as soon as the routine morning business is disposed of I shall submit some observations on the bill which has just been referred.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: From the Committee on Appropriations I report back House bill 10864 and ask that that committee be discharged from its further consideration and the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The bill authorizes the expenditure of some $17,000,000, but it does not contain an appropriation. It should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS presented a resolution adopted by the Neodesha (Kans.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the passage of the soldiers' bonus bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Jewell Post, No. 72, American Legion, of Jewell; sundry citizens of Kanopolis; and employees of Rock Island Lumber & Coal Co., of Independence, in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the soldiers' bonus bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wamego, Kans., praying for the continuance of the mail delivery service in that city, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. KENDRICK presented a resolution of the Fremont County Bee Keepers' Association, of Lander, Wyo., favoring inclusion in the pending tariff bill of an adequate duty of not less than 5 cents per pound on imported honey, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MOSES presented memorials of sundry citizens of Danbury, Londonderry, Derry, West Windham, Hudson, Pittsfield, Gonic, and Winchester, all in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 2747, the so-called Federal cooperative reclamation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ferndale, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by Auxiliary No. 50, Sons of Veterans, of Parsons, Kans., favoring the passage of the so-called Morgan bill, providing for increased pensions to veterans of the Civil War and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KELLOGG presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Blackberry, Minn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILLIS. I present certain petitions and resolutions representing some 110 different organizations in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, signed by several thousand persons, relative to the proposed amendment of the Volstead Act. I do not ask that they be placed in the RECORD, except the brief letter accompanying the petitions and resolutions. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and that the petitions and resolutions be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The petitions and resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DRY MAINTENANCE LEAGUE OF CUYAHOGA COUNTY,
Cleveland, Ohio, March 23, 1922.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
Senator from Ohio, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: On February 20, 1922, the City Council of Cleveland, Ohio, by a vote of 23 to 8, adopted a resolution calling upon Congress to amend the Volstead Act to permit beer and light wines.

The churches of Cleveland, Bible schools, and many civic organizations immediately protested against this vote by resolution, petition, and by personal protests from hundreds of the citizens to the council. Attached are copies of petitions adopted by approximately 110 organizations, representing not less than 75,000 voters of greater Cleveland, protesting against this resolution of our council and affirming their faith in the prohibition laws and the eighteenth amendment. These resolutions were mailed to this organization with a request that they be forwarded to the Congress of the United States. Therefore we are submitting the same to you, trusting that they will be presented as requested with the proper attention being called to the same as a repudiation of the resolution sent by our city council.

Very truly, yours,

DRY MAINTENANCE LEAGUE,
GEORGE C. SOUTHWELL, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McNARY. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 585) thereon. I desire to give notice that at the first convenient opportunity, perhaps to-morrow, I shall call up the bill for consideration by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4382) to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1345) to amend an act entitled "Interstate commerce act," approved February 28, 1920, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 586) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1346) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, including the safety appliance acts and the act providing for the valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission, approved March 1, 1913, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 587) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9671) to amend section 87 of the Judicial Code, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 588) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3372) for the relief of the estate of John McQuiddy, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3373) granting an increase of pension to Henry Mott;

A bill (S. 3374) granting a pension to Asenath Welch (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3375) granting a pension to Sarah J. Brown;

A bill (S. 3376) granting a pension to Vesta A. Brown (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3377) granting a pension to Henry V. Faris (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3378) granting a pension to Marinda A. Wilcox (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3379) granting a pension to Addie E. Auten (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3380) granting a pension to Mary E. Allen (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3381) granting a pension to Fannie R. Harvey (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3382) granting an increase of pension to John W. McAndrew (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3383) granting a pension to Effie D. Hunter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3386) granting an increase of pension to Louis Miller (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3387) granting a pension to Hattie Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3388) granting a pension to Emsley P. Canutt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 3389) granting a pension to Nancy H. Hism; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 189) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan cots, mattresses, and blankets for the use of Grand Army of the Republic at the California and Nevada State encampment, to be held in Riverside, Calif., in May, 1922; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DRAINAGE EXPENSES ON PAIUTE INDIAN LANDS, NEV.

Mr. PITTMAN introduced a bill (S. 3384) authorizing an appropriation to meet proportionate expenses of providing a drainage system for Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the Newlands reclamation project of the Reclamation Service, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this bill carries the same provision as the amendment which I proposed to the Interior Department appropriation bill, which amendment was eliminated by the conferees. I have discussed the matter with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. While the bill carries an appropriation, he agrees that it should go first to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and if approved by that committee, it will then come back to the Senate and be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. For that reason I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator from Kansas will assist me, I understand, in trying to get an early report of the bill from that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

COOPERATIVE TRADE ORGANIZATIONS.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a joint resolution, and also a bill, for appropriate reference, and if I may have the indulgence of the Senate for just a moment, I desire to explain why I am introducing a joint resolution as well as a bill covering the same subject. If the Secretary will read the joint resolution by title, I shall make a brief statement with reference to it.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

Whereas the revival of the industrial activities of the United States is essential to the welfare of the individual as well as the Nation; and

Whereas business has been suffering severe depression, from which its reconstruction should be stimulated by every legitimate means; and

Whereas business procedure that will without protecting monopolies eliminate waste in production or distribution, lower costs, simplify and standardize methods, increase efficiency and the morale of business is a beneficial factor in economic progress; and

Whereas congressional action has already been taken to assist in agricultural cooperative marketing and distribution; and

Whereas the industrial tendency is toward the substitution of research and scientific business methods for previous uncertainty and ignorance; and

Whereas business is hesitating because unable to secure guidance, legal or governmental, which will clearly indicate the proper lines of conduct in business association; and

Whereas business is entitled to know in definite terms what it legally can and can not do: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee of Congress is hereby created, to be composed of six Members, three of whom shall be appointed by the President of the Senate and three by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States and the markets of foreign countries, in so far as the same directly affect industry and commerce of the United States, including questions as to production, distribution, labor, and business methods, and to report to Congress and to suggest such legislation, if any, as it may deem best upon these subjects, with a special reference to the most effective ways and means to revive industry and to stimulate foreign and domestic trade, to stabilize business conditions as to the future, to minimize the danger and distress of recurring periods of business depression, with their resultant cycles of general unemployment, and to define the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

SEC. 3. Such committee is hereby authorized during the Sixty-seventh Congress to sit during the sessions or recesses of the Congress, at Washington or at any other place in the United States, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ experts deemed necessary by such committee, a clerk and a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before such committee, such stenographer's service to be rendered at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, the expenses involved in carrying out the provisions of this resolution to be paid one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 4. That the committee may from time to time report to Congress, and shall submit a final report on or before December 4, 1922.

The bill (S. 3385) to regulate trade associations, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDGE. The bill by its title is self-explanatory, and the joint resolution provides for the appointment of a commission of three Senators and three Members of the House for the purpose of, first, investigating the same subject. I am introducing the bill at this time not with any intention of pressing it at once but will urge the passage of the joint resolution so that the committee or commission, if authorized, can have the bill as a basis upon which to direct their inquiry. I think it will be thoroughly agreed and appreciated that it is the duty of Congress in some way to provide for defining the legal rights and privileges of trade associations. At the present moment every one seems to commend cooperation, and yet because of recent decisions of the Supreme Court it is practically impossible to decide just what is cooperation and what is combination in restraint of trade. I think it is a most important question, a question with reference to which Congress can, through legislative authority, be of great assistance in stabilizing industry. I hope we can get expeditious action upon the joint resolution. Congress has already demonstrated its interest in cooperation by passing practically without opposition a bill to provide for cooperation and cooperative marketing among agricultural associations. This is exactly in the same direction, and I am quite sure the same spirit of cooperation on the part of Congress will be found when the measure comes before us for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it the opinion of the Senator from New Jersey that reference should be to the Committee on Commerce of both the bill and the joint resolution?

Mr. EDGE. I shall be very glad to have them referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill and the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

FINANCING OF AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced a bill (S. 3390) to provide credit facilities for the preservation and development of the agricultural industry, including live stock, in the United States; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to create an agency for the liquidation of commercial assets owned by the United States, for acting, when required, as depository of funds belonging to the United States, and otherwise performing services as fiscal agent of the United States; and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to say that this bill is intended to provide a system which will absorb and succeed the present War Finance Corporation, with greatly enlarged and extended powers. I think this bill provides a sound, well-balanced, and workable system for financing the agricultural operations of the country. If it is enacted it will give the farming classes, who represent about 40 per cent of our population, banking and credit facilities, if not equal, at least comparable to those which the Federal reserve system now gives to those classes of our people who are engaged in trade and in industries other than farming, as well as those engaged in speculative ventures.

A little later I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate for the purpose of making a detailed statement of the general provisions of the bill. In brief, it establishes a banking system as well adapted to the requirements and conditions of agriculture as the Federal reserve banking system is adapted to the requirements and conditions of trades and industries other than farming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). What is the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina as to the reference of the bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest that it be referred to the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so referred.

Mr. SIMMONS. Upon reflection, as the bill relates chiefly to credits for farmers and agriculturists, if there is no objection, I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the bill should go to the Finance Committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. I make no objection. I would not object to its reference to either of those committees. At first blush I suggested the Committee on Finance, but on reflection I thought it should go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, because all the War Finance Corporation legislation has been handled by that committee.

Mr. CURTIS. I have not had time to read the bill. I would like to have the question of its reference go over until to-morrow, so that we can find out what it is.

Mr. HARRISON. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has considered this whole subject. That committee reported out the original amendment to the War Finance Corporation act, and I think the bill should go to that committee, because they have studied the question.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the reason why, on reflection, I suggested the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, not only because it deals with agricultural credits, but because the last act reviving the War Finance Corporation, which deals very largely with the same matter that this bill deals with, came from that committee, and I assumed that in the consideration of that measure that committee did, as a matter of fact, very thoroughly investigate many of the very questions which are involved in this bill. I think that would be the better reference of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Had the Senator thought about the Banking and Currency Committee? The Banking and Currency Committee handled the farm loan act.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the Banking and Currency Committee have never handled War Finance Corporation legislation.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; but I suppose this to be something on the order of the farm loan act.

Mr. SIMMONS. This bill provides for a body to supersede the War Finance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

SCHOOLS FOR AERONAUTICS.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I offer the following resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 266), as follows:

Whereas immediate and adequate consideration and development of the science of aeronautics is vital to the commercial and industrial expansion and to the protection and prosperity of the United States; and

Whereas the science of aeronautics is recognized by all nations as a dominant factor in relation to transportation facilities and the national defense; and

Whereas many foreign nations, cognizant of the necessity and importance of aircraft, have initiated programs of mail and passenger transportation far superior to the present policy of our Government, with reference to the stimulation, maintenance, and advance of aeronautics for all national purposes; and

Whereas aircraft is indispensable for the patrolling and for the protection of our coast and boundaries, and to supplement to a considerable degree naval craft, coast artillery defenses, and other means of protection and defense now maintained by the Army and the Navy; and

Whereas at the Conference for the Limitation of Armament no action was taken to reduce, limit, or control the aircraft of the countries represented, although the development of aircraft had a pronounced effect upon the reduction and limitation of navies; and

Whereas it should be apparent to the most casual observer that a sufficient and properly trained personnel capable of developing, instructing, and directing aeronautics, and available for the national defense, is extremely important; and

Whereas it daily becomes more evident that if the United States is not to be completely outdistanced in the field of aeronautics, and is not therefore to be left defenseless, a separate school of aeronautics should be created and maintained, or separate schools of aeronautics should be established in the United States Military Academy and in the United States Naval Academy: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are directed to report to Congress (1) whether or not it is feasible and advisable to establish a school of aeronautics, to be known as the United States Academy for Aeronautics, with buildings, grounds, and equipment necessary for instructing and training cadets; (2) whether or not it is practicable to use a part of the buildings and grounds of the United States Military Academy and of the United States Naval Academy for separate schools in aeronautics, to the end that young men desirous of qualifying for commissions in the United States Air Service may be appointed as cadets to such separate aeronautical schools in the same manner as cadets are now appointed to qualify for commissions in the United States Army and the United States Navy; and (3) whether or not it is feasible to take over one of the existing navy yards or arsenals for the purpose of converting the same into a Government plant for the development and manufacture of aircraft of various kinds suitable for national, commercial, and defense purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CURTIS. I think the resolution should go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will lie over under the rule.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, may we have the resolution read again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks that it lie over under the rule.

Mr. STERLING. Very well.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 268), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-seventh Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on March 31, 1922, the President had approved and signed the bill (S. 3209) granting to the Northern Pacific Railway Co. the right to construct and maintain a bridge across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota.

"LUSITANIA" CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 176).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on August 16, 1921, concerning American passengers aboard the steamship Lusitania at the time of its sinking and concerning claims against Germany filed with the Department of State by American citizens as a result of the loss of the Lusitania.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 3, 1922.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this is a matter which will be of great interest to those who were connected with that disaster, and I move that the message and accompanying papers may be printed as a public document.

The motion was agreed to.

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY TO HAITI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read Senate Resolution 249, submitted by Mr. KING March 6, 1922, as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States has designated Brig. Gen. John H. Russell as high commissioner to Haiti, with the rank of ambassador extraordinary to the Government of that country, without having sent the nomination of said Brig. Gen. John H. Russell to the Senate for the advice and consent of the Senate with respect to his appointment to said office: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby requested to investigate the question as to the power of the President under the Constitution to appoint an ambassador extraordinary to Haiti, without the advice and consent of the Senate in that behalf, and report their findings and opinion to the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have just spoken to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], who heretofore asked that this resolution might lie over, and objected to its consideration. He has no objection to its going to the Committee on the Judiciary, because there is a legal question involved. I think the Senate is entitled to the opinion of that committee, and I ask its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

APPOINTMENTS BY EXECUTIVE ORDER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read Senate Resolution 258, submitted by Mr. HARRISON March 20, 1922, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested to furnish to the Senate the name of every person appointed by Executive order setting aside the civil-service rules, and to furnish to the Senate the reasons therefor.

Mr. HARRISON. I serve notice that I shall call up the resolution to-morrow. I ask that it may lie on the table until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to introduce a resolution, but I want to make a brief statement before doing so.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this is Monday morning and we have not had a call of the calendar for a considerable length of time. There are quite a number of Senators who have asked that we have the calendar to-day until 2 o'clock. Of course, if speeches are made it means we will have no calendar this morning. So far as I am concerned I have no objection.

Mr. CARAWAY. I hope the Senator will not object. I shall not occupy the time of the Senate long.

Mr. President, I wish to call to the attention of the Senate the extraordinary procedure which resulted in the issuing of an Executive order dismissing and disgracing the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and a number of chiefs of divisions of that bureau. I want to disclaim in the beginning any desire to criticize the President for exercising any authority that may be vested in him to bring about efficiency in Government employment. I wish to say in advance that if any man on the Government rolls is either inefficient or dishonest he has no right to remain; whether he has been there a long or a short time; but I do say that no man ought to be dismissed and disgraced without having had an opportunity to know of what offense he is charged, who brings the charge, and what evidence were submitted to sustain it. That is the phase of the order against which I wish most emphatically to protest.

It has been 400 years since anyone in an English-speaking country has thought it proper or thought it just to submit anyone to a star-chamber proceeding. It has never been thought in any English-speaking country where English laws and constitutions prevail that one might be charged with an offense, tried, and convicted and his punishment decreed without his knowledge. But here are men who have long devoted their best energies to the Government employ, men who have risen to high places, men of standing in the community, men of families, who have been summarily dismissed and disgraced from the service because the Executive either wanted to fill their places by deserving Republicans or else some enemy of these individuals has the Executive ear. Whatever the reason I want to protest against it. But in the meantime, Mr. President, I should like to wait until the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber are through their conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. CARAWAY. The matter is of sufficient importance that any Senator could afford to give enough of his time to learn what the facts are.

Here thirty-odd men who have led upright lives, so far as the record shows, men who have held important places, places of responsibility the duties of which they have discharged efficiently, overnight, by a night order, are removed from their places, dismissed from service, and no explanation given except that it is "for the public good"; which is equivalent to saying there is something against the character of the men that makes their severance from the service necessary. If there is, the President ought to specify it; if there is not, he ought not to disgrace these men and deny them the right to engage in honest employment by such an infamous order, for it is infamous unless there is some good and sufficient reason to warrant his issuing it.

If there were charges against them, nobody would complain if the President had suspended them from their duties and put other men in their places until a thorough investigation might have been had. That, however, was not done, but men, pursuing their daily occupations, with no knowledge of any investigation having been made, with no complaints against their services or their character having been made, are summarily, at night, dismissed not only from their places of employment but dismissed from the service and thereby disgraced. I say there is not a reputable employer anywhere who would now take one of these men into a place of responsibility until this matter had been thoroughly investigated and the facts established.

Therefore, I wish to introduce a resolution calling upon the President to tell us, if it is not incompatible with the public good, why he removed these men. They have a right to know, and the country has a right to know.

I want also to know why he did it in violation of law, because section 6, part 1, volume 37, of the Statutes at Large, page 555, provides that no one in the classified service may be removed therefrom except upon a charge in writing given to him notifying him of the offense of which he is charged, and permitting him to reply thereto in writing, and to submit affidavits, if he cares to do so, whether the charge is well founded.

The President is not above the law, although for the argument's sake I may concede that he may disgrace and remove these men from the service, and they have no legal redress; he may exercise the authority vested in him and override the statute and dismiss and disgrace these men; but in doing so, if he acts without just cause, he will more disgrace himself and the high office he holds than he will disgrace these humble citizens, whose right to make an honest living he has sought to destroy.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas if he does not really think he takes the matter too seriously? In view of the general course of proceedings, will it not very properly and very justly be assumed that these men have been removed for purely political reasons?

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, I do not know as to that. That was the first impression I had, that it was purely a political move; but I do not know whether it was or not. I do not know but that it was a yielding to a particular faction, although I presume that political advantage was expected to be derived. However, I want to protest, Mr. President, with all the vehemence that I may, against the removal from office of a man who happens to disagree with the administration in politics if that removal carries with it disgrace.

If this administration is prepared to follow Mr. Daugherty—and I rather think Mr. Daugherty spoke with the knowledge and the approval of the administration—and override the civil service, let them do it by law. The Republicans have a majority in both Houses of Congress; let them take the responsibility and go back to the spoils system and fill every office from doorkeeper up and down with their political henchmen, if they can find that many in the country who yet remain faithful to this administration; but let them do it like men, and say, "You are removed, not because you are inefficient or dishonest but because we do not agree with you politically and we want these places for our political henchmen." It is infamous to drive men out of public employment with a charge which brands them either as inefficient or corrupt—and nobody is going to believe when he investigates this matter that these men were inefficient.

Let me consider the case of one of them, Mr. George U. Rose. He entered the employ of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing 39 years ago at $1.25 a day. When he was discharged he was drawing $5,000 a year as Chief of the Engraving Division, the most highly technical division of the whole bureau. Nominally he is a Republican, but he is a citizen of the District of Columbia from birth and never had an opportunity to vote. Of course, he has not been offensive in his politics one way or the other, but has enjoyed a steady line of promotion through Democratic and Republican administrations until he has reached the head of the division of which he had become an employee 39 years ago. He has been in the service nearly long enough to retire with a pension, but without a moment's notice, at night, a special messenger brought him a copy of an Executive order dismissing him not only from his place of employment but from the classified service, and disgracing him and his family, for what reason nobody understands. He has a right to know; the country has a right to know; all of us want to know. If the President had said there were irregularities in the bureau; that somebody stole—and that possibly may be true—the situation, perhaps, would be different; but a clerk stole $175,000 worth of bonds from the Treasury Department recently and plead guilty to the charge, and yet nobody says that Secretary Mellon ought to be kicked out of office as a criminal because an irregularity occurred in his department for which he was not responsible. If there were some irregularities in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing—and I do not know whether there were or not—the President owed it to the people to say against whom the charges were made, so that the guilty might suffer without destroying the reputations of men who have devoted an honorable lifetime to the public service.

Take another case, that of the director, Mr. James L. Wilmeth, who came into the service in 1895, at $60 a month, as a money-order assorter. He was made assistant chief of that division in 1903 at $1,800 a year; law clerk in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury in 1906 at $2,000 a year; chief clerk of the Treasury Department in 1910, under Franklin MacVeagh, a Republican, starting in at $3,000 a year and subsequently promoted to $4,000 a year. He was made Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in 1917 at $6,000 a year. He never sought and never received any outside influence in order to secure promotion; he never had a politician speak to anyone in his behalf, but trusted always to his merit for promotion. He never asked for promotion, but it came to him voluntarily. The same statement applies to Mr. Rose.

Another of the men who has been summarily dismissed, Mr. James M. Fisher, was at the date of his discharge Assistant Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at a salary of $3,500. He is from Virginia, and was at one time clerk to the Committees on Interstate Commerce, Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, Pensions, and Immigration in the House of Representatives. He also did reporting for committees in the House of Representatives. He never sought promotion. In 1893 he entered the Treasury Department as confidential secretary to the second comptroller, at $1,800 a year. He was transferred to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at $1,600; promoted to chief of division of assignments; promoted to chief clerk, division of assignments and review, at $3,000 a year; promoted to the position of assistant director of the bureau at $3,500 a year. No complaint has ever been lodged against him and he never sought any outside influence, but rose simply by merit.

Take another man, John J. Deviny, superintendent of work, executive in charge of the night force. He was born in the District of Columbia; entered the civil service 22 years ago at $300 a year, less than a dollar a day, as an apprentice in plate printing; he was cleaner of pots and mixer of inks. He was promoted from time to time until at the date of his discharge he was receiving $3,500 a year. He is president of the Washington Club of Printing House Craftsmen. He had been recommended for director of the bureau. He never sought any political help from any source. Incidentally he held the same position during the war and worked 13 hours a day for $3,500 a year, when Charles Johnson & Co., ink manufacturers, of Philadelphia, offered him $7,500 a year if he would quit the Government service and enter their employ; but he felt it his duty to serve his country in time of war and remained in the Government service.

In this connection I wish to read a letter—and by the way, Mr. Wilmeth, Mr. Fisher, and Mr. Deviny all received similar letters—addressed to Mr. Rose from the Treasury Department at Washington, dated March 7, 1921. The letter is as follows:

DEAR MR. ROSE: During my term as Assistant Secretary I have given much time and attention to the affairs of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and have been greatly pleased and impressed with its management and personnel. Your work has especially commended itself to me, and I wish now to thank you for your hearty cooperation and support. I am soon to leave the Treasury Department, and before doing so it is desired to express to you my personal feelings and regards.

With kindest regards and best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

J. H. MOYLE,
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Thus the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, a Democrat, wrote to Mr. Rose, a Republican, whom he had promoted. That was the character he had then, and I take it the character that he has now.

Let me take another case. E. H. Ashworth has been in the bureau 28½ years. He was the custodian of dies, rolls, and plates—possibly the most responsible position in the service. He is not of the organization, but is a check on the organization. The law requires that he be checked up each year; so the present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, appointed a committee, and all of them were Republicans, and they put in three months investigating this particular department, this division, this office that Mr. Ashworth holds. They completed their investigation and made their report to the Secretary of the Treasury at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon last. With that report went a letter from these three Republicans especially commending Mr. Ashworth for his efficiency, for his faithfulness, and for the condition in which they found the matters under his custody. They commended him in a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. At 6.45 the same evening the President, by an Executive order, disgraced and dismissed this man from the public service—commended by a committee that had a thorough knowledge of his efficiency, of his character, and of the services he was rendering; commended at 4 o'clock and dismissed and disgraced by the Executive at 6.45 that same day; and his case is not altogether alone.

Here is Ralph H. Chappell. He is a graduate of Annapolis, an officer in the American Navy once, a veteran of the Spanish-American War. We was in charge of machinery. He got $3,000 a year. No complaint ever has been made against him, and yet by this same Executive order he was dismissed from the service and is a disgraced man.

Take H. I. Wilson, an overseas veteran of the last war, a man in charge of a bureau, drawing $3,600 a year, a man who quit his place when war came and went across the sea and offered to die for our flag. He came back and went to work at his old employment, and without a minute's notice, without a charge being made against him, without an opportunity to speak in his own behalf, is summarily dismissed from the service.

James A. Chamberlain, foreman of the garage down there, was also an ex-service man, getting $1,600 a year. He was driven out of public employment, driven out of an opportunity to make an honest living, disgraced by an Executive order, and the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury now says there is not even an implication against the character of any of those men for either inefficiency or integrity!

Mr. Hill, who got the job that Mr. Wilmeth had, possibly disclosed the real reason. I want to read his little interview for whatever it is worth. Mr. Hill says:

Of course, the Democratic Senators will howl when they see good Democrats turned out of office, but they are guilty of the same thing. There are Republicans who came back with my appointment yesterday who were discharged last July by Democratic officials.

I presume he means July of year before last, because there were no Democrats in power in July last year to discharge them.

Mr. HARRISON. Where is he from?

Mr. CARAWAY. I think he is from Ohio.

Mr. Hill thinks—whether he knows or not—that it was a political matter, because he gave out that interview. He hastened to do it; he can not wait until he gets his seat warm as director of the bureau, until he says:

Of course, the Democratic Senators will howl when they see good Democrats turned out of office.

Hill's idea is that we howl about that. Mr. Hill may be a very efficient man, but he knows very little, I think, about the temperament of Members of the Senate, because I want to repeat, if it is necessary to return to the spoils system in order to save whatever there may be of this administration from going on the rocks, if you have the courage to do it, go back to the spoils system. I have had some sympathy with the belief that to the party in power belongs the offices; but I do not think you ought to get them and be a hypocrite about it. I think you ought to show more courage in getting these places than you do in taking the post offices away from Democrats by pretending to have a civil-service examination which does not disclose anything except whom the political boss in that particular country wants. That is all it discloses—not efficiency. It is not intended to disclose it; but, except for the hypocrisy, I have no objection to your taking those offices.

These men who have gone out—men who have toiled early and late, from early manhood until past middle age, to build up a reputation as honorable and intelligent men in the community, who have wives and children—have a right to expect that you will have courage enough to say that you took their places for political reasons, and not reflect upon them either as to their efficiency or as to their character.

The Post—and I think it has a better right to speak for this administration than the administration has to speak for itself, because I think their policies are initiated about 50–50; the Post as often suggests to the President as the President suggests to the Post, but between them there is always harmony—the Post says, quoting an article, that both the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury deny that there was any investigation of the bureau prior to the Executive order dismissing these men. Now, the Attorney General has ordered a probe to find out why it was the President dismissed these people. First, act; discharge the men; disgrace the men; disrupt the public service; and then put the Attorney General behind the movement to find out why it was that the President did it! Of course the President and the Attorney General both know why it was done, but now they are to have an investigation.

It reminds me very much of a story of the first jury trial alleged to have happened in California. The rule used to be to hang a man charged with stealing a horse, and investigate whether or not he was guilty at some time when nothing else was pressing; but a lot of people wanted a jury trial—a good old jury trial as they had had it in New England—and finally public sentiment became so strong that one man charged with horse stealing was given a trial. The evidence was produced and the arguments made, and the jury instructed and retired. Just as they were about to reach a verdict of "Not guilty," some man came and kicked on the door and said: "Here, you jury have got to go somewhere else to consider this case. We want this room to lay out the corpse in." They had hanged the man while the jury was determining his innocence.

These men are discharged from the service, disgraced, and the Attorney General now is asked to find some reason that will justify the President in having so acted, and the Post says this:

Justice officials ordered to probe engraving bureau—Attorney General to hold "exhaustive investigation" after Wilmeth's removal.

In another headline from this same official organ that always knows what the President thinks he knows it says that after this investigation is had some officials assert that the facts will sustain the "quick action" taken by the President. In other words, the Attorney General now is going to find a reason that will justify in the minds of the American people the action of the President; and if I may be permitted to say so, basing my observation on what I have observed of the Attorney General's pliancy, he will find whatever the administration wants him to find. He will find, wherever they want him to find it, corruption. He will find, wherever they want him to find it, inefficiency. He will find whatever in the opinion of the President of these United States and the Attorney General is necessary to justify the President for issuing this outrageous Executive order and disgracing these men who so long and so faithfully had labored for the public good.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I have heard the charge made, and the intimation that it was true, but so far it has gotten no response from the Attorney General, that his great address delivered in Cincinnati is submitted to certain powerful lobbyists for their approval before it is even given to the Associated Press.

Mr. CARAWAY. The present Attorney General?

Mr. STANLEY. That the present Attorney General is in the habit of calling in known lobbyists, paid lobbyists, and submitting for their approval printed copies of addresses, one of which was an address delivered to the American Bar Association in Cincinnati. A man who will do that will certainly be pliant to a President or anybody else.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, I should say that I think the Attorney General does well to submit his remarks to somebody before he delivers them. I felt about the Attorney General, from what I heard about him, like this: We had a Senator from my State at one time—Senator Clarke. He very cynically said that appointive offices were created for those who could not be elected to office; and I thought it was very appropriate, then, that the President should give to the Attorney General one of these appointive offices.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STANLEY. There is hope for the Attorney General. It is said of a predecessor in his office that after he went out one Senator asked another what had become of the ex-Attorney General. He replied: "He is down in Philadelphia studying law." There is hope for this one.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; no. He has had an opportunity and did not, and he will not.

The junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] hands me a newspaper clipping. Is this from the Post?

Mr. HEFLIN. From the News.

Mr. CARAWAY. Its headline is:

"Politics cause," says Sack. Finds dismissals result of congressional complaints.

And he says that Congressman FESS, chairman of the Republican congressional committee, and Representative MADDEN, of Illinois, chairman of the powerful Appropriations Committee, had both been down interviewing the department and demanding that places be given to the faithful. The article is as follows:

POLITICS CAUSE, SAYS SACK—FINDS DISMISSALS RESULT OF CONGRESSONAL COMPLAINTS.

(By Leo R. Sack.)

Pressure applied by Republican Congressmen tired of seeing Democrats hold down soft positions in Government bureaus in Washington is chiefly responsible for the overnight shakeup of executive personnel in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Changes at the bureau are regarded by well-informed Republican Congressmen as a first step in administration house cleaning which has as its object substitution of "deserving" Republicans for Democrat officeholders.

Changes at the Shipping Board, occurring to-day, are a part of the general scheme of reorganization.

TILSON SEES PRESIDENT.

In every Government department, with the exception of the Departments of State and Commerce, Republican Congressmen allege choice jobs are held by Democrats, and constituents of theirs who, under the rules of the game, should be taken care of can not be placed. The action at the Shipping Board and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was taken, Congressmen say, in an effort to prevent open protest on the floor of the House of Representatives by Representative TILSON, of Connecticut, chief of the Republican complainers.

TILSON, accompanied by Representative FESS, of Ohio, chairman of the Republican congressional committee, and Representative MADDEN, of Illinois, chairman of the powerful Appropriations Committee, took their complaint to Chairman Lasker, of the Shipping Board, early in the week. The Shipping Board immediately began house cleaning. W. E. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, who would "play ball" with the Congressmen, was installed as comptroller.

"BE PATIENT," HE IS TOLD.

TILSON went to the White House with his complaint and was told to be patient; that matters were being straightened out.

TILSON later received a visit from John Adams, chairman of the Republican national committee, who also pleaded patience.

"We are working on it," Adams is reported to have told TILSON.

Congressmen were especially enraged over failure of Secretary of the Treasury Mellon to supplant Democrats with Republicans.

INTERNAL REVENUE NEXT SPOT?

They charge the Bureau of Internal Revenue, one of the largest organizations in the Government service, is literally permeated with Democrats. In an effort to straighten out this situation Elmer Dover, northwestern manager of the Republican national committee during the Harding campaign, was named Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. Dover and Collector of Internal Revenue Blair are now at loggerheads, presumably because Blair won't turn his department upside down in order to give jobs to Republicans.

Congressmen expect additional changes within the Treasury Department in a short time.

They do not want to return to their home districts to face charges of petty politicians that despite a Republican administration "Democrats are holding all the jobs."

Mr. President, the first play I ever saw that I recall, in which Blanche Bates was starring——

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is this discussion in order if objection is made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The discussion is not in order, but it is proceeding without objection.

Mr. McCORMICK. Inasmuch as the facts may be laid upon the Senate upon inquiry if the resolution goes over, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, just one moment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me a moment, before the Senator from Arkansas proceeds with his statement he asked that he be permitted to make a statement, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] said that he would like to go on with the business of the Senate, but that he would not object, and no one else objected and the Senator proceeded; and I think that was tantamount to unanimous consent.

Mr. McCORMICK. If my friend the Senator from Alabama be right in his contention, the Senator from Arkansas could continue until the conclusion of business to-day.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; and would not waste half as much time as the Senator from Illinois has.

Mr. HEFLIN. He should be given a reasonable amount of time to finish his statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). There has been no unanimous consent given. The Senator from Arkansas was proceeding because there was no objection made. The regular order is called for.

Mr. McCORMICK. I do not mean to be discourteous to the Senator from Arkansas, but I insist on the regular order.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is all the Senator can do. He can do that, however, as well as anyone. I want to have the resolution read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 267) as follows:

Whereas without notice as required by law, and without warning, the President of the United States, under an Executive order issued Friday, March 31, 1922, dismissed James L. Wilmeth, Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and 31 other chiefs of divisions of that bureau; and

Whereas all of said persons were within the classified service; and

Whereas the law permits the dismissal of persons within the classified service only after written notice of and an opportunity to reply to charges should be given the accused: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public good, (a) what facts warranted the dismissal of the men mentioned, from the classified service; (b) on what authority and by what authority he dismissed these employees from the service.

Mr. CARAWAY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration and adoption of the resolution.

Mr. McCORMICK. I object.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the resolution go over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule, the resolution will go over.

Mr. CARAWAY. I give notice that after the conclusion of the morning hour I shall continue and conclude these remarks, with the permission of the Senator from Illinois.

MALT LIQUORS AND WINES FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask that Order of Business No. 2, being Senate resolution 117, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to the Senate a copy of the regulations reported to have been drawn by the Bureau of Internal Revenue to provide for the use of malt liquors and wines for medicinal purposes, which has been on the calendar for some months, be indefinitely postponed. This is a resolution introduced by me at the time we were considering the antibeer bill and was a request for information. It has been on the calendar and is called every time the calendar is called, and it is wholly dead and useless. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

HOSPITALIZATION OF EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am obliged to leave the Chamber within a few minutes, to be gone for an hour, and I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed 10 minutes. The subject upon which I desire to speak is House bill 10864, being a bill appropriating $17,000,000 for the hospitalization of ex-service men.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not like to object, but this morning was set aside especially by rule for the consideration of the calendar, and if the time is going to be taken up by debate it will be impossible to consider the calendar. Therefore I shall have to object.

Mr. ASHURST. I will state to the Senator that I can compress my remarks into seven or eight minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator will limit his talk to five minutes, I shall not object.

Mr. ASHURST. I think I can finish in a few minutes.

This bill passed the House on the 31st of March, and was sent to the Senate this morning, appropriates the sum of $17,000,000, to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended, for the further hospitalization of ex-service men.

It provides, amongst other things, that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, subject to the President's order, shall have the power to expand and increase present existing hospital facilities for ex-service men and to acquire additional sites and build new hospitals thereon.

The Senate will remember that I have discussed this subject several times, and upon this occasion I am painfully reminded of the fact that althoug' we have a committee which was appointed to investigate this important subject—that committee is composed of five of our most esteemed Senators—and I have urged repeatedly that they go to Arizona to investigate this subject, I have been unable to get the committee to go to Arizona.

Mr. President, what are the facts? I read from the El Paso Times of Sunday, March 26, 1922——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I inquire from what the Senator is reading?

Mr. ASHURST. I am reading from the El Paso Times of Sunday, March 26, 1922. Since the Senator has interrupted me, I will say that he is a member of the committee, and I ask him now to tell the Senate and the country that he is willing to go and investigate these conditions, because if I can induce the other members of the committee to come into the Chamber I am going to ask them why they refuse to go to Arizona to investigate these conditions.

This is the fifth speech I have made laying these facts before the country. It is not improved. It has grown steadily worse. What excuse have Senators to offer for such a flagrant disregard for public duty?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Having asked the Senator a question, I will now yield to him, but let him be brief.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Of course the Senator will understand that the nature of our duties here in the Senate has prevented the committee from traveling throughout the country to inspect the hospital accommodations provided for our disabled soldiers as they have desired. The problem the Senator has under consideration is of an administrative character. The Chief of the Veterans' Bureau or some official in that bureau should have investigated the conditions the Senator has described, and should have prescribed a remedy, for that bureau has the money, the means, and the facilities to remedy the conditions. The criticism, if justified, should not be directed against the committee but against the executive department. I might add that I have personally visited enough of these temporary hospitals in my own State to agree with the Senator in the belief that much is to be desired in improving conditions.

Mr. ASHURST. I have laid the matter before the Veterans' Bureau. These ex-service men have the right to have a voice in selecting the place where they desire to receive hospitalization.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Of course, the Senator is very properly going to urge the passage of the appropriation bill, in which action I heartily concur. It is of very pressing importance and of the greatest necessity to get the appropriation for more hospital bills passed. I join with the Senator in the assertion that when the day of reckoning comes to find those chargeable with the neglect of our disabled ex-service men, not only will the administrative offices of the Government be subject to condemnation but the Congress of the United States, because of its repeated delays in passing appropriation bills providing for the building of hospitals, will be equally subject to severe condemnation.

The article referred to by Mr. ASHURST is as follows:

[From the El Paso Times, Sunday, March 26, 1922.]

UNITED STATES RED TAPE LEAVES STRICKEN VETS TO DIE ON TUCSON STREETS.

(By Gene Cohn.)

TUCSON, March 25.—Invisible bars of official red tape and Government regulation block the gates of Pastime Park here to hundreds of tubercular veterans of the World War entitled to hospitalization and in need of expert attention.

Massed in Tucson against the life-sapping disease are 1,200 stricken "buddies."

Two hundred and seventy-eight are now crowded together in hastily built frame hospital wards and 1-room cottages. A recent inspection showed the 6-foot-apart regulation on cot spacing was violated.

Soon the number of patients in these temporary quarters will have to be reduced to 252. Death and a summer exodus may solve the problem.

But for the 1,000 others—there is no room.

They are scattered about in cheap lodging houses, private homes, and hotels. Many have had to walk the streets and daily face denial of the care their critical conditions necessitate.

A few have some money. But their tiny savings are fast dwindling. Most of them are too ill to work. Every one is a potential emergency case.

NO ROOM IN PARK.

Yet there is no room for him at Pastime Park, the incongruously named hospital provided here for the men who helped win the war and now strive to win the battle for life.

What is more—a recent order from Major General Forbes, head of the Government's Veterans' Bureau, says that no more men will be sent to the Tucson station.

And still more—the Chamber of Commerce of Tucson, with citizens of this "city of healing air," have had for a year in the hands of Washington officialdom an offer to provide a $500,000 permanent hospital, built to meet the summer heat, equipped with modern conveniences—they have offered to rent such a place to Uncle Sam; have offered to solve the problem for him, and no reply has ever been received!

PROBE BARES CONDITION.

Such is a summary of high lights contained in a report Ralph A. Horr, vice commander of the Disabled Veterans of the World War, will take to Washington after an investigation here in which I participated.

These statistics were provided by Claude Smith, local commander of the disabled veterans' organization that pioneered the fight against existing conditions. In this fight A. I. Irvin, head of the local American Legion post, is now joined.

And supplying further data is Dr. S. H. James, commander of the hospital.

"A real emergency exists," he says. "It will grow worse in another year, and within four years the peak will be reached. By that time the temporary wooden structures may be falling to pieces."

Says Claude Smith: "I have listed the name of each man in this section entitled to hospitalization and not getting it. I am one of them, but I have a little money. I have given this to Commander Horr, together with data of what the fellows have been and are now up against."

OTHER STATIONS.

The Government has in this district tuberculosis stations at Prescott, Ariz., at Camp Kearny, San Diego, is opening another at Livermore, Calif., and is prepared to send tubercular veterans to a number of other camps.

"But there are other elements to meet," points out Doctor James. "Cases involving heart disturbances, asthmatic conditions, throat and nervous troubles are affected by climate or altitude of these other stations.

"In Tucson alone are all these elements overcome. The sufferers have a Tucson psychology. You can send them to San Diego or Prescott, or where you will, but they won't stay there. They feel better here and they're going to come if they have to walk."

"And they come here whether the Government provides for them or not," declares Irvin. "They come by freight car or on the brake-beams—but they come, and what are you going to do about it?"

Men have collapsed in the street while waiting for a chance in the hospital. Red tape in the Veterans' Bureau has held men weeks and months—periods when they were in dire need of attention—before they could enter Pastime Park.

"I don't know what might have happened to scores of the fellows if we hadn't been on the job to help," say Smith and Irvin in chorus. "We've dug down in our pockets and in the public pockets. The Red Cross fund has all but been exhausted, for there have been 1,000 men around here who couldn't get in."

Who's to blame?

"The Veterans' Bureau blames the Senators and the Senators pass it along; but we do know that the local veterans' bureau has its hands pretty well tied with red tape," Smith charges.

Officials of the local veterans' bureau admit the emergency. General Forbes "seems to have been misinformed," said one who can not be quoted.

Citizens of Tucson, backed by the chamber of commerce, did much toward building such places as now are provided.

While delays and red tape kept hundreds waiting about the city, a "field day" was declared. Hundreds went out and threw together the temporary structures.

For 192 men there are but three showers, and there are three more for the other men in the wards. The frail cottages do not withstand the summer heat, and bring only discomfort.

The only solution is a permanent and properly built hospital.

Otherwise hundreds will die from Government neglect.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator was yielded five minutes to conclude his remarks and he has now occupied 10 minutes. I hope that he will not take any further time.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in conclusion I am proud of the action of the House of Representatives in having passed the bill appropriating $17,000,000 to further hospitalize these soldiers; the bill should have been passed six months ago. I urge the Committee on Appropriations, not to-morrow but to-day, to consider the bill and report it to the Senate at the earliest possible moment and then, Mr. President, the Veterans' Bureau——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. ASHURST. This is an important subject. This is one of the most important subjects that can come before the Congress. I beg of the Senator from Kansas not to press for the regular order for a moment or two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask three or four minutes to lay the matter before the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. The bill will be before the Senate at a later time, and the Senator can discuss it then. The Senator is preventing other Senators from doing any business at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I want to be recognized under the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CURTIS and Mr. ASHURST addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I demand recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that we begin the call of the calendar at Order of Business No. 499.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the call of the calendar shall begin with Order of Business No. 499. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary will report the first bill on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The bill (S. 3140) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to extend the time for payment of construction charges under Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I shall not take over two minutes to finish.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator has five minutes on this bill. Let him proceed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ASHURST. I have only five minutes, but I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I heard the Senator state, just before he was interrupted, that many new hospitals had been built throughout the country for the care of disabled soldiers. I wish to read just a line from the report made last fall by the committee to which he referred:

On August 1, 1920, not a single new hospital had been completed, although the first $9,000,000 appropriation was made in March, 1919.

As a matter of fact, there have been no new hospitals built, or at least completed, unless it has happened during the last few weeks. Up to date only makeshift and temporary hospital facilities have been provided. The long delays in and out of Congress in solving this problem is a sad commentary on our boasted sense of gratitude.

Mr. ASHURST. I may have misspoken. I am willing to give the bureau and the Treasury Department all the credit that is due. The soldier shares in the general belief that if he is afflicted with tuberculosis a certain climate will arrest the progress of the disease.

In conclusion I again urge that committee to go to Arizona and investigate conditions and, respectfully, of course, I urge the Committee on Appropriations at the earliest possible moment to report the bill H. R. 10864, which makes an appropriation of $17,000,000 for further hospitalization.

I return the bill to the desk. I yield the floor.

CONSTRUCTION CHARGES ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending bill on the calendar is Senate bill 3140, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to extend the time for payment of construction charges under Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with an amendment, in line 11, on page 1, to strike out "one year" and insert "two years," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That where an individual water user or individual applicant for a water right under a Federal irrigation project constructed or being constructed under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., p. 388), or any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, is unable to pay any construction charge due and payable in the year 1922, or prior thereto, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to extend the date of payment of any such charge for a period not to exceed two years from December 31, 1922: Provided, That the applicant for the extension shall first show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior by a detailed verified statement of his assets and liabilities, an actual inability to make payment at the time the application is made, and an apparent ability to meet the deferred charge when the extension expires; also in cases where water for irrigation is available, that the applicant is a landowner or entryman actually cultivating the land against which the charge has accrued: Provided further, That similar relief may be extended by the Secretary of the Interior to an organized group of water users of a project, upon presentation of a sufficient number of individual showings made in accordance with the foregoing proviso to satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that such extension is necessary: And provided further, That each charge so extended shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from its due date in lieu of any penalty that may now be provided by law, but in case such charge is not paid at the end of such extension period, any penalty that would have been applicable save for such extension shall attach from the date the charge was originally due, the same as if no extension had been granted.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, after due investigation, to furnish irrigation water on Federal irrigation projects during the irrigation season of 1922 to landowners or entrymen who are in arrears for more than one calendar year in the payment of any operation and maintenance or construction charge, notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 13, 1914 (38 Stat., p. 686): Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to relieve any beneficiary hereunder from payments due or penalties thereon required by said act: Provided further, That the relief provided by this section shall be extended only to landowners or entrymen who are actually cultivating the land against which the charges have accrued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN ALABAMA.

The bill (S. 3156) to change the terms of the district court for the northern division of the southern district of Alabama was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last sentence of section 70 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Terms of the district court for the southern division shall be held at Mobile on the fourth Mondays in May and November; and for the northern division at Selma on the second Mondays in January and July."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN COLORADO.

The bill (S. 2967) to amend section 73 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended by an act approved June 12, 1916, was announced as next in order and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 73 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended by an act approved June 12, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 73. That the State of Colorado shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Colorado. Terms of the district court shall be held at Denver on the first Tuesday in May and November, at Pueblo on the first Tuesday in April, at Grand Junction on the second Tuesday in September, at Montrose on the third Tuesday in September, at Durango on the fourth Tuesday in September, and at Alamosa on the first Tuesday in October.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury in constructing the public buildings heretofore authorized to be constructed at the cities of Grand Junction and Durango be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to provide accommodations in each of said buildings for post office, United States court, and other governmental offices, and the existing authorizations for said buildings be, and the same are hereby, respectively amended accordingly; and the unexpended balance of all appropriations heretofore made for the construction of said buildings and all appropriations which may be provided in any pending legislation, or that hereafter may be made for the construction of said buildings, are hereby made available for the purpose stated in this paragraph: Provided, That if at the time of holding the terms of said court in any year in any of the said cities of Grand Junction, Durango, and Alamosa there is no business to be transacted by said court the term may be adjourned or continued by order of the judge of said court in chambers at Denver, Colo.: And provided further, That the marshal and clerk of said court shall each, respectively, appoint at least one deputy to reside at and who shall maintain an office at each of the five said places where said court is to be held by the terms of this act."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire whether the bill involves any additional expense?

Mr. NELSON. The only change in existing law is to create another place for holding court in Colorado. It is otherwise simply a repetition of existing law.

Mr. KING. Will it necessitate the erection of another building for holding court?

Mr. NELSON. I do not think that will be necessary at all. Colorado is a large State and this is for the convenience of the people.

Mr. KING. If it is preliminary to a large appropriation for another courthouse——

Mr. NELSON. No; it carries no appropriation and makes no change in the existing law. It simply permits the court to be held in another place.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether it is contemplated, when this bill is passed, that an appropriation will be sought to erect another courthouse?

Mr. NELSON. I know nothing about it. I do not think so, however. At least I have had no intimation of that kind.

Mr. KING. Of course, it is quite clear that it may involve a very large appropriation subsequently for the erection of another courthouse. I should be very glad to be advised about it.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator objects, I suggest that the bill be temporarily passed over until the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] returns to the Chamber.

Mr. KING. May we temporarily lay it aside and return to it when the Senator from Colorado is present?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be passed over temporarily without prejudice.

PAROLE OF PRISONERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 534) to amend an act entitled "An act to parole United States prisoners, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, as amended by an act approved January 23, 1913, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to parole United States prisoners, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 819), as amended by an act approved January 23, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 650), be amended to read as follows:

"That every prisoner who has been or may hereafter be convicted of any offense against the United States and is confined in the execution of the judgment of such conviction in any United States penitentiary or prison for a definite term or terms over one year, or for the term of his natural life, whose record of conduct shows that he has observed the rules of such institution, and who, if sentenced for a definite term or terms of more than one year, has served one-third of the total of such term or terms for which he was sentenced, or, if sentenced for the term or terms of more than 45 years, or for the term of his natural life, has served not less than 15 years, may be released on parole as hereinafter provided."

SEC. 2. That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to parole United States prisoners, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That if it shall appear to said board of parole from a report by the proper officers of such prison or upon application by a prisoner for release on parole, that there is a reasonable probability that such applicant will live and remain at liberty without violating the laws, and if in the opinion of the board such release is not incompatible with the welfare of society, then said board of parole may in its discretion authorize the release of such applicant on parole, and he shall be allowed to go on parole outside of said prison, and, in the discretion of the board, to return to his home, upon such terms and conditions, including personal reports from such paroled person, as said board of parole shall prescribe, and to remain, while on parole, in the legal custody and under the control of the warden of such prison from which paroled, and until the expiration of the term or terms specified in his sentence, less such good-time allowance as is or may hereafter be provided for by act of Congress; and the said board shall, in every parole, fix the limits of the residence of the person paroled, which limits may thereafter be changed in the discretion of the board: Provided, That when any prisoner has been at large on parole for five full years and has faithfully kept the conditions of his parole, the board of parole may, in its discretion, order his final discharge from custody and release him from further supervision on parole: And provided further, That no release of parole shall become operative until the findings of the board of parole under the terms hereof shall have been approved by the Attorney General of the United States."

Mr. KING. Is there any Senator here who can explain the difference between the bill as originally introduced and the committee amendment or between the bill and existing law?

Mr. NELSON. The radical and most material difference between the bill as originally introduced and the committee amendment is this: The original bill proposed to make it mandatory on the board to grant a parole when the prisoner had served for a certain length of time and his record for conduct had been good; but, as the Senator will observe by reading the second section of the substitute, the amendment leaves the matter of the prisoner's parole to the discretion of the parole board, and they may exercise their judgment upon the facts of the case.

The bill was referred to the Department of Justice and the department reported it back, recommending the substitute which is now reported by the committee.

As I have said, the main difference between the amendment and the original bill is that in one case such prisoners would be automatically paroled if they had served for a certain length of time and had complied with certain rules, while under the proposed amendment it is left discretionary with the parole board to apply their judgment to the case in every instance.

Mr. KING. Does the bill as reported by the committee propose to shorten the period of service before prisoners may have the privilege of the parole?

Mr. NELSON. It does in some respects, but does not in others. It makes the matter a little clearer and more definite as to life convicts. If the Senator from Utah will observe the language, he will notice that convicts who are sentenced for 45 years or for life are made eligible for parole after they shall have served 15 years if they have a record for good behavior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary to the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 14) providing for the election of a delegate to the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Obviously, the consideration of that bill would involve a great deal of debate. I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3111) to authorize the collection in monthly installments of indebtedness due the United States by general prisoners restored to duty, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], who is a member of the Military Affairs Committee, if he is familiar with this bill and what changes it proposes to make in existing law?

Mr. NEW. I regret that I am not familiar with the provisions of the bill, Mr. President, and I do not know just what changes it proposes to make in existing law.

Mr. KING. I will ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 4) granting relief to soldiers and sailors of the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign, to widows, former widows, and dependent parents of such soldiers and sailors, and to certain Army nurses was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

RECORDS OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN IN WORLD WAR.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia, and making an appropriation therefor, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments on page 2, after line 15, to strike out sections 2 and 3, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is further authorized and directed to furnish to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia a tabulated statement for each unit of the Army which served during the World War, which statement shall show, as to each unit, the following:

(a) The title of the organization; the race of the unit, white or Negro; the date it was authorized; its maximum strength; where and when mobilized or organized; and when it left the United States, if at all, for service overseas; its stations, assignments, and service, both in the United States and overseas, with the dates thereof, and appropriate remark as to combat or other service of importance; when returned to the United States; when and where demobilized, transferred, or otherwise discontinued as a distinct organization: Provided, That overseas service for the purpose of this act shall include any service outside or beyond the continental limits of the United States. If the unit did not go overseas, the stations in the United States shall be given.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is further authorized and directed to furnish to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia a tabulation and statement showing the designation of each noncombatant unit which formed a part of or was attached to any division or other tactical unit during the World War, and the dates of joining or relief therefrom, in such form as may be used as an addition to the histories of divisions and other tactical units heretofore furnished to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia.

On page 3, line 20, to change the number of the section from "4" to "2"; in line 23, to strike out "$350,000" and insert "$250,000"; and on page 3, line 24, to change the number of the section from "5" to "3," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia, for historical purposes, the following documents and information concerning officers and soldiers from their respective States and the District of Columbia who were in the military service of the United States during the World War:

(a) True and correct copies of the individual record cards of all officers and all enlisted or selected men, excepting such as have heretofore been so furnished.

(b) A statement as to each officer or enlisted or selected man who died in the service, showing the place and date of death of such officer or man and the cause of death, whether by wounds, accident, or disease; and such statement shall be furnished in each case, irrespective of whether the individual record card of such officer or man has heretofore or is to be hereafter furnished. In all such cases, if death occurred in hospital, the name or number and the location of such hospital shall appear; and if death occurred in action or in the field, the official designation of such action, if any, together with the local designation of the place where the same occurred shall appear.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $250,000.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be effective from the date of approval by the President.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD following the bill which has just been passed.

There being no objection, the report (No. 513) submitted by Mr. WADSWORTH on February 24, 1922, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia, and making an appropriation therefor, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass with the following amendments:

Strike out sections 2 and 3.

On page 3, at the end of line 20, strike out the sum of "$350,000" and insert "$250,000."

On page 3, line 21, after "Sec.," strike out the figure "5" and insert the figure "3."

This measure is explained in a report from the Secretary of War, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 16, 1922.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Referring to Senate bill 2992, providing for the completion of the statements of service of World War soldiers and for the furnishing of a historical sketch of each organization in service during that war, I earnestly recommend that provision for the completion of the statements of service be made at the earliest practicable date.

The completion of the statements of service is a necessary preliminary to the handling of claims for bonus, and should the bill for bonus pass it is most desirable that all causes for delay in its payment be eliminated. All preliminary work should be completed in advance of the receipt of applications for bonus and all causes for delay removed. Failure to complete the statements of service would be a cause of delay that can be removed by providing for their completion in the near future.

It is further recommended that sections 2 and 3 be eliminated from the proposed bill, as the work involved in those sections would interfere with the prompt completion of the statements of service and is not so urgent that it can not be deferred until after the completion of the statements of service and the work incident to the payment of the bonus. If sections 2 and 3 are eliminated, the amount ($350,000) carried in the proposed bill should be reduced to $250,000.

This proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, as required by paragraph 3b of circular No. 49 of that bureau, and the director advises that this requested legislation is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Yours truly,

JOHN W. WEEKS,
Secretary of War.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 5214) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

RICHARD P. M'CULLOUGH.

The bill (H. R. 2558) for the relief of Richard P. McCullough was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore Commander Richard P. McCullough, United States Navy, to a place on the list of commanders of the Navy to rank next after Commander Walter Albert Smead, United States Navy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington whether, if this bill shall be passed, it will automatically advance to higher grades the officers who are in advance of the position which Mr. McCullough will occupy under the bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It will have no effect on the grades of these officers. It will advance Mr. McCullough to some extent, but this is justified by the circumstances stated in the report. He will not be advanced, however, to his original position. He will still suffer the loss of some numbers.

Mr. KING. I recall the committee considering this case, but some of the facts in the multitude of other bills which come before the Senate have escaped my recollection. I recall, however, that the board which made one examination—and it is referred to on page 3 of the report accompanying the bill—said:

The board, having proceeded to deliberate upon the evidence before it, * * * decided that the mental, moral, and professional fitness of the candidate to perform the duties of a naval officer, at sea, in the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) has been established to its satisfaction, but that in the subject of navigation the candidate shows in his written examination papers a deficiency in the satisfactory working knowledge of that subject necessary for promotion to lieutenant.

I inquire of the Senator whether the error which was made in the grading of his examination papers is responsible for this report?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is one of the chief circumstances that the committee considered in making a favorable report on the bill.

Mr. KING. Suppose that there had been no error in the grading—the error which was afterwards discovered by Admiral Kimball, and which he attempted to rectify? Assume that there had been no error in the computation or in the grading. Would this officer still have been deficient in navigation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think not. The committee assumes not, although there was no way of determining positively whether that would have been the case or not. I assume, from the fact of the examining officer reporting that fact and calling attention to it, that he meant to imply that if the mistake had not been made the officer would have qualified.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that they can very readily determine whether that error was responsible for his failure to receive the proper rating in order to qualify; and if by making the correction he would be able to qualify, that fact ought to be very clearly apparent, it seems to me, from the papers and the ratings.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The committee assumed that that was the case, judging from the fact that the examining officer called especial attention to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is not very clear, but I shall not object. I should like, however, to ask the Senator a further question in regard to this bill and also in regard to House bill 7870, the next bill on the calendar. Both of these bills seem to be for the relief of men who failed to pass the necessary and statutory examination. Now, they come back, some time afterwards, and say, "We failed in the examination. We want to be restored to the grade that we would have been entitled to occupy if we had not failed." It occurs to me that if we proceed to restore to positions everybody that fails, or any considerable number of those who fail, we might just as well abolish the system of examination and promotion based upon fitness and upon examination. It occurs to me that we are opening the door for a deluge of bills. We know that a large number of young men have failed in their examinations. It is a very dangerous precedent, it seems to me.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I agree entirely with the position of the Senator so far as it concerns the inadvisability of restoring to their grades everybody that has failed in an examination for promotion, and if this bill had no other basis than that, of course, the committee would not have recommended it. These two cases are peculiar cases. They arose at a time when there was a change in the regulations of the department in regard to allowing a reexamination of officers where there had been a failure upon one subject. Prior to that time, officers had been allowed an opportunity to stand a second examination where there had been a slight deficiency in the first examination, and these officers supposed they would have the benefit of that; but there was a change in the regulations by which they were denied it.

There is another circumstance in the case of both of these officers that the committee thought justified the partial relief that is given in their cases. In the first place, they are not promoted to a higher rank. They simply get a somewhat advanced position in the rank which they already hold. The bills would restore to them some of the numbers which they lost in that rank. The reason they lost so many numbers was that in losing a year's seniority, as it is called, they not only went to the foot of their own class but in the meantime another class had graduated from the Naval Academy, by reason of a change in the date of the graduation of that class, within less than one year; so that these two men went to the foot not only of their own class but also of the succeeding class.

The circumstances were these: The officers in question had been at sea. They came back without very much opportunity for preparation for this examination, and they failed very slightly upon the subject of navigation. One of these men had been engaged for months in engineering duties on board ship and had had no opportunity to refresh his mind on the subject of navigation. They have both passed with distinction many examinations since that time for higher rank, and both of them served with distinction in the war. Commander Johnson received the Navy cross from the United States and the cross of the Legion of Honor from France for distinguished service in the war with Germany, and was cited for bravery in action in the capture of Vera Cruz. Commander McCullough was cited by the Governments, both of Great Britain and the United States, for his conduct in command of a ship in an attack upon an enemy submarine. In view of those circumstances, and the peculiar conditions under which the loss of seniority occurred, the committee felt that to advance them a certain series of numbers in the rank which they already hold was justified.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have such great confidence in my friend from Washington that, in view of his statement, I shall not oppose these bills; but I should like to ask him one question. Does the Senator think that the passage of these bills will not afford a precedent which will in the future result in numerous applications for remedial legislation and tend to affect the morale of the school and of the classes and to induce persons who failed to try to bring political pressure to bear to secure their reinstatement or to secure their advancement and promotion to grades which they failed to attain by reason of their failure to pass the examination?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No, Mr. President; it would not have that effect. In the first place, there are already a number of precedents in various Congresses, which are set out in the report of the committee, for action of this kind. It could not apply except under the circumstances and conditions of these cases. It could not possibly have the effect of relieving every officer who failed to some extent in his examination of the result of that failure. If it had that effect, I should oppose it as vigorously as the Senator from Utah suggests.

I have no personal interest of any kind whatever in either one of these cases, but they seem to be meritorious cases. An injustice seems to have been done to these meritorious, brave, and efficient officers, who through a long course of service subsequent to the occurrences recited in these bills seem to have earned the recognition which they are given.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just one word. I shall not oppose these bills; but I suggest to the Senator that we have before the committee now a number of cases which seem to me to be appealing. The Senator knows that a number of men went into the Air Service and discharged with ability and fidelity the responsible duties which rested upon them. They took the examination after the war, here quite recently, for permanent positions in the Navy. Though they were proficient fliers, the very best that there were in the service, perhaps—though many of them were instructors as well as pilots, because they were somewhat deficient in navigation—and they had had nothing particularly to do with navigation in the technical sense, they were denied positions; and the Navy now, as I am advised, is seeking aviators, fliers, pilots, when it has discharged the very best men that there are in the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there is quite a question as to the wisdom of the policy applied in those examinations; and I think the entire question is very likely to be investigated under a resolution introduced by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. KING. Yes; the resolution has already passed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Those were examinations for original commissions, not cases of promotion of an officer, and involved none of the circumstances that are involved in these two bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to make a few remarks in reference to what I said the other day concerning the Shipping Board. I received a letter to-day from Mr. Lasker, the chairman of that board, in which he states that some of the facts which I stated were not correct. I do not desire to misrepresent Mr. Lasker or anyone else, and I take great pleasure in stating what he says. I quoted from the newspapers that the Shipping Board had 164 ships tied up in some river near New York, and it was claimed that they had 600 guards, and that they had allowed $400,000 of the Government's property to be stolen, and I commented upon that state of affairs. Mr. Lasker writes me that that is a mistake; that there was less than $1,000 worth of property stolen. I am glad to make the correction.

Mr. President, in what I said that day I had more reference particularly to the chairman of the board and the operators than I had to the other members. I am glad to know that not so much property has been stolen; but that does not materially change my opinion of the operation of this board. I do not claim to be an expert on shipping, but my information is that they have these ships overmanned, and that they have a great number of useless guards, and that they are going to tremendous expense that is unnecessary. It occurs to me that instead of keeping the ships up there in those cold waters, where they are frozen up, according to the newspapers, they might move them farther south and save considerable expense in coal and watching force, and so forth.

I criticized them for not getting more business and not making their operations more profitable. In that I am satisfied that I am correct, because I received my information from Mr. Lasker himself before the Commerce Committee, of which I am a member. He stated that wherever there were cargoes, and he could get an individual ship to take them, he was glad to hold back the Government ships and let the private operators carry the cargoes; and he further stated that he spent a great deal of his time in trying to find purchasers for these ships and people who would organize companies to take them over. I think, perhaps, his time might be better employed.

Mr. President, since I made those remarks I have received some letters criticizing the board very severely for their dilatory tactics in not settling with some of our citizens who have claims against the Shipping Board. They state that they are put to unnecessary delay, expense, and trouble; and if that is the case, I hope it will be corrected.

I am glad to make the correction, as I did not desire to misrepresent Mr. Lasker. I received my information from a newspaper.

I. C. JOHNSON, JR.

The bill (H. R. 7870) for the relief of I. C. Johnson, jr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore Commander Isaac C. Johnson, jr., United States Navy, to a place in the list of commanders in the United States Navy, to rank next after Commander Walter A. Smead, United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF HOMESTEAD ACT.

The bill (H. R. 8815) to amend the act of March 1, 1921 (41 Stat. p. 1202), entitled "An act to authorize certain homestead settlers or entrymen who entered the military or naval service of the United States during the war with Germany to make final proof of their entries," was announced as next in order, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved March 1, 1921 (41 Stat. p. 1202), be amended to read as follows: "That any bona fide settler, applicant, or entryman under the homestead laws of the United States, or any desert-land entryman whose entry is subject to the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. p. 388), who, after settlement, application, or entry, and prior to November 11, 1918, enlisted or was actually engaged in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the war with Germany, who has been honorably discharged and because of physical incapacities due to the service is unable to return to the land, may make final proof, without further residence, improvement, cultivation, or reclamation, at such time and place as may be authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, and receive patent to the land by him so entered or settled upon, subject to the provisions of the act or acts under which such settlement or entry was made: Provided, That no such patent shall issue prior to the conformation of the entry to a single farm unit, as required by the act of August 13, 1914 (38 Stat. p. 686): And provided further, That this act shall not be construed to exempt or relieve such applicant or entryman from payment of any lawful fees, commissions, purchase money, water charges, or other sums due to the United States, or its successors, in control of the reclamation project, in connection with such lands."

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to offer an amendment to the bill, and ask that it be temporarily passed over.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will prepare his amendment so that it can be taken up and considered. This is an important measure. It is simply to allow disabled soldiers to prove up on their homesteads without further delay.

Mr. PITTMAN. The amendment I have in mind is rather to enlarge it than to limit it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said:

I ask that the Senate return to the consideration of House bill 8815. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is willing that it shall be taken up now.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAHOE NATIONAL FOREST LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 8832) to provide for the exchange of certain lands of the United States in the Tahoe National Forest, Calif., for lands owned by William Kent, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States title to certain lands owned by William Kent and situate in the county of Placer, State of California, in section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, and within the Tahoe National Forest, free and clear of all incumbrances, more particularly described as follows:

Beginning at a point on the shore of Lake Tahoe, said point being the northeast corner of that part or parcel of lot 55 as delineated and designated upon that certain amended map of Sunnyside tract entitled "Sunnyside tract, property of N. D. Rideout, part of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, and part of section 19, township 15 north, range 17 east, Placer County, Calif.," filed in the office of the county recorder of the county of Placer, State of California, on the 18th day of November, 1907, conveyed by Hulda S. and Chris Nielsen to M. L. Effinger by deed dated September 24, 1906, and recorded in the county recorder's office in said Placer County in deed book No. 105, page 221; thence west from said point along a line parallel to the south line of said lot 55, 220 feet more or less to a point on the east line of Sunnyside Avenue where said line intersects said east line of Sunnyside Avenue; thence north on said east line of Sunnyside Avenue 145 feet more or less to a point on the north line of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo meridian, where said east line of Sunnyside Avenue intersects said section line; thence east along said section line 220 feet more or less to the shore of Lake Tahoe; thence in a southerly direction along the shore of Lake Tahoe 145 feet more or less to the place of beginning.

Beginning at a point on the west line of Sunnyside Avenue 100 feet north of the point of intersection of the extended south line of lot 55 as delineated and designated upon that certain amended map of Sunnyside tract entitled "Sunnyside tract, property of N. D. Rideout, part of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, and part of section 19, township 15 north, range 17 east, Placer County, Calif.," filed in the office of the county recorder of the county of Placer, State of California, on the 18th day of November, 1907; filed in the county records of the city of Placerville, State of California, on the 18th day of November, 1907; thence west on a line parallel to said extended south line of said lot 55, 300 feet more or less to the east line of a tract of land deeded by William Kent to the United States of America on February 28, 1920, said deed being recorded in the records of said county of Placer in book 175 of deeds at page 381; thence north on said east line of said tract deeded by William Kent to the United States of America to the north line of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo meridian; thence east along said section line to the point of intersection of the west line of Sunnyside Avenue with said section line; thence south along said west line of Sunnyside Avenue 150 feet more or less to the point of beginning.

And in exchange therefor may issue patent for certain lands owned by the United States within the Tahoe National Forest and situate in the county of Placer, State of California, in section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, more particularly described as follows:

Lot 51 and the south half of lot 52, as delineated and designated upon that certain amended map of Sunnyside tract entitled "Sunnyside tract, property of N. D. Rideout, part of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, and part of section 19, township 15 north, range 17 east, Placer County, Calif.," filed in the office of the county recorder of the county of Placer, State of California, on the 18th day of November, 1907; also all that tract of land in the northeast quarter of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, and more particularly described as follows: Beginning at a point on the westerly side of Sunnyside Avenue as laid down and delineated on that certain above-mentioned amended map as Sunnyside tract, which point is 65 feet west of the southwest corner of lot 51 of said Sunnyside tract, and from said point of beginning running parallel to the north boundary of the tract of land conveyed to Alice M. Schmiedell by deed dated the 23d day of March, 1908, and recorded in the office of the county recorder of Placer County, in book 110 of deeds, at page 261, said boundary being parallel to the south line extended of lot 52 of said Sunnyside tract; running thence westerly 300 feet; thence north 1° 37' east 150 feet to a point on the southerly line of a parcel of land conveyed by William Kent to William McFadden by deed dated the 12th day of September, 1912, and recorded in the office of the county recorder of said county in book 137 of deeds at page 201, said point being 300 feet west of the west line of Sunnyside Avenue; thence south 88° 28' east 300 feet more or less along said southerly boundary of the lands so conveyed to William McFadden to the west boundary of said Sunnyside Avenue; thence south 1° 37' west 150 feet more or less along said west boundary of Sunnyside Avenue to the point of beginning.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF FOOD CONTROL AND RENTS ACT.

The bill (S. 2919) to extend for a period of two years the provisions of Title 2 of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MYERS. I think that bill will lead to some debate and that there will be some amendments offered. I therefore ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SITE FOR PUBLIC BUILDING IN NEW YORK CITY.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 257) to appoint a commission for the exchange of sites for a post-office and courthouse building at New York between the Federal Government and the officials of the city of New York was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States shall appoint a commission consisting of three officials, who shall have authority to exchange the land known as the old post-office site in the city of New York for other land to be deeded by the city of New York in exchange for such site, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to make all necessary deeds of conveyance of the property now owned by the Government upon the exchange of said respective properties; that this commission shall confer and arrange with the authorized committee of the board of estimate of the city of New York, consisting of the mayor, comptroller, and president of the Borough of Manhattan.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAJO TIMBER CO.

The bill (S. 1945) to reimburse the Navajo Timber Co., of Delaware, for a deposit made to cover the purchase of timber was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Navajo Timber Co., of Delaware, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States standing to the credit of the fund "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor, Fort Apache Indians," the sum of $4,904.10, the same to be a reimbursement for a deposit made by said Navajo Timber Co. with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the United States on October 15, 1913, to accompany a bid for the purchase of certain timber on the Apache and Sitgreaves National Forests, Ariz., and on the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz.

Mr. KING. I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. The facts are very clearly set forth in the report. Briefly, this Navajo Timber Co., of Ilyria, Ohio, at the request of the Government, made a bid upon certain timberlands, and put up a certified check for $5,000. Later it was found impossible to carry out the terms of the proposed agreement, and the $5,000 had been paid into the Treasury. This is simply to pay back to the company that amount, minus the cost of resale.

In order that the record may be straight, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the report of the committee, which contains a letter from the then Secretary of the Interior, Franklin K. Lane, than whom there has been none higher in the Government service. It explains the whole matter.

There being no objection, the report submitted by Mr. CAPPER March 2, 1922, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Report to accompany S. 1945.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1945) to reimburse the Navajo Timber Co., of Delaware, for a deposit made to cover the purchase of timber, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

A similar bill was favorably reported and passed by the Senate in the Sixty-fourth Congress, and also received the approval of the House Committee on Claims. The report of this committee is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

[House Report No. 1371, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3934) to reimburse the Navajo Timber Co., of Delaware, for a deposit made to cover the purchase of timber, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass, for the reasons set forth in Senate Report No. 187, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, as appended hereto and adopted as the report of this committee.

[Senate Report No. 187, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3934) to reimburse the Navajo Timber Co., of Delaware, for a deposit made to cover the purchase of timber, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out "not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000," and insert in lieu thereof "standing to the credit of the fund 'Indian moneys, proceeds of labor, Fort Apache Indians,' the sum of $4,904.10."

The facts in the case are fully set forth in a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 28, 1915.

Hon. N. P. BRYAN,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made to your letter of December 8, 1914, inclosing a copy of Senate bill 6710, to reimburse the Navajo Timber Co., of Delaware, for a deposit made to cover the purchase of timber.

The file containing the papers out of which the claim in question has arisen is voluminous, and deals principally with matters pertaining to the nonconsummated sale of approximately 330,000,000 feet of timber on the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz., to the Navajo Timber Co. In view of this fact I believe your purpose will be best served by giving you a detailed account of all the essential facts dealing with the claim in question rather than by transmitting the file in the case.

On August 27, 1913, the department approved regulations and an advertisement for the offering for sale of 330,000,000 feet of timber on the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz. The advertisement called for the opening of bids on October 15, 1913. The only bid received was that of the Navajo Timber Co., by R. W. Hill, president, Elyria, Ohio. This company made an offer of $2.50 per 1,000 feet during the first five years of the contract period and $3 per 1,000 feet during the second five years of the contract period. These are the minimum prices which it was stated in the regulations would be received for this timber.

On October 20, 1913, upon the recommendation of the Indian Office the department accepted the proposal of the Navajo Timber Co., and awarded the sale to them, subject, however, to the condition that the said company, within 60 days from the date of the approval of this letter by the department, should make a showing satisfactory to the department that it had the financial standing and ability to conduct a lumbering operation of this character and extent.

The regulations under which this timber was offered for sale required that each bid should be accompanied by a certified check on a solvent national bank drawn in favor of the superintendent of the Fort Apache Indian School in the amount of $5,000, and stated that such deposit might be retained as a forfeit if the bid were accepted and the bond and agreement of purchase required by the regulations were not furnished within 60 days from the date on which the bid was accepted. The Navajo Timber Co. submitted with its bid a certified check for $5,000 on the First National Bank of Elyria, Ohio, drawn in favor of the superintendent of the Fort Apache Indian School.

By Indian Office letter of October 23, 1913, Mr. R. W. Hill, president of the Navajo Timber Co., was advised that the bid of his company had been accepted by the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior on October 20, 1913, and his attention was directed to the requirement of the regulations under which this timber was offered, which provided, among other things, that the deposit of $5,000 made with his bid might be retained as a forfeit if the contract and bond required by the regulations were not furnished within 60 days from the date when the bid was accepted, and that prior to the approval of the contract and bond by the department it would be necessary for him to make a satisfactory showing to the department as to the financial responsibility of the Navajo Timber Co.

On January 9, 1914, the department, upon the recommendation of the Indian Office, advised Mr. R. W. Hill, president of the Navajo Timber Co., that it would extend the time to April 1, 1914, within which he would be allowed to make a showing satisfactory to the department as to the financial responsibility of the Navajo Timber Co., and to properly execute the contract and bond sent him with Indian Office letter of October 23, 1913.

Under date of March 31, 1914, Mr. R. W. Hill, president of the Navajo Timber Co., advised the Indian Office of the fact that he was not able, within the time granted him, to finance the project, and requested that the deposit of $5,000 made by his company be returned.

Under date of May 14, 1914, the Acting Forester of the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture, advised the Indian Office regarding the action taken by the Forest Service with regard to the $5,000 deposit accompanying the bid submitted by the Navajo Timber Co., of Delaware, for the timber in the Sitgreaves and Apache National Forests recently offered for sale. In this letter he stated, among other things, that in view of the good faith manifested by the company in its attempt to finance the sales the Forest Service felt that the company was justly entitled to receive a refund of the amount deposited, less $140.23, the amount expended by the Forest Service in advertising the sale.

Under date of August 3, 1914, the Comptroller of the Treasury decided that a refund of the deposit of $5,000, less $95.90, which had been expended by the Indian Office in advertising the sale, should not be made. This decision rested upon the ground that the $5,000 which had been submitted with the bid for timber and had been covered into the Treasury on December 31, 1913, as "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor, Fort Apache Indians," would not be expended for the benefit of the Indians, as contemplated by the act of March 2, 1887 (24 Stat. L. 463), if it were returned to the Navajo Timber Co.

The timber which was included in this sale was the same as that included in the sale of February 14, 1912, to the Navajo Lumber & Timber Co., except that an adjoining tract was added, and it is my understanding that the persons interested in the Navajo Timber Co. were the same, or largely the same, as those who formed the Navajo Lumber & Timber Co. I am making an unfavorable recommendation on Senate bill 6709, which provides for the reimbursement of the $5,000 forfeit deposited by the Navajo Lumber & Timber Co., but feel that the $5,000 deposited by the Navajo Timber Co. on the second bid for the Fort Apache timber, less the cost of advertising the timber, should be returned to the bidders as a matter of equity. It is my view that no damage was suffered by the Fort Apache Indians through the failure of the Navajo Timber Co. to fulfill its agreement except such advertising cost, and that retention of the whole $5,000 deposited by that company would be practically a double forfeiture on a single sale. However, in my opinion, the refund should be made from the trust funds of the Fort Apache Indians, to which the forfeited deposit was credited, and not from the general funds of the United States.

I recommend that the words standing to the credit of the fund "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor, Fort Apache Indians," the sum of $4,904.10 be substituted for the words "not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000," in line 6 of Senate bill 6710, Sixty-third Congress, and that the bill as thus amended be enacted into law.

If after consideration of the facts as above stated you feel that you would like to see all the papers on file in the department regarding the proposed sale of timber and the forfeit made, I shall be pleased to forward the same to you upon request.

Cordially yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAXATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 1739) to amend sections 5 and 6 of the act of Congress making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes, was read.

Mr. KING. There are some provisions in the bill with which I am not familiar. It would take some little time to consider them, and I suggest that it go over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before it is passed over, because it will come up for consideration again, I invite attention to the provision of section 2 of the bill, which reads:

That for the purposes of this act, any person maintaining a place of abode in the District of Columbia on July 1 of any year and for six months or more prior thereto shall be considered a resident of the District of Columbia, and shall be taxable on his tangible personal property if located in the District of Columbia during the period of his domicile therein.

So we would all be subject to taxation in the District of Columbia, as well as to taxation at home.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We might find that we were no longer residents of our States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I question the power of Congress to make officials of the Government taxable here in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RAILROAD SIDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 3083) authorizing the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. to construct an elevated railroad siding adjacent to its tracks in the city of Washington was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized in their discretion to grant to any steam railroad company authorized to have tracks in the District of Columbia permits to construct overhead or underground sidings from the lines of said railroad into such squares or parts of squares in the District of Columbia as may be included within any industrial area now or hereafter established under authority of law: Provided, That no grade crossings shall thereby be created; but such overhead or underground crossings may cross a street, avenue, or road within such industrial area.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill authorizing the construction of elevated railroad sidings adjacent to steam railroad tracks in the District of Columbia.

JOHN T. EATON.

The bill (S. 288) for the relief of John T. Eaton was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John T. Eaton, of Helena, Mont., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $560, in compliance with the findings of the Court of Claims, Senate Document No. 220 of the first session of the Sixty-third Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 6507) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

H. L. M'FARLIN.

The bill (S. 1087) for the relief of H. L. McFarlin was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I will withhold my objection until an explanation can be made of the bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. I would be glad if the Senator would let us consider the bill. I wish to make a statement in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. McFarlin was what is known as a screen-wagon contractor, carrying the mail to Little Rock. The war came on, a great cantonment was erected there in which 70,000 soldiers were kept for the purpose of training, and Mr. McFarlin incurred an absolute loss of between $15,000 and $16,000. After giving his services, after giving whatever capital was necessary to purchase and keep going the equipment to transport the mail, he lost nearly $16,000. He was a small merchant, a man of high character, a long-time resident of that place, and instead of doing as a great many contractors did when costs were enhanced incident to the war, instead of surrendering his contract, he went ahead and fulfilled it to the letter. It cost him everything he had accumulated in a lifetime. He rendered the service under the most unfavorable circumstances.

The Government was the beneficiary, the Postmaster General says Mr. McFarlin should be reimbursed, and the inspectors who investigated the case say he should be reimbursed. He has been out of the use of this money now for four years—nearly five. He would not get a penny interest. This represents the savings of a lifetime, which he devoted to fulfilling a contract he entered into before anyone had a right to suspect the war was coming, and, I think, instead of being penalized for being patriotic and going ahead and devoting the last penny he had accumulated to fulfilling his contract, he ought to be paid the money he lost.

Mr. KING. I know of scores of cases like it. There are five or six in my own State. I know of one instance where a contract was in existence to transport the mail from Price, Utah, to Uinta Basin, a distance of some 130 or 140 miles over the mountains. Owing to the tremendous development of the parcel post, and the contractor being compelled to haul coal and lumber and everything else carried by the parcel post, he lost perhaps $25,000 to $50,000. He carried out his contract, as he should have done, as any honorable man would have done. He can not be reimbursed. I know of many cases parallel to that.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator will pardon me, Congress passed a law to reimburse those who sustained losses by reason of the war. This man's contract expired one day too soon. If it had run one day longer, the Post Office Department could have reimbursed him, and would have done so. He labored under exactly the same disadvantages the other people did who have been paid. It seems to me to be unfair; of course, I do not mean to apply that to the Senator from Utah. It seems that the Government should not refuse to pay a man who suffered loss by reason of the Government making changes in conditions which existed at the time when the contractor entered into a contract. If it were a private party, nobody would contend that the contractor could not have gone into a court of equity and had redress.

Mr. KING. What change did the Government cause by its act?

Mr. CARAWAY. The Government entered into a war. The Government located a cantonment at Little Rock, where 70,000 soldiers were trained, and cost this man this amount of money more than it would have cost him if the conditions had remained the same as they were when he entered into the contract.

Mr. KING. That is to say, he was compelled to carry more mail?

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, by reason of the Government changing its relations and locating a cantonment there, and destroying this man's whole life savings.

Mr. KING. It seems to me the Government ought to make provision to take care of that case as well as others of the character to which I have referred. As the Senator knows, many people had contracts to construct buildings and because of the war coming on prices went up and they lost money in the construction of buildings and in the execution of their contracts.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator will pardon me, we took care of that class of people who had contracts to erect buildings for the Government. We relieved everybody whose conditions were changed by reason of the Government entering into war and the tremendous increase in the cost of materials.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9013) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of the United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has withdrawn his objection and it will take but a moment to pass the bill. Will the Senator from Iowa yield a moment for that purpose?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for that purpose.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in line 6 to strike out "$25,824.77" and insert "$15,048.52," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to H. L. McFarlin, of the county of Pulaski and State of Arkansas, the sum of $15,048.52 in full compensation for loss and damage suffered by the said H. L. McFarlin under his contract for transporting United States mail at Little Rock, Ark.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATE CANNIFF.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the bill next on the calendar is an exceedingly meritorious one and has been pending a long time. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he will not permit it to be considered?

Mr. CUMMINS. Will it lead to any debate?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No. If it does, I shall withdraw the request.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 289) for the relief of Kate Canniff, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Kate Canniff the sum of $1,345, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the death of her husband, James Canniff, who received injuries April 15, 1901, while in the service of the United States on the lighthouse tender Haze, and as a result of which he died on October 20, 1909.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of the United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, when I suspended discussion of the bill on account of the recess on the last day the Senate was in session, last Friday, I had to some extent gone into detail with reference to the condition of the dockets in the various Federal courts. I wish to recall what was then said and to repeat for the sake of clarity some things that were said at that time.

There is said to be congestion in the docket of the Supreme Court of the United States. The report of the Attorney General, filed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, shows the condition of the dockets of the several courts to be as I shall now state it:

SUPREME COURT.

Cases and other proceedings docketed for the fiscal year 1921	565
Cases and other proceedings pending at the close of the year	367
Cases and other proceedings disposed of	608

The report shows that about one-half of these are disposed of without opinions, being applications for certiorari, dismissed without argument, and cases dismissed on motion.

The number of cases actually considered by the court was 574, of which 227 were argued orally and 347 submitted on printed arguments; 47 cases were settled by the parties and dismissed without a hearing; 230 cases were denial of petitions for writs of certiorari. There was, then, less than 300 cases argued and in which opinions were filed, or about 33 cases to each of the nine judges of the court. This is approximately a correct statement of the work of the Supreme Court for one year.

Circuit courts of appeals.

Circuit.	Number of judges.	Cases determined, 1921.	Number of cases pending June 30, 1921.
First	3	52	37
Second	4	268	122
Third	3	124	98
Fourth	3	90	34
Fifth	3	176	88
Sixth	3	155	79
Seventh	5	132	125
Eighth	5	203	240
Ninth	4	172	121
Total	33	1,372	944

From the tabulated statement just read it appears that the average for each judge in all the circuits was 42 cases determined in 1921. The three judges in the first circuit only determined 17 cases each. The highest in any circuit was in the second circuit, where 67 cases were determined by each judge.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Did I understand the Senator to say that in the first circuit the judges determined only 17 cases each?

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator understood me correctly.

Mr. BORAH. Is that in the Massachusetts circuit?

Mr. SHIELDS. That is the first circuit, which consists of the States of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Maine, four States.

While all the judges hear the arguments made, only one writes the opinion in the case.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the circuit in which the judges determined 17 cases apiece?

Mr. SHIELDS. It is.

Mr. BORAH. That is the first circuit?

Mr. SHIELDS. It is the first circuit.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Can the Senator from Tennessee give the Senate any information with regard to the amount of time the circuit judges sat in the district courts during the last year?

Mr. SHIELDS. I can not. There was no evidence produced with reference to that. But Senators, as lawyers of experience in all the courts, State and Federal, can very readily see that those judges, if industrious and holding court in reasonable hours, could have disposed of those cases in about two months.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask for information entirely, because while I know that the circuit judges have in many instances held the district courts in their circuits, I do not know to what extent that has been done heretofore. I hoped the Senator from Tennessee in commenting upon the alleged idleness of the circuit judges had some information upon that subject.

Mr. SHIELDS. The statistics are taken from the report of the Attorney General made in pursuance of an act of Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and filed last December. The report is corroborated by other statistics, and I can not imagine that there is any doubt that the statements I have made are facts and are correct. I repeat, that as lawyers of experience and observation, Senators know that the general run of litigation is much the same year in and year out, and except in certain States which have certain classes of litigation the cases are of about the same degree of difficulty and require something like the same amount of time, and a mere statement of the number of cases tried by a court is very good evidence of whether that court is industrious and competent to discharge the duties incumbent upon the judges.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no reason to doubt the statistics which are now being given by the Senator from Tennessee, but if it be true that circuit judges in many instances did hold district courts and notwithstanding their work upon the district bench the number of cases now appearing to be pending upon the district dockets would indicate the great need of some additional judicial force. I know of many instances, and so does the Senator from Tennessee, in which the district judges have been called in to sit upon the circuit court of appeals. That is a very common thing at least throughout the western country, and it is also a very common thing for the circuit judges to hold the district courts. That is true, and I am sure the Senator from Tennessee has information of that kind lately received. I refer to a communication which I am told he has from one of the circuit judges of the seventh circuit.

Mr. SHIELDS. When the circuit courts of appeals were first established there were not three circuit judges who were authorized by statute to sit in and hold these courts in the several circuits. In that condition, district judges were generally designated. I know that was the case in the circuit where I resided until another circuit judge was created, when the court was composed of three circuit judges and district judges were no longer needed. They ought to be allowed to continue their work in their district courts. I do know, however, that as a matter of courtesy, and, perhaps, as a compliment, district judges were called in and sat in this intermediate appellate court. I think they liked to do that. The district judges prefer to sit in the intermediate appellate court, the circuit court of appeals, much more than do the judges of that court like to sit in the district courts and try jury cases, chiefly in these days criminal cases, for the district courts now are largely police courts. It is not very pleasant, as a rule, for a lawyer to preside in those courts and dispose of that class of business. It becomes rather monotonous.

Whether or not the three circuit judges of the first circuit have aided the district judges, I do not know; but judging by the number of cases in the district court of Massachusetts—and for that district relief is asked in this bill; in fact, it is asked that two additional district judges be provided for the district—I would think that the circuit judges are not doing much district court work in the first circuit. However, at the proper time, Mr. President, I shall offer an amendment that they be required to serve in the district courts and to assist the district judge of Massachusetts, that being the only docket that is claimed to be congested in the circuit, in disposing of the cases there pending; for upon the face of the record they have an abundance of time to do so. The adoption of such an amendment would save the creation of two additional district judges for that State, who are proposed to be created by the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator once more yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not possess, nor does the testimony that has been laid before the committee furnish, any information with regard to the work of the circuit judges of the first circuit, but I do know one of the judges of that circuit. I know Judge George W. Anderson. He was appointed by President Wilson while a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I know that while he held that position he was a most industrious man, and I can not conceive that Judge Anderson, whatever one may think of his general views on other subjects, failed to employ all his time in the work which devolved upon him by reason of his appointment as circuit judge. I feel that I ought to say that much, because I know the man well and I know that he is a man of the most industrious disposition and works as diligently as any man could.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I am glad to know that there is a circuit judge in that circuit who is so industrious and capable, because the district court may need him. He is the sort of man who ought to be assigned to that district to clean up the docket. It is apparent that the present district judge there is not doing a great deal, judging from the number of cases which have been tried.

However, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa this question: Upon the face of this record, showing that the court of the first circuit, comprising three judges, only tried 52 cases in a year and left pending at the end of the year 37 cases, does it appear that they are doing their full duty? If they were industrious, would they not have cleared their docket before they went into the district courts, and was it not their duty to do so?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know. I could only answer that question after we had all the information with regard to the character of the cases. I know that in the circuit court of appeals in the first circuit there has been a great deal of litigation of a very important character; I know that that court has consumed a great deal of time in hearing preliminary motions and in reviewing injunctions and matters of that sort; and I suppose that such work would not appear upon the table which the Senator from Tennessee is presenting. I am not able to answer from any personal knowledge of the situation.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I do not know any of the judges in Massachusetts or in the first judicial circuit; I presume they are all capable, honest, and competent men, and I am not making any personal criticism of them; but upon the face of this record, that three judges tried only 52 cases a year and at the end of that year left 37 cases yet pending, I can not believe that they have been very industrious.

As to the magnitude of the cases, I desire to say there is no great difference in that respect. It will be found that every docket contains some small cases and some large cases, some criminal cases, and some civil cases, though I will say that the statistics here show, I believe, that only two of these cases were criminal cases.

Mr. CUMMINS. How can a judge be honest if he does not give his time and his abilities to the transaction of the business or the performance of the duties for which he is appointed? I can not understand how the Senator from Tennessee can draw the conclusion he does without at the same time impeaching the honesty of our circuit judges—not their honesty in the sense of being unduly influenced in any respect, but their honesty in respect of rendering the service for which they were appointed.

Mr. SHIELDS. The only way I can answer the Senator is that the cold facts are against these judges. We know that some of the Federal judges do not hold court more than three hours a day. I understood the chairman of the committee, while we had this matter under investigation in the Committee on the Judiciary, to say that the judges in the District of Columbia only sat about three or three and a half hours a day. I do not know anything about that personally.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in contrast with what the Senator has said, that the judges referred to by him in Massachusetts disposed of only 52 cases, I believe, in a year——

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say that I telegraphed the attorney general of North Carolina asking him how many cases the Supreme Court of North Carolina disposed of in a year. He has replied to me by telegram stating that the cases disposed of by the supreme court annually are 950 in number. Those cases, furthermore, involve the writing of opinions. I hardly presume that the judges who disposed of only 52 cases a year wrote opinions in all of those cases.

Mr. SHIELDS. How many judges of that court are there?

Mr. OVERMAN. There are five judges.

Mr. SHIELDS. So that the total represents nearly 200 cases apiece?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes. I may say that the superior court judges disposed of 9,000 cases, according to the information furnished by the attorney general of the State.

Mr. SHIELDS. Those are the trial judges?

Mr. OVERMAN. They are the trial judges, the superior court judges.

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly, Mr. President, in view of the facts there should not be created two additional judges for the district of Massachusetts until we have further evidence of the necessity of the Government going to that expense. Provision for those two judges can well be stricken from the bill, and a separate bill, when all the facts appear, may be introduced and passed, if required, to relieve any emergency existing in that district.

Now, I will take up the situation in other circuits. The average of the cases determined in the circuit courts of appeals shows that the judges in most of those courts are practically doing nothing, and in such circuits they could be assigned to the trial of cases in the district courts. I say they are doing nothing upon the presumption that before they should go into the district courts they would clean their own dockets, but in each circuit it appears that at the end of the fiscal year they leave almost as many cases pending as were tried during the year. It is their first duty to try the cases on their own dockets; and they generally do it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I leave that controversy between the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from North Carolina, who proposed the addition of one circuit judge to the fourth circuit. If the circuit judges are doing nothing or practically nothing, as the Senator indicates, he ought to direct his criticisms, among other things, to that part of the bill which provides for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the fourth circuit.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I am not discriminating in favor of any circuit or any district. I think this is the worst case of logrolling of any legislation that has ever come before the United States Senate since I have been a Member of it. I think the entire bill ought to be defeated. I think its enactment will be a judicial and legislative scandal.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the Senator's evidence of logrolling? Was there any logrolling before the committee?

Mr. SHIELDS. Oh, I have no specific evidence except the manner in which the judgeships were distributed among the members of the Judiciary Committee having under consideration the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator can not be serious about that.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am making no charge against any Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. The distribution of judges, as I said in the beginning, does not meet my personal view entirely, yet the distribution was made with fair regard to the showing made before the committee, and that showing was exactly the showing which the Senator from Tennessee is now presenting, namely, the report of the Attorney General for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator must admit, though, that the facts to which I am now calling attention were not called to the attention of the committee or discussed when we had this bill before us.

Mr. CUMMINS. When the Senator speaks of logrolling he ought to remember that at least a majority of the members of the Judiciary Committee do not secure additional judges for their States. Here is the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who is a member of the Judiciary Committee, and lives in the western district of that State. No additional judge was given to that district, although the showing in behalf of the western district of Missouri would probably put that district in the category of districts needing additional judicial force.

Mr. SHIELDS. And I think ahead of the eastern district, for which a judge was provided.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very likely. I am not disputing that; but so far as the committee dividing these judges among the districts represented upon the Judiciary Committee is concerned, that is a suggestion which I am sure the Senator from Tennessee, upon reflection, will recall.

Mr. SHIELDS. No; I do not recall the facts, but I do disclaim any charge——

Mr. CUMMINS. I mean, the Senator will disclaim it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I had already done that, before the Senator rose to his feet. I expressly said that I did not make any charge against any Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then there was no logrolling, so far as I know.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that whereas with reference to the State of Missouri the eastern district of Missouri does get an additional judge, and I am not saying but that it is entitled to it, I do say that the committee has utterly failed to distribute these judges according to the state of the business in the different districts. There are more cases pending in the southern district of Florida undisposed of, and the business there is more congested, than in States where the committee has given two judges, and it has refused to give one to the southern district of Florida.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, we will come to these districts later.

Mr. CUMMINS. That shows that there was no logrolling in the committee, because the State of Massachusetts, to which the Senator from Florida undoubtedly refers, has no member upon the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SHIELDS. Perhaps that is why it did not get a judge.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the State of Massachusetts did get two judges, without any membership upon the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was simply answering the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa that these judges were distributed according to the business and the needs, as shown by the table to which the Senator from Tennessee has referred.

Mr. CUMMINS. There was a difference of opinion among the members of the Judiciary Committee with regard to this distribution—the Senator from Florida knows that—and the distribution was made according to the views of the majority of that committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, since the Missouri situation has been drawn in question, permit me to say that the position I took with the committee was that undoubtedly there was an imperative need for two additional judges in Missouri. I pressed that on the committee, but I was informed that the subcommittee had determined that they could give only one judge to the State. They were trying to cut the number of judges just as closely as they could. I was then asked whether my preference was to have a judge for the western or for the eastern district, and I made the suggestion that the judge be appointed from the western district, where I thought the business was more rapidly increasing, but that the bill be so drawn that he could be assigned to either district. I thought that was settled when I went away, but something happened, and the judge was named from the eastern district, and nothing was done for the western district.

If the Senator will pardon just one further word, I know from personal investigation now, much better than I did when I was talking with the committee, the condition of the dockets in both the eastern and the western districts. It is now practically impossible to secure the trial of an important civil suit in either district until after a very long delay, and the courts are getting behind more and more in their business. The judge of the eastern district is worked to the point where he is threatened with a serious break in his health, and the business is still accumulating. The judge in the western district, I think, is not suffering any break of his health, but if he keeps on under the stress that he is under at present nobody can tell when it will happen. I have taken pains to investigate this matter by talking with leading members of the bar, men who have considerable business in the Federal courts. There is no question but that in the State of Missouri there is an imperative need for two judges, but I want, and the people of Missouri want, two men who live in Missouri appointed to those places.

We do not want somebody sent in there who lives a thousand miles away to start holding court, and then have somebody else sent in from some other place, and have the lawyers chasing them all over the United States after that for three or four years to get their business wound up. That phase of this bill I do not like. There may be, and I think the Senator is making a very strong showing that there are, places where they do not need judges; but they do need them in the State of Missouri, and they need them very badly.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I have given this statement of the condition of the dockets of the various circuit courts of appeals to show that the 33 judges holding them can not, in the nature of things, be very busy. Some of these circuits have more business than others; but the dockets show that in at least half of them the judges can not possibly be occupied half of their time in disposing of the business in their courts, and that they ought to be required to relieve congestion wherever it may exist in the district courts. It is my opinion that if they would not only try the cases which the report of the Attorney General shows were determined during the year, but would also try those that were held over undetermined, they could dispose of all of the docket within six months. There is a provision now for them to be assigned to the district courts, to relieve the district judges; but it should be made imperative, and not voluntary, as it now is.

I will now go to the district courts of the United States:

Cases pending in the district courts June 30, 1921, as shown by the annual report of the Attorney General for the fiscal year 1921, pages 150 and 151, nominally aggregate 142,402; but in this aggregate are included 37,341 bankrupt cases, which will be disposed of by the referees in bankruptcy, 27,580 draft cases, which the witnesses appearing before the Committee on the Judiciary showed would never be tried, but would have to be dismissed for want of evidence and other causes, and 4,643 civil cases between corporations and individuals, which have been on the dockets for more than five years without any order being made in them, and are evidently dead cases, never to be tried.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. At this point I should like to make one observation to the Senator from Tennessee, and that is with regard to the bankruptcy cases. The Senator from Tennessee assumes that the bankruptcy cases do not and ought not to consume any considerable time on the part of the district judges. I ask him this question:

The district judge appoints the receivers, the trustees, and the referees in bankruptcy, and he must in most instances fix their fees. I venture to say that if the district judges had the time to consider those matters properly and review the accounts of receivers and trustees and referees, we would save every year more than the entire salaries, with incidental expenses, entailed by the addition of 19 additional judges. As the Senator from Tennessee knows, it has become well-nigh a scandal that the judges of the district courts are not able to review or consider properly the bankruptcy proceedings, and the Judiciary Committee has just considered a bill which is intended to correct some of these evils and abuses. While I have no special knowledge upon the subject, my general observation leads me to believe that the exorbitant amounts paid to trustees and receivers and referees could be so pruned that the people who are involved in these unfortunate cases would receive a benefit every year of more than the entire amount that these additional judges would require for compensation and for incidental expenses.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator has asserted that I know that there is a scandal in regard to these cases. I have no such information. The evidence on the hearings and from the Attorney General's reports all separates the bankruptcy cases from other cases, and treats them as unlitigated cases to be disposed of by the referees; and the statement of the Senator now is the first contention that such was not the fact that I have heard in the four or five months we have been considering this bill.

The Senator has forgotten that the creditors meet and elect the trustees. The district judge has nothing to do with that. As I understand the bankrupt act—it has been a good while since I have had anything to do with it——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. I am going to ask the Senator to let me finish my tabulated statement, so that I can present this matter in an intelligent manner, and so that Senators can see that there is trouble in the district courts of the United States that does not demand so much additional judges as it demands more work by those who are now in office.

Judging by everything in this record, the Senator is mistaken about these bankruptcy cases. They require hardly any attention whatever from the district judge, and are so treated throughout the hearings in this matter.

I will give a tabulated statement of these cases, as shown by the report of the Attorney General:

United States, criminal	57,112
United States, civil	9,728
Bankrupt cases	37,341
Other cases	38,221
Total	142,402

From this total deduct cases that will not be tried:

Bankrupt cases	37,341
Draft cases	27,580
Dead civil cases	4,643
Total	69,564

Leaving upon the dockets of the United States district courts June 30, 1921, cases to the number of 72,838.

There are 86 Federal districts, in all of which courts are established, and there are 106 district judges, who should have the assistance of not less than 15 of the judges of the circuit courts of appeals in the trial and disposition of the cases pending in the district courts.

The report of the Attorney General, pages 150 and 151, further shows that during the fiscal year 1921 cases were finally disposed of in the district courts as follows.

I ask attention to this, for it shows the work of the judges, the cases tried and disposed of, much more clearly than a report of cases pending on the dockets would:

Civil cases of the United States	6,301
Criminal cases of the United States	47,299
Other civil cases—that is, between private parties	16,886
Total determined by all the United States district courts for fiscal year 1921	70,486

That appears to have been fairly good work, though not nearly as much as the State courts do; but let us look at the manner in which those cases were disposed of.

Of these cases, a large number were disposed of without trial, as follows:

CIVIL CASES.

Dismissed or discontinued	1,431
Compromised	374
Total	1,805

CRIMINAL CASES.

Nol prossed	10,461
Dismissed on motion and demurrer	1,617
Pleas of guilty	28,536
Total	40,614

OTHER CIVIL CASES.

Dismissed or discontinued	10,353
Total	52,772
Total cases disposed in 1921	70,486
Total cases disposed without trial	52,772
	17,714

But few of these cases were submitted to juries. The report shows as follows:

Civil cases tried by juries	470
Criminal cases tried by juries	6,523
Total	6,993

Of course, every lawyer knows that there are cases in the district courts which the judge tries without a jury and which often consume more time than jury cases; but when you look at these figures you see that there were very few of those, from other statements here.

It thus appears that less than two-sevenths of the cases disposed of during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, were tried by the judges, and less than 10 per cent of them were jury cases.

Those figures are astonishing, and yet that is what the official report of the Attorney General shows beyond question.

It also appears that the 106 district judges, aided by at least 15 of the judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals—I am allowing that some of them did district court work without knowing it—only tried during the fiscal year of 1921, 17,714 cases, and only 6,993 of them were jury cases. That is well worth repeating. There are 106 district judges, and taking it for granted they were aided by 15 circuit judges, they only tried, on the average, about 100 cases each. Congress should know the reasons for this bad showing and who is responsible for it before passing this bill creating a swarm of additional judges, adding greatly to the expenses of the Government and the burden of taxation under which the people of the United States are now staggering, and especially when it is admitted by the Attorney General and the commission he appointed to investigate the condition of the dockets of the district courts that the present alleged congestion is temporary and will largely pass away in three or four years. It must be remembered that the judges proposed to be provided for will be appointed for life—say, on the average for 20 years—while the emergency will not last one-fourth of that period of time.

We have no evidence or detailed statement of the nature and character of the 142,402 cases, less 68,984 bankrupt, draft, and dead cases, which, deducted from the gross aggregate, leaves 73,418 pending on the dockets of the district courts June 30, 1921, as shown by the report of the Attorney General, and it would have been almost impossible for the Department of Justice to have ascertained and furnished such information. It is reasonable to assume that the cases that were pending June 30, 1920, were first tried and disposed of, and that the majority of the cases pending June 30, 1921, were new cases brought and docketed during the fiscal year of 1921. There is, however, no evidence upon this subject, and it is impossible to state how many of the pending cases are old cases and how many of them are new cases or anything about their character.

It is also fair to assume that the cases brought in the fiscal year 1921 were of the same character as those disposed of during that fiscal year and that the same percentage of them were, or will be, nol-prossed, dismissed voluntarily and upon motion and demurrer, and went off on pleas of guilty. We can only judge the pending cases by those that have been disposed of. They must be of the same character. There is no evidence that the pending cases are in anywise different from those of the previous year or that the frivolous and weak cases were weeded out and only those calling for jury trials or a substantial consumption of time were retained. The cases were coming in every day to the end of the fiscal year. There may not be so many of them to be dismissed summarily, but, judging by the percentage above shown, certainly one-half of them would go off without trial. However this may be, the bad showing of the work of the district judges in the trial and disposition of litigated cases during the fiscal year ending 1920 is pertinent in the inquiry whether or not the alleged congestion is the fault of the judges or of increased litigation.

If the character of the cases pending June 30, 1921, for trial is the same as those disposed of during the previous year, there would be only about 200 cases for each of the 120 judges to try, or if they are only half as frivolous as those of the previous year there would be about 400 for each judge, not counting the 20 or 25 judges proposed to be created by this bill.

This record of the work of the Federal judges compares very unfavorably with the work of the judges of the State courts. Whether it grows out of the fact that the Federal judges hold their offices during good behavior, which ordinarily means for life, and the State judges as a rule hold theirs for a term of years and are elected and responsible to the people, and are more diligent and effective, is the subject of a most pertinent inquiry, and in considering this legislation should not be overlooked. I have not statistics of the number of cases disposed of in a year from all the States, but I have some from Tennessee, which I have no doubt are a fair average. I will give those of the docket of 1921 of the supreme court, the court of last resort; the court of civil appeal, an intermediate appellate court; and the chancery courts, courts of equity jurisdiction; circuit courts, which are courts of common-law jurisdiction; and criminal courts of the four largest counties of Tennessee:

	Cases.
Supreme Court of Tennessee (5 judges), annual docket	900 to 1,000
Court of civil appeals (5 judges), annual docket	800
Nashville courts:
Circuit court (3 judges)	2,755
Chancery court (2 judges)	855
Criminal court (2 judges)	1,631
Memphis courts:
Criminal court (2 judges)	1,515
Circuit court (3 judges)	3,882
Chancery court (2 judges)	1,400
Knoxville courts:
Criminal court (1 judge)	1,200
Circuit court (1 judge)	741
Chancery court (1 judge)	661
Chattanooga courts:
Criminal court (1 judge)	1,893
Circuit court (1 judge)	968
Chancery court (1 judge)	616

Each of those courts is for only one county, the county in which each of those cities is situated.

An analysis of these statistics will show that the judges of these courts upon an average try and determine, respectively, each year twice as many cases, and in several instances four times as many as are tried by the Supreme Court, the Circuit Courts of Appeals, and the District Courts of the United States; and from long observation as a lawyer practicing in some of these courts and as a member of the Supreme Court of that State, I assert that these judges consider and decide the cases coming before them as carefully and as correctly as the judges of the Federal courts. The conclusion is inevitable that there is something wrong in the organization of the Federal courts that produces the alleged congestion supposed to exist in their dockets, and with a few notable exceptions, it is not additional judges that the prompt dispatch of business in those courts requires and imperatively demands.

Now, as to the various districts provided for and the necessity of creating the judges that are asked for them, I will call attention to statistics and discuss them when we take up each particular case. At this time I only wished to go into the general principles and facts that affect the whole bill.

Mr. President, in discussing the bill and the one upon the same subject which was first introduced in the Senate, I referred to the origin of the bill and those supporting it, and my statements were challenged. I did not have the time then to refer to the evidence upon the subject, but I wish now briefly to do so. I will do so without comment unless comment is provoked.

I now read from the report of the Attorney General for the fiscal year 1921, page 3:

FEDERAL JUDGES AT LARGE.

Congestion in the Federal courts, due to the ordinary increase of population and the development of commercial and industrial America, has been an ever-increasing weakness in the machinery of Federal justice. It is no uncommon thing for a district court docket to be from six months to two years in arrears. This, of course, means loss of evidence, death of witnesses, defeat of justice, and expense to the taxpayers. Many criminal cases can never be tried. Large business interests lose heavily through delay.

In those districts where congestion is of a permanent nature, I have been willing to recommend additional judges to be permanently assigned. Recently, however, this congestion became so serious as to demand immediate relief, which could not be secured by the creation of permanently assigned judges without a great burden upon the Treasury, as in my opinion at least 30 judges would be necessary if permanently assigned. I therefore created a voluntary commission of three Federal judges (Hon. John E. Sater, of Ohio; Hon. W. I. Grubb, of Alabama; and Hon. John C. Pollock, of Kansas) and two United States attorneys (Col. William Hayward, of New York City, and Mr. Charles F. Clyne, of Chicago), with George E. Strong, an attorney of the Department of Justice, to assist them. With their cooperation and valuable assistance, together with suggestions by the Chief Justice of the United States and others, I decided upon a plan which was submitted to the Congress. I reported that there is a generally congested condition in the Federal dockets throughout the United States; that there were as many as 5,000 to 20,000 cases pending and undisposed of in a single district on July 1, 1921. This congestion is due to the natural growth of the country, but is temporarily aggravated by legislation of Congress increasing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, by war legislation, shipping and railroad operations on the civil docket, and prohibition, selective service, and the narcotic law on the criminal docket. It is thought that the generally congested condition throughout the United States, due to these new laws and temporary war conditions, will show a decrease after a few years. Hence, an elastic method of relieving this congestion would be the most efficient and least expensive one.

As the reconstruction period passes and the people become adjusted to the new conditions, there will be, in my judgment, less violation of the national prohibition and other Federal police laws. Then, too, as the States enforce these laws there will be relief for the Federal courts.

For the above reasons and because of the necessity for economy we confined our recommendations to an elastic method of handling the generally congested condition of the United States courts. We believed that immediate temporary relief was necessary. In those districts where congestion is permanent and due to normal growth of business there should be additional judges, but in many districts the congestion is but temporary and can be relieved by the use of a judge at large who will assist in clearing the docket and then proceed to another district.

The commission, therefore, in cooperation with the Chief Justice of the United States and myself, has recommended 18 Federal judges at large, 2 to be appointed in each judicial circuit. These judges are to be assigned as needed. As this is an emergency, I trust that Congress will pass the necessary legislation as soon as possible. Federal judges at large will permit elasticity in the Federal judicial system and economy in the handling of temporarily congested dockets. It will encourage uniformity in judicial procedure and prompt expedition of business, for as these judges render services when necessary in any district where assigned, they will receive and carry with them the beneficial practices of each district and thereby become familiar with reforms and improvement in practices.

I had really overlooked that. I did not know this was a general reform bill.

This department, with the approval of the commission, further recommended an annual meeting of judges from each circuit to consider ways and means of improving Federal procedure and handling congestion as it may arise. Justice can not be measured in dollars and cents—

But the fines which will be imposed are, in the opinion of the Attorney General, ample to meet the cost of the increased number of judges, the Attorney General overlooking the fact that the cases would be tried by some judge and, of course, the same fines would come.

While the Attorney General has dealt in general statements—and the record shows that he is mistaken in many particulars—that shows how the bill originated.

Hon. William H. Taft, Chief Justice, appeared also before the Committee on the Judiciary on October 5, 1921, and made a statement concerning this bill. I read from that statement:

One of the difficulties of the achievement of dispatch of business—

I said "this bill." I mean the bill first introduced providing for the flying squadron of judges from the Nation at large and for the conferences in which the Attorney General was to participate.

One of the difficulties of the achievement of the dispatch of business has been the variation of conditions in the different districts and circuits. In some places there would be a judge who had but half his time occupied; in another place there would be a judge who would be overwhelmed with work. This bill introduces a reasonable system of watching and supervising conditions by the judges of the courts of appeals, with a view to having them get at the actual facts as to where the arrears are. You gentlemen are all familiar with the fact that dockets are quite misleading in the number of cases that they seem to show. There is a lot of stuffing in the docket. Many of the cases ought to be dismissed.

Again he said:

The principle of this bill with respect to the use of the increase of the judges by 18 is the executive principle of having some head to apply the judicial force at the strategical points where the arrears have so increased that it needs a mass of judges to get rid of them.

It is proposed that there shall meet, at any time of the year—but it is suggested that it shall be in the fall, a week before the Supreme Court meets in Washington—a council or committee of the nine senior judges, one from each circuit, and the Chief Justice, together with the Attorney General; that each member of the committee is to bring what he ought to know, namely, the condition of his circuit acquired from the reports required to be filed with him by the district judges, and of course by the clerks. The Attorney General, having further opportunities for inquiry, investigation, and conclusion, is to be present to aid. That council is to take up the question of the arrears in the county and then agree informally as to where the judges are needed and whence they can be had. That is the first step in the bill.

Further on I read from the record:

Senator SHIELDS. They—

Referring to the district judges—will feel almost anything they are subjected to. Then there have been some investigations in the last 15 years here in Washington. Some of those judges ought to have been investigated, and I am not defending some of them; but there is a sort of feeling that they are a little nervous, and it is seldom that they decide a lawsuit against the Government. The Department of Justice exercises a little too much influence, perhaps. That is nothing against this bill, but I think that we ought to keep the executive and judicial departments separate, and this provides for the Department of Justice—the Attorney General—to go into this conference about the assigning of a judge—a sort of general supervision over their duties. I do not think that the Attorney General has any place there.

Chief Justice TAFT. The Attorney General is charged with the administration of justice in deparments. You have to have an executive principal in the dispatch of all business.

Senator SHIELDS. It should come from the judiciary, though, and not from one of the coordinate departments of the Government. It is an infringement of one department on the other. I think the Attorney General ought to make these reports of the conditions in his department, but to have him have a voice as to the judges and assigning work to the judges, and so on——

Chief Justice TAFT. This assignment is made by the circuit judge and the Chief Justice. This council does not do anything but take up and consider and deliberate on and agree upon among themselves what shall be done with reference to meeting the arrears of the particular court. The assignment is left completely to each circuit judge and to the Chief Justice.

Of course, that provision of the bill has been read and shows for itself.

Mr. CUMMINS and Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEFLIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to make any general reply to the review of the pending subject to which we have just listened, but I can not forbear some observations. I assume, and I think the whole country ought to assume, that the judges of the Federal courts are men of high character, of more than ordinary attainments, and do their work with a deep sense of the responsibility which rests upon them, not only fairly but industriously. There may be exceptions; it may be true that in the whole number a few men may be found who disregard the duty which the law imposes upon them, but I am sure that very few such men will be found. My observation in reference to that matter, which has been very slight in the last 20 years, but which was a most intimate observation before that time, leads me to believe that the Federal judges are, in the main, hardworking, energetic, and faithful public officials. So much for the criticism which we have just heard.

I do not give any weight to the analysis which the Senator from Tennessee has made with regard to the number of cases disposed of from time to time or the probable length of time which will be required to dispose of such cases in the future. The police court records of every city in the Union will disclose just the situation which is indicated in some of the statistics which have been given by the Senator from Tennessee. I have no doubt that a police court justice before whom is brought many trivial—I ought not to use that word, however—many offenses committed during the day before can dispose of them with very great rapidity. I have known or often heard of greater celerity in the disposition of cases of drunkenness, vagrancy, or some other offense against municipal ordinances where the defendant is brought before a police court justice simply upon a warrant and is immediately tried than is indicated in any of the cases cited by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator from Iowa is speaking of criminal cases of which I have given the statistics, which were tried in the criminal courts of four counties in Tennessee. Those, however, are not police courts, but are courts of record; and no man may be tried in them unless a grand jury first finds a presentment or indictment against him. Those courts are attended by all the formality and safeguards which surround a United States district court, and certainly no police cases go into the circuit court and the chancery courts for those courts try civil cases.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was certainly not intimating that the cases which the Senator from Tennessee has mentioned are the ordinary police-court cases. I was simply stating that I could find a court which disposed of a great many more cases in a given time than even the judges in Tennessee could dispose of; but I think that is no fair criterion of the work of the Federal courts.

I have before me a memorandum which will be submitted at the proper time by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] if the occasion arises. He left it with me in his brief absence from the Senate floor. It indicates the character of some of the cases which are to be tried in the Federal courts. It also indicates the length of time that is required or probably will be required to dispose of such a calendar as we now find in the district court of the northern district of Illinois. I infer that this memorandum was prepared by the United States district attorney for the northern district of Illinois, although I am not sure of that. However, the memorandum, which is undoubtedly accurate, states:

There are over 15 great mail fraud cases on the docket, and each of them will consume one month in trial.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment.

That is the time it has taken in the past to try such cases.

There are 10 other minor fraud cases—

That is, cases involving the use of the mails to defraud—that will consume two weeks each. There are six great antitrust cases ready for trial and awaiting judges. Each of these cases will consume not less than three weeks; and I am told that one—will consume two months of court days.

Naming the case—

Then he adds:

A number of income-tax cases are ready for trial, and several large cases under the Volstead law. These cases have congested and will congest the docket on the criminal side of the court unless judges can be secured.

What is true of the northern district of Illinois is true of a great many other districts in the United States. If these cases when tried shall consume the length of time anticipated by the district attorney, it will require the continuous service of one judge for two years and a half to dispose of the cases which are mentioned in the memorandum without being able to do anything whatsoever upon the civil docket or in the trial of the hundreds and hundreds of other criminal cases which are not mentioned in the memorandum.

Mr. President, I know something about the antitrust cases which are pending in the State of Illinois.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. I did not hear who it was who made that statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Illinois handed me this memorandum before he left the Chamber, and I assume he left it anticipating that there might be an effort made to amend the bill so that the additional judge for the northern district of Illinois would be eliminated from it.

Mr. SHIELDS. But did I not understand that some officer made that statement?

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe it was made by the district attorney for the northern district of Illinois——

Mr. SHIELDS. Is that Mr. Clyne?

Mr. CUMMINS. Because I had a conference with Mr. Clyne within the last two or three days, and he gave me substantially the same information.

Mr. SHIELDS. Before the committee my recollection is that he was not very strenuous in his view that another judge was needed. I will ascertain what he said before the committee, and I will also present, in answer to the district attorney, a letter I received from one of the United States circuit judges, in which he disagrees with the district attorney.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know what is in the letter.

Mr. SHIELDS. I did not show it to the Senator. He has obtained it in some other way; but I rose to remark that the trouble is that a new district attorney is needed and not a new district judge.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know about that. Mr. Clyne is a very estimable gentleman and was selected as district attorney by one in whom the Senator from Tennessee has vast confidence, I am sure.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand Mr. Clyne is a Democrat and was appointed by President Wilson, but as the Senator knows, all men make mistakes sometimes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to discuss Mr. Clyne further, but the Senator from Tennessee does not know anything about Mr. Clyne, I am sure, more than I know about him.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator is a little mistaken as to that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Possibly, but I am not going to try Mr. Clyne.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not care to criticize Mr. Clyne. I understand that he is a Democrat and, of course, he will be supplanted very soon.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know about that.

Mr. SHIELDS. Things that are going on indicate it very strongly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not willing, however, to accept the view of the Senator from Tennessee that all public officials who are connected with the courts are inefficient, incompetent, or dishonest. That is the real conclusion to be drawn from the Senator's remarks.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have not stated that public officials are dishonest or incompetent. I know some of the district judges and some of the judges of the circuit court of appeals, as well as some district attorneys, who are very able men. I do not know that I am aware of an incompetent district judge, but I should say that I do know a number of district attorneys whom I would consider very incompetent and who are blocking the business of the courts. The judge can do nothing without a competent district attorney. There is too much politics in that office.

Mr. CUMMINS. From the suggestions which he has just made, I suppose the Senator from Tennessee includes Mr. Clyne among the list of incompetent officials?

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator has no right to make that assumption. I will be heard as to him before I get through.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I do not know Mr. Clyne probably as well as does the Senator from Tennessee, for I am not of his political faith, but Mr. Clyne has had no full opportunity to discover whether he is or is not a competent prosecutor, because many times he has had no judge before whom he could try his cases. There are a thousand criminal cases pending in the northern district of Illinois now ready for trial, and the reason they are not tried is because a judge before whom the trial can be had can not be secured.

I know something about the criminal cases pending under the antitrust law; I know what they are, and I know the length of time, generally speaking, that is required to try one of those cases. What hope has the district attorney if he prepares his case for trial and can not find an opportunity to try it? The court simply becomes a refuge of malefactors and criminals. Our judicial system every day is allowing men who are charged with crimes to escape because there is no opportunity to try them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator states that the district attorney had no judge before whom he could try these cases. The Senator certainly will admit that until Judge Landis concluded to devote the balance of his time to the baseball situation there was a judge there.

Mr. CUMMINS. Judge Landis may be criticized because he accepted the position he did in baseball recreation, but I never heard it charged against him that he was not an exceedingly energetic and industrious judge, and I venture to say that his record will compare most favorably with the record of any other district judge in the United States in the disposition of cases that were pending in his court.

Mr. REED. That is the very point. The Senator says that he was one of the best, and yet he seems to have had time enough to earn $50,000 on the side looking after baseball matters. They must have taken a little of his time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall not, so far as I am concerned, drift into a discussion of the propriety of a judge accepting a position of that character; but I do know that this particular judge was prompt, efficient, and decisive in his work upon the bench. But, Mr. President, I have only this general reply to make to the observations of the Senator from Tennessee; for I still believe, and the Senator from Florida believes with me, I am sure, that there are at least some districts in which additional judicial force is absolutely necessary if we are to do justice both to the Government and to those accused of crime and to the various litigants who appear in the court for the adjudication of their controversies.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree with the Senator. I was going to call attention, though, to this fact: The Senator said that there was no judge in the northern district of Illinois before whom these cases might be tried. They have two judges already in the northern district of Illinois.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. FLETCHER. And they have an eastern district and a southern district, each with one judge; so they have four judges in Illinois now, and two in the northern district.

Mr. CUMMINS. They are trying cases just as rapidly as they can try them; but I am speaking about these important cases that are pending there which can not be tried.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am inclined to think they need another judge there.

Mr. CUMMINS. And our criminal law, and especially our prohibition law, and our antitrust law, and our law against frauds perpetrated upon the Post Office Department become a mockery if those who are accused of these crimes can not with reasonable promptitude be brought to the bar of justice and either acquitted or convicted, and, if convicted, punished according to the law.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator understand that Mr. Clyne advocated a new judge in his district?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think he did; and I think he says here that he disposed of 200 cases, and two or three hundred were submissions. I do not recollect that he said he needed a new judge.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Carolina will remember that when Mr. Clyne came before the Judiciary Committee it was to advocate, together with the three judges named by the Senator from Tennessee, and the district attorney of the southern district of New York, a bill which provided for the appointment of 18 additional district judges, two in each circuit.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. And it was not necessary for him to speak, nor would it have been pertinent for him to have spoken, about the necessities of the particular district which he now represents.

Mr. OVERMAN. In connection with that, I asked him these questions:

> How many have been disposed of in the last six months?
> In the last six months I think we have gotten rid of probably 200.
> How many were submissions or pleas of guilty?
> I should say in my judgment probably two-thirds of them.

That is so all over the United States as to half or two-thirds of these cases on the dockets.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why, certainly; but, notwithstanding that fact, notwithstanding the way in which they have disposed of the cases, as has been so well stated by the Senator from Tennessee, all these things being granted, the dockets still remain as they are; that is, with 142,000 cases pending upon them.

Mr. OVERMAN. When you take off the draft cases, and when you take off the bankruptcy cases, and when you take off two-thirds of them that are submissions, that reduces the number almost to a minimum.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all. If that were true, the courts would close every year with no dockets at all.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is what they ought to do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes, I know; the Senator from Tennessee comes all the time to his criticism that our Federal judges are not competent and are not honest, in the sense of giving a fair day's work, in holding their respective courts. If they do not, every one of them ought to be impeached, and we ought to have a series of judges who will give their time and their energies to the work which they are assigned to do.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think anybody would agree to that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why not?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator will agree with me, I think, that the Federal judges do not work like our State judges.

Mr. CUMMINS. Some of them do and some of them do not.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very few of them do. They take long vacations, and they sit short hours. Some of them meet at 10 o'clock and adjourn at 3 o'clock, and some of them take three or four months' vacation in the year; and there is the trouble, I think.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator says "some of them."

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not reflecting on them. I am not going to call the name of any judge, of course.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why does not the Senator from North Carolina, instead of imputing this wrongdoing to all the judges and thus staining in a way the entire Federal judiciary, point out the particular instances he has in mind? And if he has the evidence of it, he ought to present it to the Members of the House, and the judges affected ought to be impeached.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think not, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why not? Why should they not be impeached?

Mr. OVERMAN. I would not call any man's name, but I know that the other day they sent a man from my State to hold court in a certain State in this Union, and he came back, and I said: "What are you doing here?" He said, "Why, I came back here to spend a day in Washington, because they do not try anything on Saturday, and they sit short hours Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, and they do not sit at all on Saturday."

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. If the Senator thinks that these judges should sit six days in a week, or possibly seven—I do not know whether he believes that they ought to observe the Sabbath or not——

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not believe in anybody sitting on Sunday, of course.

Mr. CUMMINS. But if they should sit six days in a week, and 10 hours a day, and certain judges fail to do it, those judges ought to be removed, if that is to be the standard established throughout the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I am not making any standard; but I am agreeing with the Senator from Tennessee that if these judges would do their duty fully, they would try the cases on these dockets without any additional judges.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will answer that again by saying that if they do not do their duty fully they ought to be exposed and they ought to be impeached.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I do not think so.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not understand the logic of the Senator from North Carolina. Are we to permit the dockets of this country to be crowded as they now are crowded, tens of thousands of criminals arraigned or indicted who can not be tried, hundreds and thousands of civil cases that can not be tried—are we to permit that and make no effort to remedy it? There are but two possible remedies. One is to remove the judges who are guilty of a failure to do their full duty, and the other is to add additional judges. We must do one or the other.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I have not enough detailed information to discuss the condition of the dockets in the various sections of the country, but I do know something about conditions in Ohio. We have four district judges—one of them Judge Sater, who was appointed by President Roosevelt; another one Judge Killits, who was appointed by President Taft; and two, Judge Westenhaver and Judge Peck, who were appointed by President Wilson. Two of them are Republicans and two of them are Democrats, and I am glad to say that they are the highest type of judges that you can find anywhere, and they are working all the time, working to the breaking point; and in the northern district of Ohio, whether this bill passes or not, there must be another judge if we are going to take care of the dockets. I have just returned from Ohio. I have talked with members of the bar there who are conversant with the conditions, and it is little short of a crime to leave those dockets crowded as they are, and to have the long delays that are always incident to an overcrowded docket.

Whatever may be said of others, I could not sit silently here and have it said that these judges were not doing their duty. I think that Judge Sater, of Columbus, joined in a report which was made to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Judge Sater was one of the committee appointed by the Attorney General to consider this matter.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; and he is a man who works day and night, as do all of these other judges out there, whatever may be said of judges elsewhere.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I should like to join with the Senator from Ohio in a word about that. I met Judge Sater here. I formed a very high opinion of him. He not only lives in Ohio, but he lives in Cincinnati, one of the largest cities in the West.

Mr. POMERENE. No; he lives in Columbus.

Mr. SHIELDS. Well, he has Cincinnati in his district.

Mr. POMERENE. Cincinnati and Columbus are both in the district.

Mr. SHIELDS. They are two of your largest cities, then?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. He is an able man, and evidently a man of fine executive ability and industry, and his dockets are clean, and he goes out to other districts and helps others. There is no congestion in his district.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not say that there is a congestion in the southern district. The congestion is in the northern district; and if the Senator will look at the report which has been made by the Judiciary Committee, he will see what a tremendous docket they have.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have not examined that, but I have examined the report that the Attorney General sent out, and requested the district attorneys to give him information, and he asked the district attorney of the northern district of Ohio whether there was any congestion there, and he replied, "No."

Mr. POMERENE. When was that?

Mr. SHIELDS. Some time last summer.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was that the southern district?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I am speaking about the northern district.

Mr. OVERMAN. The southern district only has 71 cases on its docket. Judge Sater is a good man.

Mr. SHIELDS. Judge Sater keeps his docket clean.

Mr. POMERENE. Judge Sater is a good man, and so is Judge Peck. Judge Peck was sent down to the State of Tennessee, and held the court for nearly a month in Knoxville, and he was sent to Grand Rapids, and was there several weeks, and he was sent to New York.

Mr. OVERMAN. Maybe that is the reason why his docket is crowded.

Mr. POMERENE. His docket is not crowded.

Mr. OVERMAN. Whose docket?

Mr. POMERENE. Judge Peck's.

Mr. OVERMAN. What district is that?

Mr. POMERENE. It is the southern district. He sits most of the time in Cincinnati, and Judge Sater sits most of the time in Columbus, and between them they hold the court at Dayton and at Steubenville; but the crowding is in the northern district, where there has been a tremendous increase in population and in industrial development. I know from what I hear of Judge Killits—I dislike to say this—that he is under such a nervous strain that he ought to be away on a vacation, but he is staying on his job.

Mr. OVERMAN. The southern district has only 71 cases on the docket.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. While I am not familiar with the Federal judge situation throughout the United States, I was greatly surprised at some of the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] in what seemed to me rather general strictures on the Federal judiciary. We have two district judges in our State.

Judge Tuttle, who presides in the eastern district, is a comparatively young man. He took hold of that work with all of the ambition possible, and he has made a remarkable record in the disposition of cases. He is far behind in his work now, and yet, speaking about an 8-hour or 10-hour day's work, that man holds night sessions almost every night in the week, to the great discomfiture of the lawyers generally, who feel that he is holding them too closely to the job. The man can not stand it. It is not possible for any man to stand that amount of work, and yet he works from early in the morning until late at night on these cases and still is unable to catch up with the docket. He could do it if any man on earth could do it, but the work there is simply appalling, and it results in the defeat of justice, litigants can not get justice, and, at the same time, it can not result in the class of work which ought to be required of a judge. No judge can work 12 to 15 or 18 hours a day. He is working under strain. His hours should be limited, and he should have a vacation once in a while, and that in the interest of the litigants themselves.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I was on the Judiciary Committee and passed upon the question of Michigan, and I voted for a new judge for that State. That is why I want the House to pass that bill which we sent over to them, together with other bills.

Mr. POMERENE. In view of the statement which has just been made by the Senator from North Carolina with regard to the amount of litigation pending in Ohio, I want to say that I have before me the report of the Judiciary Committee, and I refer to pages 8 and 9, which contain a statement showing the business pending in the United States district courts for the year ending June 30, 1921, compiled from information furnished by the Attorney General. In the northern district of Ohio there are, of United States civil cases, 155; in the southern district there are 67.

Of criminal cases, including prohibition cases, in the northern district there are 579; in the southern district 71.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I said.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator said one.

Mr. OVERMAN. Read the next.

Mr. POMERENE. Admiralty cases, northern district, 21; southern district, 1. All other civil cases, northern district, 656; southern district, 309.

Total, northern district, 1,411 cases; southern district, 448 cases.

Bankruptcy cases, northern district, 722; southern district, 497.

Draft cases, northern district, 540; southern district, 6.

Prohibition cases, 317 in the northern district and 18 in the southern district.

The population of the northern district is 3,195,651, and the population of the southern district is 2,563,717.

So that indicates that in the northern district of Ohio there is a total of 1,411 United States civil, criminal, admiralty, and other civil cases, and in addition to that 722 bankruptcy cases, 540 draft cases, and 317 prohibition cases. Senators need not think there is no need for an additional judge in the northern district of Ohio. I know better.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will read the second column he will find it says, "Criminal, including prohibition cases." So that the number of prohibition cases he read was included in the criminal cases.

Mr. POMERENE. I am reading what the Committee on the Judiciary reported.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am asking the Senator to read the second column, which contains the word "including."

Mr. POMERENE. I know that; but they are separated, and this shows the number in the other column.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then you take one from the other to show the number of cases.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Florida, if the Senator from Ohio has concluded.

Mr. POMERENE. If there is any mistake about this——

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no mistake. It is simply a matter of adding them up.

Mr. POMERENE. I think so.

Mr. CUMMINS. Attached to the report of the committee is the showing which the Senator from Ohio has in his hand.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to add another word. When I began the practice of the law in my own county in the common pleas court we were two years behind the docket before we could get another local judge. We had two.

I know what it means to lawyers and litigants not to be able to get their cases tried, and to postpone the trial of cases for a year or two years is the equivalent of a denial of justice. That is universally recognized among all people who are familiar with courts and the result of litigation, and I would rather have a few too many judges than too small a number of judges.

There is nothing which creates so much unrest as to have either civil cases or criminal cases on the docket and not be able to try them. This class of work is growing all the while, and year after year the Congress of the United States is passing additional laws creating criminal liabilities, and that will continue to increase this work. We are simply going to destroy the health, if not the lives, of some of these judges unless they get some relief. That is the condition in the northern district of Ohio.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I rise not to combat what the Senator from Ohio has said, but just at this point to draw a little comparison.

In the northern district of Ohio they have two judges. The total number of cases pending in that district is 1,411, according to this report, outside of bankruptcy and draft cases. They have two judges, and the total number of cases pending and undisposed of is 1,411.

In the southern district of Florida there is one judge, and the total number of cases pending and undisposed of is 1,633. Yet the committee denies to Florida an additional judge and proposes to give one to the northern district of Ohio. I have no objection to that district having an additional judge; I think they ought to give the northern district of Ohio that judge; but that is the situation, there are 1,411 cases to be disposed of by two judges in the northern district of Ohio, and in the southern district of Florida there are 1,633 cases to be disposed of by one judge, and the committee says we are not entitled to an additional judge.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, with the situation such as the Senator from Florida describes, I am in sympathy with his desire to have an additional judge there, and I will help to get one, because as a lawyer I know what that means to the people of Florida, as I know what it means to the people of Ohio to have an overcrowded docket and not be able to try the cases.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am much obliged to the Senator. It does mean a denial of justice. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has just stepped out, but I rose while he was in the Chamber to call attention to a comparison between Michigan and Florida. In the eastern district of Michigan the total number of pending cases, according to the statement furnished by the committee, is 754. They give the eastern district of Michigan an additional judge. The total number of cases on the docket and undisposed of is, I repeat, 754. In one district in Florida the total number of cases pending is 1,633, and they refuse to give Florida an additional judge.

In the western district of Michigan the cases pending amount to 131, and the question naturally arises why they can not take the judge from the western district and send him over to the eastern district when he is needed, and take care of the situation in that State with two judges.

The pending business in that State, with two judges, does not equal the pending business in one district in Florida; yet the committee refuses to give that district an additional judge.

Mr. OVERMAN. In the district where I live we have over 1,000 cases pending, and I did not ask for an additional judge because I think the judge can do the work.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend at this moment to take up the merits of the amendment which the Senator from Florida undoubtedly intends to propose. I do not think I ought to do that just now, while I am replying to the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator from Florida knows, and a great many Senators know, the reasons which prompted the committee in its action with regard to the southern district of Florida. But I was discussing the suggestion, or intimation, or charge—possibly it rises to the dignity of a charge—that the Federal judges generally throughout the United States were lazy, indifferent to their obligations, and were failing to do the work which men of ordinary competence and diligence should do.

Whenever you pursue that inquiry to a particular judge, or into a particular district, you will discover that some other judge is the guilty person or it is in the next district that the objectionable condition prevails. I venture to say that nineteen-twentieths of the Federal judges of the United States do all the work that is within the power of men to do consistent with their health and with the dignity and the importance of the cases which are submitted to them for disposition.

I think the Senate will not accept, and it should not accept, the statistics which have been given to us by the Senator from Tennessee as evidence of the infidelity of the Federal judges.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he is not referring to the statistics given by the Attorney General which were read here by the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. SHIELDS. They are not my statistics; they are those of the chief of the Department of Justice.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I have said before, I think the Senator from Tennessee has correctly stated the statistics which he presented. I have no quarrel with them, but I do insist that they fail to establish the conclusion which the Senator from Tennessee draws from them. They do not prove that the district judges of this country are idle or negligent or reckless men. Every Senator here knows his own district judges. Every Senator here knows his own circuit judges, those within his locality, and before we get through with it, if there is to be any serious attention given to the charge of the Senator from Tennessee, I want the Senators here to rise and say whether in their opinion their district judges and their circuit judges are violating their obligations from day to day and failing to render to the people of the country the service which they were appointed to render.

I say now that you will find very few Senators willing to make that sort of a charge against the men who have been appointed to administer the laws of the United States and appointed to do justice between the citizens of different States. It can not be true—in the very nature of things it can not be true—unless we impute the grossest incompetence or the grossest indifference to the Presidents of the United States, the Presidents who have appointed these men, and we must survey the acts of a great many Presidents when we come to examine the authority under which all the judges of the United States are now performing their duties.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator if he does not believe that the figures furnished by the Senator from Tennessee indisputably establish the fact that there is a temporary congestion, which will, of course, pass away, and, secondly, that the figures which have been submitted to us are not fair in the sense that they do not reveal exactly the situation; for instance, a large number of draft cases which will not be tried, a large number of small misdemeanor cases which, when brought to the attention of the court, will be disposed of very quickly by nolle pros or pleas of guilty or otherwise, and a large number of cases which are hangovers upon the docket for many years and never will be tried, so that by a diligent effort to clear the dockets in most of these districts the dockets could be brought down current within a very short time?

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree with everything the Senator from Utah says except his conclusions.

Mr. KING. If the facts are right, the conclusions are right.

Mr. CUMMINS. If it were not that a large number of these cases were bankruptcy cases and a large number of them draft cases, and if it were not for the fact that a great many criminal cases do not involve jury trial, we would need 150 judges instead of 18 or 19.

The Senator from Utah was not here when I indicated what I had been informed was the state of the criminal docket in the northern district of Illinois. There are cases there now clamoring for trial, both sides ready for trial—some 25 cases, which alone would require the time of a judge for more than two and one-half years to dispose of them, without giving any attention whatever to the great volume of other criminal cases that may be pending and without touching in any way the civil dockets.

Mr. President, I rose only to repel the suggestion of inefficiency, incompetency, and infidelity on the part of the Federal judges. I have had as much to do with Federal judges as most Senators. I practiced law and was in the courthouse nearly all the time for 25 years. I have tried cases before a great many Federal judges. I never knew a Federal judge who comes within the classification assigned to nearly all of them by the Senator from Tennessee. The present Federal district judge in my State—not referring to the one just appointed, but the one who sits in the southern district of Iowa—is a Democrat, appointed by President Wilson, and a more faithful, hard-working, persistent judge than he I do not know. He has already broken his health. Although he was a comparatively young and a very vigorous man, he has already impaired his health in attempting to do more work than one man can do.

Mr. SHIELDS. Does the Senator refer to the southern or the northern district of Iowa?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am speaking now of the southern district of Iowa.

Many Senators know him, because he served in the House of Representatives for quite a period, and he has been prominent in other walks of life. I can not stand here and hear a man who works as hard as he does, and as every district judge with whom I am acquainted does, assailed even in the parliamentary way employed by the Senator from Tennessee. Here and there will be found a man who does not do all the work that he could do. Here and there will be found a community in which lawyers will not, according to their custom, sit in trial for 8 or 10 hours and wherein a judge must necessarily yield to the customs long established in those communities. But I venture the assertion that the United States is not served by any body of men more faithfully and earnestly and conscientiously than by its judges, from the Supreme Court of the United States to the district judges of the United States.

We need some additional force. Even if the cause is but temporary, we must dispose of these cases. The natural growth and development of the country will lead to more and more litigation falling within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts if the laws governing their jurisdiction remain unchanged.

I do not intend, Mr. President, to make any further general observations, and I now submit the bill, so far as this discussion is concerned.

Mr. FLETCHER obtained the floor.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida allow me to make an observation?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator from Iowa has criticized the statistics which I have produced from the report made last December by the Attorney General of the United States under his official oath, printed and on record here all this time, and yet no one has appeared to contradict them. They are, of course, not made upon my personal knowledge. It is those statistics that I have presented here, and not any personal information. Nor have I indulged in any personal abuse or criticism of any judge in the United States, as might be inferred from what the Senator has said, whether he so intended it or not.

Mr. CUMMINS. I stated distinctly that the statistics and tables presented by the Senator from Tennessee are, in so far as I know, accurate, but I dissent entirely from the conclusions which the Senator from Tennessee draws from those tables.

Mr. SHIELDS. In other words, the Senator admits the fact, he admits there here are 120 judges who are, resolving every doubt in their favor, trying not over 200 cases a year, probably about 100 cases apiece, and yet he says that is no evidence and no deduction can be drawn from that that they are not discharging their duties, that they are not industrious and efficient.

These statistics do not give any particular districts, and I am aware that there are some districts—I do not think over half a dozen in the United States—where some additional help ought to be given; but the fact that the judge of a court of record, with all the facilities for attending to business that they have in the United States district court, does not try over 100 or 150 average cases during a year, such as are heard in the courts of the United States, is, to my mind, conclusive that, as a whole, the judges are not efficient and industrious.

I think that if the Senator wants to refute the necessary inference from these facts he ought to produce some facts as to the nature of the litigation, showing it took a longer time, or something to show that the Attorney General's report is untrue and unreliable. A little evidence of that kind would be more satisfactory and convincing than several hours of general eulogy of judges.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 22, on page 10, insert after the word "and," the first word in the line, the words "for the southern district of Florida, one," so that it will read: "For the district of Arizona one, and for the southern district of Florida one, and for the northern district of Georgia one."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I was out of the Senate when the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] made reference to the work of the United States district judges. I am sure he was not referring to the two district judges in Georgia—Judge Beverly B. Evans and Judge Samuel H. Sibley—when he stated that the Federal judges who will be given assistance under this bill are not overworked. I personally know, and my colleague will bear me out in this statement—he is a lawyer and I am not—that there are no judges in the United States, whether in the State or the United States courts, who are worked harder than the two judges in Georgia. I believe the work they are doing will shorten the lives of both of these men unless some relief is given them.

Since their appointment to these positions they have held court practically every day except Sundays and Christmas. They are not only lawyers of unusual ability and make splendid judges but they are conscientious men of the highest character and have the respect and confidence of all the people of our State. The record furnished by the Attorney General, which is in the report of the Judiciary Committee, shows that the amount of business transacted and the number of cases to be disposed of is greater in Georgia than any other State except one. Some years ago Congress passed a bill providing for an additional judge, and the late Judge Wallace Lambden, a splendid man and able lawyer, was appointed to this position and held it until his death.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I did not make any reference to Georgia especially. It is very easy, and it has been indulged in here a great deal, to get up and talk about industrious judges and hard-worked judges, but there is sworn evidence as to what these judges are doing, how many cases are on their dockets, and how many they try in the course of a year. That is what Senators ought to be governed by and not by any general conversation coming second hand as to what the judges are doing.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to proceed, but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator from Florida expect a vote on his amendment this evening?

Mr. FLETCHER. I hardly suppose we will reach a vote, but I should like to submit some observations on the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. If he does I shall have to suggest the absence of a quorum. It seems to me we ought to take up the bill in its order after this general debate.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill is up in its order. The committee has reported a substitute and that is subject to amendment.

Mr. NELSON. We ought to take up the bill section by section.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have some remarks to make on the bill to-morrow. I do not see why any Senator should not offer an amendment to the bill and then let us take up the whole matter and discuss it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is in order to offer an amendment now to be taken up at the proper time.

Mr. NELSON. Very well. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not going to ask for a vote on the amendment this afternoon. I merely wish to discuss it. I want to give reasons for it. I do not think we will get time to vote on it. I want to present arguments in favor of my amendment. I am not going to ask for a vote to-day. I want a yea-and-nay vote when the amendment to the amendment is voted on. I do not want to have it passed upon without a yea-and-nay vote, but I do not expect to get a vote this afternoon.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to make a statement to the Senate as to what actuated the committee in leaving out Florida, and to explain the situation from end to end about that case.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do that.

Mr. NELSON. But I do not like to discuss it now without a quorum.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let us have a quorum.

Mr. FLETCHER. But I have the floor, and I am proposing to discuss the amendment which I have offered. I do not see why I can not do so. The Senator from Minnesota will have ample time to reply after I have finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has the floor. He has not yielded for any purpose except to be interrogated.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection if the Senator wants a quorum. Does the Senator want to call a quorum?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we had better have a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield for that purpose?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Oddie	Spencer
Ball	Heflin	Overman	Stanley
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sterling
Capper	Kendrick	Pepper	Sutherland
Cummins	Keyes	Phipps	Swanson
Dial	King	Poindexter	Trammell
Edge	McKinley	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	McNary	Rawson	Warren
Fletcher	Moses	Reed	Watson, Ga.
Gooding	Nelson	Sheppard
Hale	New	Shields

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce that the following Senators are detained from the Senate in attendance upon the Committee on Finance:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Walsh, Mont. Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. STANFIELD] on public business.

Mr. NICHOLSON, Mr. HARRELD, Mr. CARAWAY, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the order to the Sergeant at Arms, made upon the motion of the Senator from Iowa, be vacated.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business this evening it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator from Iowa desire to go on further this evening? It is nearly 5 o'clock.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FLETCHER. Before the question is put on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, let me say that I understand we have agreed by unanimous consent to take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow when we conclude our business to-day, at which time my amendment will be pending, and I will be entitled to proceed on that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's amendment to the amendment of the committee will be the pending question.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CUMMINS. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) pursuant to the order heretofore made, the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 4, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 3, 1922.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Edgar C. Snyder, of the District of Columbia, to be United States marshal, District of Columbia, vice Maurice Splain, whose term will expire April 6, 1922.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

VETERINARY CORPS.

To be lieutenant colonel.

Maj. John Alexander McKinnon, Veterinary Corps, from March 26, 1922.

CHAPLAIN.

Chaplain Julian Emmet Yates to be chaplain, with the rank of lieutenant colonel, from March 27, 1922.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Capt. Sterner St. Paul Meek, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

SIGNAL CORPS.

First Lieut. Asa Vern Wilder, Coast Artillery Corps, with rank from August 4, 1921.

INFANTRY.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 3, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art above all things—all tumults, all conflicts, all life, and supreme from everlasting to everlasting—hear us while we pray. We would not bring to Thee our complaints, but we would offer Thee something of our thanksgiving, something of our faith, something of our aspiration, and may they be acceptable to Thee. Fill us with a sense of our blessings and with the profoundest reverence for Him who bestows them. Sustain and bless our country, and O may Thy Spirit rest upon the troubled waters of human life. Gladden and strengthen all of us with new hope and new zeal. May our devotion and service to the public be without flaw or hesitation and always more than is necessary. In the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

THE HOSPITAL BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to make a statement in relation to a response to a parliamentary inquiry that he made on Friday last. The House will remember that after some slight discussion the Chair differed in some measure from some of the precedents and announced that inasmuch as the motion to strike out a section had passed in committee and been voted down in the House, that then the section stood as it had been amended in committee and not in its original form. The Chair in making that statement thought, and still thinks, that he was following the dictates of equity and reason in that particular case, and he was also advised that there was a ruling by Speaker Clark in the same line. The Chair has not been able to discover any such ruling by Speaker Clark, although on further investigation it may be found. There is an old legal maxim that "hard cases make bad law," and the Chair is not at all certain that his position Friday would be the wise one as a general precedent, although it seemed proper in the particular case. He therefore wishes to file a caveat and say that in the future that ruling will not be used or considered as a precedent to bind the present occupant of the chair; but if the question comes up again the Chair will carefully investigate and make a deliberate decision. Of course, we all recognize that it is extremely important that precedents should be followed. There may be occasions when it will be wise for the House to overrule old precedents and establish a new one. But it is important that the House should always know what the established law is and consequently know what to expect. The doctrine of stare decisis should be followed whenever possible, and therefore the Chair thinks it fair to the House to state that his action in the future will not be influenced by his statement of Friday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In view of the statement just made by the Chair as to his ruling on Friday, as the Chair will recall by the terms of the ruling itself in effect, certain amendments that had been adopted to the section went into the measure. No separate vote was had upon them; it was the effect of the ruling. I assume, in view of the statement of the Chair, that if the question comes up again he would treat it de novo in effect, that that will not affect the engrossment of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The Chair does not change the ruling for that purpose.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JAMES.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that May 7, 1922, may be set aside for memorial exercises on the life, character, and services of the late ROBER A. JAMES, Representative of the fifth district of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that Sunday, May 7, 1922, may be set aside for memorial exercises on the late Representative JAMES, of the Commonwealth of Virginia. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend some remarks I made on the hospital bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9633) to extend the provisions of section 2305, Revised Statutes, and of the act of September 29, 1919, to those discharged from the military or naval service of the United States and subsequently awarded compensation or treated for wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9633) to extend the provisions of section 2305, Revised Statutes, and of the act of September 29, 1919, to those discharged from the military or naval service of the United States and subsequently awarded compensation or treated for wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
JOHN E. RAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
T. J. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that the ex-service men regularly discharged from the Army and afterwards awarded compensation, or treated for wounds received or disabilities incurred in line of duty, may have the privilege of the provisions of section 2305 of the Revised Statutes as a credit in their residence on the homestead.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

SEQUOIA NATIONAL PARK, CALIF.

The first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7452) to add certain lands to the Sequoia National Park, Calif., and to change the name of said park to Roosevelt-Sequoia National Park.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is of so important a character that I think it should receive more consideration than it can on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I think it does not belong on that calendar and therefore, with personal regret, I object.

Mr. BARBOUR. Does the gentleman object to its consideration?

Mr. OSBORNE. I object to the consideration of the bill, and I think it should be stricken from this calendar.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman objects to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California object to its being passed without prejudice?

Mr. OSBORNE. I object to its being passed over without prejudice. I think it ought to be stricken from the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8675) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept a certain tract of land donated as a site for an administration building for the Rocky Mountain National Park.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when this matter was brought up before the gentleman from Illinois raised a question about certain provisions of the bill. Has the gentleman from Colorado any further information to give the House?

Mr. VAILE. Yes; I can give the House a little further information on that. At that time, as I recall the colloquy here on the floor, the gentleman from Illinois suggested that possibly the building could not be completed in the time limited by this grant, which it was contemplated the Government should accept, that limitation being to the effect that the building should be completed on or before December 1, 1923. I was confident at that time, and still am confident, that my colleague, Mr. TIMBERLAKE, the author of this bill, can secure from the donors, who are the Womens' Club, of Estes Park, Colo., an extension of time, if such extension is necessary. We have not been able to secure a definite statement to that effect as yet, because they have not had their annual meeting and will not have for some days to come. But I state this. I have received a letter from Director Mather, of the National Park Service, in which he says:

> As Congress apparently is favorable to making funds for construction work in the parks immediately available, as appears to be the case from the present Interior Department bill now in conference and covering the fiscal year 1923, we could, if the item of appropriation is granted for such an administration building, begin construction quite early in the year and have it completed during the summer months, before the time limitation set in the deed; in fact, we could begin construction any time after July 1 and still complete the small administration building in time. Should the appropriation not be granted or some other conditions now unforeseen prevent construction, the United States would not be obligated in any way by the acceptance of the tendered gift at this time.

I believe that disposes of the inquiry.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why should the Government accept any grant of land with a string attached to it, as is proposed in this matter to be granted by this woman's club?

Mr. VAILE. One reason is that if we do not accept this land the Government will likely have to pay a very great deal more for other land by purchase.

Mr. STAFFORD. This land is outside of but contiguous to the land in the national park?

Mr. VAILE. It is in the village of Estes Park, where the administration of the park is now carried on in rented quarters. Mr. Mather calls attention, as I did the other day on the floor, to the fact that we have been paying $600 a year rental for quarters already cramped and inadequate. He further states:

> The owner of this building states that he can get a much higher rent for this building for commercial purposes than the $50 per month that we are paying, and the present lease contains a clause to the effect that "no such lease shall extend beyond May 31, 1923." It is my purpose to submit to the department for presentation to Congress, if the above-mentioned bill passes, an item of $5,000 to $6,000 for the construction of a new administration building urgently needed on this donated site.

Unless we accept this gift we will either have to rent at a much higher figure some other quarters, or erect a building on ground less favorably situated, at an expense of some $10,000 to $20,000. If the only question is refusing accepting the gift for fear we would not be able to complete the building in the time in which Mr. Mather says we can, and, as an alternative, having no administration building or having the administration carried on in rented quarters or in a building to be later constructed by the Government on more expensive land, it seems to me there is no doubt about what we ought to do.

Mr. WALSH. They could put up a building on Government-owned land.

Mr. VAILE. But it would be inconvenient for administration purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Why?

Mr. VAILE. Because all of the business of the park is done in the village of Estes Park. If you want to go into the hills somewhere, clear outside of the place where business is carried on, of course we can do it.

Mr. WALSH. But the Government builds lots of buildings on its own land far remote from its activities, as far as villages or settlements go.

Mr. VAILE. I do not think that should be a precedent for continuing to do it, when we can put a building in a conveniently located place.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, there is some appeal in that argument, but it is rather unusual for people to offer to give the Government something and then say, "Of course, if we give this to you, you have got to do something within a certain time."

Mr. VAILE. I do not think it is particularly unreasonable.

Mr. WALSH. I say unusual, not unreasonable.

Mr. VAILE. Perhaps it is an unusual thing. I do not know enough of the history of such transactions to know whether it is or not, but here is a piece of land that these ladies could sell at a very respectable figure if they were not willing to donate it to us. If we are to accept it and put a building upon it, we can have it, but they say they do not want it tied up permanently, and why should we ask them to do that?

Mr. WALSH. We are not asking them to do anything. They are asking us to do something.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any condition attached as to the character of the building that these grantors impose on the Government, whether it should be architectually in consonance with the surroundings?

Mr. VAILE. I think they are willing to leave that to the judgment of the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. To the munificence of the department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a certain tract of land in the town of Estes Park, Colo., described as lot 5, Buena Vista Terrace, in the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, section 25, township 5 north, range 73 west of the sixth principal meridian, Larimer County, Colo., donated by the Estes Park Woman's Club as a site for an administration building for the Rocky Mountain National Park.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VAILE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONSIGNMENT OF CERTAIN FEMALE PRISONERS IN STATE REFORMATORIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1010) to amend sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I assume that the gentleman from Minnesota has some amendments that he wishes to offer to make the bill intelligible.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I intend to offer certain amendments, and I ask that they may be reported now for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota offers amendments which will be reported for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 17, strike out "house of refuge" and insert in lieu thereof "State reformatory."

Add at the end of line 18, page 2, the following: "Provided, That no person shall be confined in any place not subject to public supervision."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman intend by the suggested amendment to strike out houses of refuge?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes. That is, it is stricken out all through the bill except at that point.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, it is not stricken out so far as the amendment to section 5549 is concerned.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; that will be left as it is.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The Senate struck it out so far as it applied to women.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in section 5549 as reported as to houses of refuge——

Mr. STAFFORD. From my reading of the bill some weeks ago I came to the conclusion it was necessary to include houses of refuge and State reformatories so as to make it in consonance with the amendatory section.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota and some gentlemen interested in the bill that they amend section 5550 and make it State reformatory or house of refuge. The present law provides confinement in a house of refuge, but, as I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, as offered it would strike out altogether any house of refuge and provide for a confiement in a State reformatory.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, in Wisconsin we have—and I assume that is the status in other States—State reformatories under the control of the State government. We also have houses of refuge under the supervision of private institutions. Under the original law these minors were to be sent to these houses of refuge under private control. Now, it is proposed to divert the original purpose of the law so far as minors are concerned, and take away that privilege entirely of having them confined in houses of refuge. There is a difference so far as Wisconsin is concerned between a State reformatory and a house of refuge.

Mr. MANN. I think myself it would be wiser to amend the bill by inserting the language on page 2, lines 11 and 12, that provide State reformatories and say "or house of refuge."

Mr. STAFFORD. That is true.

Mr. MANN. And also to insert in line 17, after the word "in," the words "and State reformatory, or," so it would leave it to the court to determine whether the confinement should be in a house of refuge or a State reformatory, which, I think, will accord with the amendment offered by the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois and also to the gentleman from Minnesota that that was the amendment I had considered advisable in considering these two sections, for you are not in anywise restricting existing law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My understanding was the Senate did not intend that and carried the phrase "State reformatories" instead of "houses of refuge."

Mr. MANN. The present law provides the confinement of minor children in a house of refuge. The purpose of this bill was to substitute that by providing for the confinement of women not in a penitentiary or a common jail but also to have them confined as children are in special institutions. But whereas the present law provides for a house of refuge this bill as originally applied attempted to provide for State reformatories.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; that was the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is the one passed in the Senate; I do not know how it was introduced. Now, I think it would be wiser to leave it to the court to determine whether in a particular case the confinement should be in a house of refuge. It might be where they want to send a child or a woman to a State reformatory in the discretion of the court.

Mr. TILSON. Would it not be possible to employ language that would provide either a reformatory or a house of refuge, or a house of correction, or any of those institutions, whatever the name might be?

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly possible under the construction now, because the house of refuge covers nearly all of these things.

Mr. TILSON. The word "reformatory" would be perhaps broad enough to include those named here.

Mr. MANN. Here is the fact about it. It is sometimes desired by the people interested in these children or women to have them confined in an institution which is under private or semiprivate control. A State reformatory, of course, never is. Now the gentleman is offering an amendment which I think is proper, but in any case, whatever the institution is, it shall be subject to public inspection. If you put in "house of refuge" or "State reformatory" you leave it to the court to determine, where in some cases it may be desirable to send a number to some private institution, and some they may desire to send to a State reformatory.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to the fact that this Senate bill amends existing section 5549 by adding a provision, as the gentleman well knows, for confinement of these older persons in State reformatories, but does not repeal in any way the existing section 5549, which provides for the confinement of these juvenile offenders in a house of refuge?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Section 5550 is to be enacted in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not get my criticism. You are not reenacting 5549 in this Senate bill. You are adding thereto a new provision. Under existing section 5549, juvenile offenders under 16 years of age are authorized to be confined in houses of refuge. By your proposed amendment you intend to eliminate entirely the confinement of those juvenile offenders and make no provision whatever for their confinement.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They would be confined in State reformatories.

Mr. STAFFORD. There would not be any provision under this bill for their confinement. By providing for the confinement of those juvenile offenders you would have to amend existing section 5549 by substituting State reformatories for houses of refuge.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman is mistaken. There is another provision of the statute that will cover that so far as that is concerned, and there would be a provision for incarcerating them in the State reformatories.

Mr. STAFFORD. Unless the gentleman sees his way clear to accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I will be constrained to object, because there will be no adequate provision for the confinement of offenders under 16 years of age.

Mr. BRAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BRAND. I think the gentleman misconstrues the section. As it passed the Senate, section 5549 was amended in two particulars. In the first place, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] prepared and introduced an amendment which would add to the class of juvenile offenders provided for in the present law female offenders against the laws of the United States who have been convicted of lewdness and prostitution. This was not in the original section, and the object of the amendment—and that is the beginning of this legislation—was to include that class of offenders against the statutes of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no objection to that.

Mr. BRAND. The second point I wish to call your attention to is that the Senate bill as amended by Senator HARRIS, of Georgia, strikes out the words "house of refuge" and inserts in lieu thereof the words "State reformatory."

Mr. STAFFORD. That is where the gentleman is in error. It is not changed so far as section 5549 is concerned.

Mr. BRAND. That was the purpose of the amendment. The first part of section 5550 was so amended, but by a mere mistake the words "house of refuge" were not stricken from line 17 in said section.
